This Act exempts Sunday and ragged schools from liability to be rated. A Sunday school is by sect. 2 defined to be "any school used for giving religious education gratuitously to children and young persons on Sunday, and on week days for the holding of classes and meetings in furtherance of the same object, and without pecuniary profit being derived therefrom."

A "ragged school" is defined as "any school used for the gratuitous education of children and young persons of the poorest classes, and for the holding of classes and meetings in furtherance of the same object, and without any pecuniary benefit being derived therefrom, except to the teacher or teachers employed." It is to be cited as the "Sunday and Ragged Schools Exemption from Rating Act 1869."

X.—POOR-RATE ASSESSORS AND COLLECTORS.

This is the Act that practically reinstates the compound householder.

Sect. 1 enacts that occupiers of tenements let for a term not exceeding three months may deduct the poor-rate assessed on them from the rent due, or accruing due.

No such occupier is to be compelled to pay to the overseers at one time, or within four weeks, more than a quarter's rate. This was to meet the case of weekly or monthly tenants, who might be called upon for a year's rate during the short term of their occupation.

Sect. 3 restores the convenient practice of compounding. It enacts that for tenements the rateable value of which does not exceed 20*l.* in the metropolis, 13*l.* in Liverpool, 10*l.* in Manchester or Birmingham, or 8*l.* elsewhere, the owner may compound in writing with the overseers to pay the rate for not less than one year from the date of the agreement, whether the tenement is occupied or not, and to be allowed a commission not exceeding 25 per cent. on the amount of such rates.

Vestries may order that such owners shall be rated to the poor-rate in respect of such tenements instead of the occupiers, and thereupon the overseers are—

First. To rate such owners instead of such occupiers, and allow a deduction of 15 per cent. from the rate.

Secondly. If the owner give notice in writing that he is willing to be rated for any term not less than one year in respect of such tenements, whether occupied or not, he shall be rated accordingly, and allowed a further deduction not exceeding 15 per cent.

Thirdly. The vestry may rescind such resolution after six months.

It is provided that this clause is not to extend to any hereditament of which a dwelling-house does not form a part.

Owners not paying the rate before the 5th June are to forfeit their commission: (s. 5.)

The statute 13 & 14 Vict. c. 99 (Small Tenements Act) is repealed.

Any payment of rate by the owner is to be deemed a payment of the full rate by the occupier for the purpose of the franchise: (s. 7.)

Where owners ought to pay the rates, the occupiers paying them may deduct the amount from the rent: (s. 8.)

Owners agreeing to pay the rates are to give to the overseers from time to time, when required, a written list of the names of the actual occupiers under a penalty for refusal, neglect, or wilful omission or misstatement, of 2*l.*: (s. 9.)

Sect. 28 of the Representation of the People Act 1867, with respect to notice to be given of rates in arrear, shall apply to occupiers of such tenements, although the owners shall have become liable to pay the rates.

Such rates may be recovered from the owner in the same manner as from the occupier.

But the goods of the occupier are to be liable to be distrained for rates becoming due during the time of his occupation if they remain unpaid by the owner, subject to these provisions:

1. That the rate has been demanded by the overseers from the occupier, and he has failed to pay within fourteen days.

2. That no greater sum shall be levied than is actually due from the occupier for rent.

3. That the occupier may deduct the amount of rate so levied and costs paid from the rent due or accruing due to the owner.

An owner may appeal against the rate.

The title of a poor rate for the future is to set forth the period for which it is made: (s. 14.)

Where a rate is made for more than three months, the overseers may declare that it shall be paid by instalments, and thereupon each instalment only shall be enforceable when it falls due: (s. 15.)

If an occupier assessed to a rate shall cease to occupy before the rate has been wholly discharged, or if a tenement, unoccupied when the rate is made, becomes occupied during the currency of the rate, the overseers are to enter in the rate book the name of the person succeeding or coming into occupation, so far as the same shall be known to them, and such occupier is thenceforth to be deemed to have been actually rated from the date so entered, and shall be liable to pay his proportionate parts of the rate for the time of his actual occupation, with the like remedy by way of appeal, &c., as if rated when the rate was made. An outgoing occupier is in like manner to be liable only for his proportionate part of the current rate: (s. 16.)

A poor-rate is to be deemed to be made on the day when it is allowed by the justices: (s. 17.)

The production of the rate book so allowed shall, if the rate is made in the form prescribed by law, be prima facie evidence of the due making and publication of the rate: (s. 18.)

In making out the rate the overseers are to insert the names of all occupiers of rated property, and for negligently, or wilfully, or without reasonable cause, omitting the name of any occupier, they are to be subject to a penalty not exceeding 2*l.*; but no such omission is to invalidate the occupiers' claim to vote: (s. 19.)

This important Act comes into operation on the 29th Sept. next.

It is to be cited as "The Poor Rate Assessment and Collection Act 1869."

1. Jurisdiction of Admiralty Court in collision extended by 7th section.—In a case occurring between foreign and British vessels, within three miles of the coast, and attended by injury to life or limb, Lord Campbell's Act is applicable. Citation in rem issued against a ship on behalf of the representatives of men who had lost their lives through collision: (The Borodino, A. C., Nov. 12, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 155; 5 L. T. Rep. N. S. 297.)

2. Damage to cargo—Set-off against freight—Interrogatories—Sects. 7 & 17 of Act.—Interrogatories were allowed to be put to the plaintiff under sect. 17 of the Act. The Admiralty Court in this country has not authority to take general cognisance of claims of set-off. Cases as to seamen's wages stand on a peculiar foundation. It was alleged that a sum had been deducted by merchant off freight for damage and leakage, but this was not allowed to be pleaded as a set-off: (The Araminta; The Don Francisco, A. C., Dec. 3, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 169; 5 L. T. Rep. N. S. 460; 31 L. J. 14.)

3. Pilot's liability for damage—7th & 37th sections of Act—Merchant Shipping Act, s. 373.—An application under the 7th section of the Act made to the court, to call upon a pilot to make good damage to the extent of 150*l.* was refused, the pilot's liability being limited to 100*l.* by the 373rd section of the Merchant Shipping Act: (The Urania, A. C., Dec. 3, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 156.)

4. Retrospective operation of the Act—Security in cross-action.—Subject to future decisions the Act is retrospective. Security to answer judgment in cross-action in personam, instituted by shipowner in this country, was decreed where the plaintiff in the first action had obtained bail to answer judgment in his case: (The Cameo, A. C., Feb. 11, 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 191.)

5. Arrest of ship for damage to goods—Jurisdiction—Construction of sect. 6—Retrospective operation of the Act.—Before this Act came into operation a shipowner contracted to carry goods from New Orleans to Liverpool. The vessel in which they were shipped caught fire; the goods not damaged were transhipped and delivered in Liverpool after the Act came into operation. The court held that the 6th section of the Act would have been retrospective in any case, but that here the breach of contract occurred after the Act came into operation by the non-delivery of the goods at Liverpool. "The ship" in the section means the ship which lastly carries the goods into the United Kingdom; and a ship is not liable for arrest for damage to goods by negligence arising before transshipment into another vessel: (The Ironsides, A. C., Feb. 26 and March 4, 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 200; 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 59; 31 L. J. 129.)

6. Improper stowage—Damage to goods—Shipowner's liability—Construction of sect. 6 of the Act.—The object of this section was to enable British merchants, suffering a short delivery of goods brought to this country in a foreign ship, or their delivery in a damaged state, to have recourse to the arrest of the ship where, from the absence of the defendant in foreign parts, the common law tribunals could not afford effectual redress. A shipowner is responsible for damage to goods through bad stowage, unless the charter-party demises the ship so as to divest the owner of possession, and render the charterer owner of the ship pro hac vice. A shipper of goods is justified in supposing that the master is the agent of the shipowner alone, where the charter-party does not amount to such a demise of ship. Question as to rights of action by assignees and jurisdiction over their claims. Practice of court to refer amount of damage to registrar and merchants. Case of Schuster v. McKellar, 7 E. & B. 704, distinguished: (The St. Cloud, A. C., July 26, Nov. 28, Jan. 13, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 309; 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 55.)

7. Necessaries—Sect. 5—Rights of claimants.—Claimants in the Admiralty Court in respect of necessities have the same rights of suit as those possessed of maritime lien. The right to sue for necessities supplied to foreign ships under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, s. 6, is not affected by the Admiralty Court Act, s. 5, nor by the subsequent sale of the ship to a British purchaser. Semble, the words "owner or part owner domiciled in England or Wales," in this section (5), refer to ships not foreign owned at the time when the necessities were furnished: (The Ella A. Clark, otherwise The Golden Age, A. C. Feb. 17 and 24, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 325; 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 119.)

8. Non-delivery of part of cargo—Jurisdiction—Sect. 6.—The Admiralty Court has jurisdiction under sect. 6 of the Act in a claim for non-delivery of part of cargo shipped on board a vessel, the owner of which is not domiciled in this country, if that vessel reaches an English port and the goods have not been transhipped: (The Danzig, A. C. July 14, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 392; 32 L. J. 164, Adm.; 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 236.)

AFFREIGHTMENT.

1. Contract to ship—Non-shipment—Construction.—An agent of the defendants' undertook, by letter, to ship by the Warrior Queen, guaranteeing that she sails not later than the "first week in July or forfeit 2s. 6d. per ton, 300 or 400 packages" of goods. It was held that this meant to forfeit 2s. 6d. not only if the vessel did not sail within the time specified, but also if the stipulated number of packages were not shipped, or at all events that the clause referred to the non-shipment of packages. The clause considered exceedingly ambiguous, and semble, such a contract might be void for uncertainty: (Heugh v. Escombe, C. E. Jan. 16 and 17, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 79.)

(See also Charter-party, Breach of.)

2. Repudiation of agreement—Breach of contract in not receiving goods on board a ship.—A contract was entered into by an agent to carry certain goods. Before the time for performing the contract arrived, the principal renounced the agreement, but subsequently, and before the day named in the contract, offered to perform it, which the other party declined; and it was held that the latter, not being in fault, might at his option treat the renunciation as a breach of contract. The law is well established that, where a contract has been entered into for acts to be performed on a given day, and where the party who is bound by that contract declares that it is as between him and the other contracting party broken, and that he insists upon it that there is a breach of that contract, the other party has the option to accept that as a breach, and to take that contract to be broken: (The Danube and Black Sea Railway and Kustendjie Harbour Company v. Xenos, C. B. Nov. 21, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 172.)

AGENCY COMMISSION.

Charges, fairness of—Custom.—The decision of the registrar and merchants as to reasonableness of agency commission on value of ship and cargo does not altogether depend upon the custom of the place where a bottomry bond was given, but the custom of such a charge being made is to be considered in ascertaining if the charge is fair. The court is not bound by the custom of any place: (The Laurel, A. C. Nov. 3 and 10, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 405.)

ALLOTMENT OF SALVAGE.

1. Procedure—No question for a jury.—The allotment of salvage among the crew of a ship rendering assistance cannot be submitted to a jury, but is essentially a matter of admiralty jurisdiction. The course for a seaman to adopt in such a case is pointed out by the Merchant Shipping Act, namely, to proceed before magistrates (s. 460): (Atkinson v. Woodall, C. of Ex. May 3, 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 224.)

2. Stipulations—When valid—Burden of proof.—It was the ancient law of the Admiralty Court that anyone dissatisfied with the allotment or distribution of salvage might apply to the court to apportion it. An agreement by a seaman to give up his share of salvage was always considered void, and so declared by 182nd section of the Merchant Shipping Act of 1854. But by the 18th section of the Act of 1862, agreements were made valid which provide for remuneration for salvage services. The burden lies on shipowners setting up such an agreement under the last-mentioned statute to prove the agreement, and that the seamen were aware of the stipulation they entered into: (The Pride of Canada, A. C., Nov. 10, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 406.)

ANCHOR (SHIPS AT).

1. Collision—Practice of Admiralty Court—Burden of proof.—A ship, through neglect of pilot on board, having been in collision and drifting up river came into collision with a ship at anchor. It was held that the burden lay on the former ship to prove that the pilot was compulsorily taken on board, and was solely to blame: (Bennett v. Moita, 5 Moo. P. C. C. 4, not followed: (The Annapolis, A. C., Nov. 15, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 155.)

2. Collision—Damage done to another ship in consequence of chain cable parting.—A steamer, at single anchor, was held liable for damage done to ship by breaking of chain cable, because if she had taken earlier measures for mooring properly the accident would not have been inevitable: (The Egyptian, J. C. P. C., April 13, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 358; 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 776; 9 Jur. N. S. 1159 P. C.; 4 Law Dig. N. S. 786, 1133.)

APPEAL.

1. Notice of appeal—Mersey Docks Consolidation Act 1858—Damage to ship.—If a party intends to appeal under sect. 335 of this Act against a conviction by justices under sect. 95, for injury inflicted by him on any vessel, it is sufficient if he serve his notice of appeal on one of the several part owners of the injured vessel, and within three days after giving the notice enter into a recognisance to try the appeal: (Reg. v. The Recorder of Liverpool, 31 L. J. 122, Q. B.; 4 Law Dig. 307.)

2. Colonial court—Procedure.—The Privy Council is not disposed to interfere with the judgment of a colonial court on a question regarding its forms and practice. But upon a substantial question whether a form of words in a policy amounted to a warranty, the decision of the Colonial Court of Queen's Bench was reversed. The words "now lying in the T. dock, and intended to navigate the St. Lawrence as a freight boat, and to be laid up for the winter," were held not to import a warranty that the steamer should navigate as described, and, being burnt without leaving the dock, the insurers were held liable: (Grant v. Aitna Insurance Company, J. C. P. C., July 5, 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 232 (appeal from judgment of Court of Queen's Bench, Lower Canada); 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 735; 8 Jur. N. S. 705.)

3. Time—Limitation a rule of practice.—The limitation of time for entering appeals from the Admiralty Court is a mere rule of practice, which rule bends to circumstances. The limit so prescribed is fifteen days, but where cross-actions were brought, and one party was not informed until after the fifteen days that the other party had appealed, the Privy Council gave leave to lodge a cross appeal: (The Florence Nightingale, J. C. P. C. July 16, 1862, 1 Mar. Law Cas. 237.)

APPRAISEMENT.

1. Salvage—Order of court.—An appraisal made by order of court is binding on both parties: (The R. M. Mills, A. C. July 23, 1860, 1 Mar. Law Cas. 5.)

2. Salvage—Costs.—Where salvors extracted a commission of appraisal, and the ship was appraised at less, and the cargo at more than what had been stated by the defendants, the salvors were held entitled to all the costs of appraisal: (The Magdalen, A. C. July 18, 1861, 1 Mar. Law Cas. 183; 15 L. T. Rep. N. S. 692.)

ARBITRATION.

1. Rule of association—Condition precedent.—Where the members of a marine insurance association submit to a rule that all disputes shall be decided by arbitrators before any action at law is brought, such rule forms a condition precedent: (Scott v. Avery, 5 H. of L. Cas. 811). This case distinguished from Horton v. Sayers: (4 H. & N. 643): (Tredwin v. Holman and another, C. E. May 2 and 6, 1862, 1 Mar. Law Cas. 245.)

2. Co-partners—Agreement to refer—Retirement of one.—Continuing partners in a concern may agree to waive their own opinion on a disputed point of law without thereby releasing the co-contractors to the original contract from all engagements. And where there were three partners who agreed that all disputes should be referred to an arbitrator, and one refused to join in the reference, it was held that his refusal to join did not render the whole void: (Oakford v. European and American Steam Shipping Company (Limited), V. C. W. May 2, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 370.)

3. Ambiguity—Charter-party.—On account of the ambiguous language of mercantile documents, arbitration was recommended by Chief Justice Cockburn. This case had reference to a charter-party clause, which ran thus, "if other goods be shipped freight to be in the same proportion as if those goods were tea": (Adamson v. Duncan, Q. B. 1865; Mich. Mar. Reg. 17 June 1865.)

ARREST.

1. Ship's husband—Collision suit—Bail—Release of ship—Authority.—The ship's husband has authority to do whatever is necessary to enable the ship to prosecute her voyage and earn freight; and where in order to release his ship a ship's husband, who was also managing owner, induced a person to become bail in the Admiralty Court, it was held that he was acting within his authority, and that his co-owner was liable to the bail: (Barker v. Heighley, C. B. April 18, May 28, and July 6, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 383.)

(See Cargo, 3.)

A PUBLIC PROSECUTOR.

THE newspapers have long been calling for the establishment of a Public Prosecutor; but Governments, whether Liberal, Conservative, or Radical, have equally turned to them a deaf ear. As there can be no selfish motive for this reluctance to concede a popular demand, it may be fairly presumed that there is something to be said on the other side; and that objections to the desired change are more numerous and forcible than is apparent to outsiders. The difficulties, we believe, are rather practical than theoretical. The office of Public Prosecutor would be at once very onerous, very anxious, and very unpopular. The press, which takes upon itself to judge, without hearing the case, the decisions of the Judges who do hear, would be still more eager to criticise the conduct of the officer who is to determine whether a prosecution should or should not be instituted. He would be certainly the most abused man in the kingdom; for, where opinions differ, as they must on such a question, he would be soundly rated on one side if he resolved to prosecute, and on the other if he declined to do so. The Pall-Mall Gazette has suggested a novel, and, as it seems to us, an excellent, plan for avoiding the difficulties that have hitherto prevented the appointment of such an officer, by limiting his duties to certain classes of crime. But the article is so sensible and so well deserves further consideration that we cite it entire:

As we believe that the subject of public prosecutors is likely to be soon brought before the House of Commons, and as the matter is not at present complicated by the special circumstances of any particular case, it may be as well to consider a few of the general principles which are applicable to the subject. The change required is so important in itself, so obvious, and so easily made, that it is a great pity that the matter should not be more generally understood than it is.

Let us, in the first place, trace the progress of an ordinary prosecution from its commencement to the final payment of costs, which may be said to conclude the whole operation. Let us suppose that a robbery is committed. The first step, as a rule, would be the giving information. The person robbed would go to the nearest police-office, and there in his own words tell the officer in charge of the station the particulars of the occurrence. He would order inquiries to be made, and if grounds appeared for suspecting any person he would be apprehended, either with or without warrant, and taken by the police before a magistrate. Up to this point no alteration is required, but with the proceedings before the magistrate the difficulties begin. If the police think fit, as they sometimes do, especially, we believe, in counties, to take up the case, as they call it, from the first, matters go smoothly. They—we cannot say specifically with whom the discretion rests, but in cases of importance, such, for instance, as a murder, it is often the chief constable who acts—instruct an attorney. He prepares the case for trial exactly as he would if it were a civil action; that is to say, he attends the magistrates and procures the committal of the prisoner. He sees the witnesses and takes their proofs. He takes counsel's opinion upon evidence if he thinks it necessary. He draws the brief, delivers it to counsel of his own selection, instructs the clerk of indictments to draw the indictment, attends consultations, sends the bill and the witnesses before the grand jury, is present at the trial, and after the verdict hands in his bill to the clerk of assize or his officer, who takes it, signs it, and returns it to the attorney as his voucher for the payment of his expenses by the county treasurer, who afterwards recovers a large proportion of the amount from the Treasury, by whom the bill is taxed a second time, with very considerable, and perhaps in some cases excessive and unnecessary, rigidity. If this course is taken there is, in our opinion, nothing at all to complain of in the system, except only that the scale of costs allowed in respect of all criminal proceedings is so small that respectable attorneys, generally speaking, look upon criminal business not only as being in itself disagreeable, which, of course, it always must be, but as involving distinct loss in a money point of view. Suppose, however, that this matter, which is in no way connected with the presence or absence of a public prosecutor, were set to rights, the difficulties at present felt would still exist in their full force in cases not taken up by the police. In such cases the prosecutor is left to appoint his own attorney, and of course he has to pay such costs as the public allowance does not provide for. Moreover, in many cases of high public importance which do not fall within the common routine of criminal proceedings, no costs at all are paid by the public, and the prosecutor is thus left to pay the whole for himself. In important cases the extra costs are frequently very large, and at the same time are practically indispensable. The result is that if the prosecutor does pay them he is subjected to a very heavy expense for a public object, whilst if he does not choose to incur them the prisoner is very likely to escape punishment. The case of prosecution in which no costs are allowed is in some instances still harder, inasmuch as in those cases a private person is saddled with the whole expense of discharging an important public service, so that the public, in fact, relies upon the not very satisfactory motive of private vengeance, and on the very insufficient motive of public spirit, for the punishment of all offences which do not fall within the narrow definition of a very limited routine.

To sum up, the deficiencies of the existing system may be shortly stated as follows:

First, in all cases the scale of costs allowed by the public in criminal cases is too low. The result is that respectable attorneys dislike criminal business, and have no motive when they do undertake it to do it properly. They often omit steps, such as taking counsel's opinion on evidence, having consultations, &c., which are really necessary or desirable, for fear of not getting their costs allowed on taxation. This, however, is a minor point, and there is danger of exaggerating its importance.

The second evil is that in routine cases, which for any reason the police do not take up, the private prosecutor is liable to be saddled with costs if he prosecutes efficiently, and the public is exposed to the risk that crimes may go unpunished if he does not.

The remedy for these evils is as simple and straightforward as possible. It is merely to make it part of the duty of the committing magistrate, unless he sees reason to the contrary, to nominate an attorney to conduct the prosecution, unless the prosecutor prefers to do so himself, and to pay such a scale of costs as shall make respectable attorneys willing to undertake criminal business. This simple alteration, which would not increase the expense of criminal proceedings except to the extent to which it clearly ought to be increased, that is to say, to the point necessary to secure reasonable efficiency, would be all that is required to provide a perfectly satisfactory system for the prosecution of common routine offences.

With regard to crimes in which costs are not at present allowed an important distinction must be observed. It would be altogether monstrous to institute an office which would enable every person to set the criminal law in motion at his own discretion and at the public expense. Those who doubt this can hardly be aware of the nature of the engine which would thus be placed under the control of every vindictive or wrong-headed man in the country. Look at the law of conspiracy as illustrated by the case of conspiracies in restraint of trade; look at the law of libel, and especially that branch of it which would expose many writers whose bona fides is undeniable to prosecutions for blasphemous or seditious libel; look at indictments for assault, nuisance, and other matters, which are essentially civil actions though criminal in form; look at prosecutions representing strong personal or party feeling, like the prosecution of Governor Eyre for murder, or that of Mr. Zulietta for slave-trading. All these cases, and many more which might be added, are so many proofs of the truth that if private individuals are to be allowed to prosecute on their discretion for every sort of crime which is, or is believed by them to be, committed—a right which we regard as one of the very highest value, and as one of the minor causes of our English respect for the law—it is desirable that they should not be allowed to draw upon the public purse for the gratification of their wishes except under very effective restrictions. It would, however, be quite as easy to refer to cases which show with equal clearness the importance of enabling private persons to prosecute at the public expense in many cases in which they now have to do it, if at all, at their own. The great commercial frauds and scandals of various kinds which have been so rife of late, and many of which, though brought to light by proceedings in courts of law and equity, have escaped all investigation even, will readily occur to everyone. In some instances no prosecutions have been instituted, although the facts were patent and notorious, and although attention was pointedly called by the public press to the fact that crimes had been committed, because private interests were rather opposed than favourable to a prosecution. In other instances prosecutions have been instituted under the influence of private feelings which, though natural and even laudable in their way, and useful in their results, were not exactly those under which one would wish to see criminal prosecutions conducted, or which would guarantee their fair and temperate management. Everyone must have felt that in these cases it would have been a great gain if the question whether a prosecution should be conducted at the public expense had been fairly considered by a disinterested representative of the public.

It is sometimes supposed that questions of great delicacy and difficulty might arise as to the appointment and the duties of such an officer. In fact, nothing could be simpler or more easy. As we have frequently pointed out, he would have to do nothing whatever except what on a more limited scale is done already in certain cases by the Solicitor to the Treasury. No change in the law would be required; no great expense would be necessary. An Act of Parliament in two or three sections, and somewhat to the following effect, would be all that would be necessary:—

Whereas, crimes often escape punishment for want of due prosecution, and whereas it is expedient that in certain cases greater facilities than at present exist should be provided for the prosecution of crimes, be it enacted as follows:

1. The Lord Chancellor shall appoint an officer who shall be called the Public Prosecutor, and who shall be a barrister or an attorney-at-law of ten years' standing, and shall receive a salary of £ per annum.

2. It shall be the duty of the Public Prosecutor to receive and to consider applications made to him for the prosecution of offences at the public expense exclusively.

3. When the public prosecutor shall think it desirable to institute and carry on any such prosecution it shall be lawful for him in his discretion to take all such steps for that purpose as may at present be taken by an attorney retained to prosecute any person on any criminal charge, and in particular to employ local agents to act for him, and all costs and expenses incurred by him for any such purposes shall be paid by the Commissioners of the Treasury.

4. When any judge of any of the Superior Courts of law or equity, or any judge having jurisdiction in bankruptcy, shall by reason of matter brought before him in the course of any judicial proceeding see reason to believe that any crime has been committed, he shall report the facts of the case to the Public Prosecutor and the Public Prosecutor shall thereupon take such proceedings as he shall think proper.

Other sections for providing a proper office for enabling the Lord Chancellor to ask for returns, reasons, &c., and to dismiss in case of misconduct, would be desirable; but this would be the substance of the measure. If it were adopted it would simply fill up a recognised gap in our judicial system at a very moderate expense and without involving the smallest change in our general system of criminal procedure. The public prosecutor would employ counsel, take their advice upon evidence, consult with them, instruct them to draw indictments, get up the evidence, employ country agents, and, in a word, do the ordinary business of a prosecuting attorney in cases which he regarded as being important enough to demand his interference. The right of the public to prosecute would remain as it is, and if any one considered himself aggrieved by the refusal of the Public Prosecutor to take up his case he would still have it in his power to act for himself as he might think fit. This would avoid, amongst other things, all the difficulties which have been felt, as often as the subject has been mooted, in adapting to our own use parts of the institutions of other countries, by which the whole administration of criminal justice is conceived in a spirit totally different from the one which distinguishes our country.

REFORM OF THE LAW OF REAL PROPERTY.

A PAPER has been read by Sir GEORGE BOWYER, Bart., D.C.L., before the Juridical Society, on this subject, from which we extract the following. He says:

Two questions have often been put by and to law reformers.

The first is: Why an estate in fee simple cannot be sold and transferred as easily and simply as a bale of goods?

The second is: Why has not a complete registration of title to real property been established in England as it has been in almost every other country?

On the answer to the first of these questions depends to a considerable extent the solution of the great problem of the amalgamation of law and equity. And it is important to observe, that the separation between law and equity is one of the principal difficulties in the way of a digest or a code of the laws relating to real property.

I believe it can be shown that one thing is the root of the whole of this subject. I mean that peculiarity in the law of England wherein it differs from the law of all other European states, both ancient and modern—the permanent or indefinitely protracted separation of the legal from the equitable estate in land. Let us examine the subject historically and critically, with a view to form an accurate notion of the legal nature and effects of this remarkable institution of our municipal law.

This the learned baronet proceeds to do at length, and continues:

The analysis stated above, of the principles of the civil law, gives us a clue to extricate ourselves from the difficulty, and to remedy an evil which the increasing charges on land are making more and more intolerable, to the great injury of the wealth of the nation.

The civil law allows no distinction between the legal estate and the equitable estate, and it allows immovable and movable property to be dealt with freely by contract alike. It only admits the distinction between movables and immovables. It allows every sort of property to be dealt with in the most direct and simple way, according to the interests and the wants of mankind.

The question arises how we can attain this much-desired simplicity of the law of real property. This can only be done by abolishing all artificial laws belonging to, or arising from, the feudal system, and by considering all property as the same, except so far as its physical nature causes a diversity in the rules of law which apply to it, or special positive laws regulate certain particular kinds of property for economical and political purposes.

The first point is, that all dealings with immovable property should be direct and simple, and as little technical as possible.

The legal estate should be entirely assimilated to the equitable estate. Whatever modification of the dominion or right may be made by means of uses and trusts creating equitable estates, should be made directly and simply, without resorting to uses and trusts, but by conveyance or contract, without the intervention of trustees. By this means the legal estate can be moulded and made to fulfil every purpose; and conveyances to trustees will be resorted to only where they are necessary to take charge of the property for the purposes intended, such, for instance, as trusts for charitable purposes, or for accumulation, &c.

By this amendment of the law, powers would be created without any equitable estate. And at law, as well as in equity, a deferred or future interest could be created in the first instance, so as to limit a remainder, after a fee simple determinable on the happening of a given event; and the artificial and circuitous practice of creating, springing, or shifting uses, would be superseded by simple grant of the ownership of the estate, or by contracts, expressing plainly and in simple language the disposition intended to be made according to the intentions of the parties. The object in view is that, whatever can now be done by means of uses and trusts, may be done, as in the civil law, by contract unilateral or otherwise, without resorting to any indirect circuitous artificial method. On the same principle, limitations to trustees to bar dower should be abolished, and a simple clause inserted in deeds, declaring that no dower shall be claimed, and such a declaration, clearly expressing the intention, should be sufficient to bar dower.

In all cases in which trustees are necessary for the administration and management of land, the law should invest them with all the powers necessary for the fulfilment of their trust; but no estate nor interest in the property should be vested in them. This part of the subject is easily explained by reference to the civil law. The leading principle is to be found in the Institutes, lib. ii. tit. 1, s. 7. Justinian there (in accordance with the ancient jurists) holds things consecrated, religious, or sacred to be res nullius. They are appropriated to a purpose, but they are not the property of any one. On the same principle, trust property, strictly so called, is appropriated to a purpose. And to hold that the trustee has any estate or interest in it is a mere fiction. This doctrine is further illustrated by the title of the Institutes Quibus alienare licet vel non licet, which shows that property may be in some cases alienated by one who has no vested interest of proprietorship, or, as we should say, no estate in it, because the law itself gives him the power of doing so. Thus the hypothecarius can alienate the hypothecated property of his debtor, though it is by contract merely a security for the debt. So if the trust requires the trustee to alienate, the trust property is not his property. He has only a legal power over it. As for trustees for charities, they ought to be deemed simply public officers, administering property for the objects of the charity. The trustees have simply certain duties to perform. The law should give to them the necessary powers. But they should have no rights of dominion, either legal or equitable. In common sense, and according to the accurate principles of jurisprudence, they should have simply a power and authority conferred by the law. The law of England (Co. Litt. 12, 13, b.) allows the freehold to be in abeyance only on the death of a person. But the whole doctrine about freehold is obsolete and useless. There is no difference between the freehold in land and the freehold in consols. Both are simply property, to be used for the purposes of society and of life under the regulation of the law.

The amendments of the law above indicated would greatly simplify the law of real property. The amendment would be entirely prospective, so as not to interfere with any existing deeds and arrangements.

Its effect would be to render unnecessary conveyances to trustees executed for the purpose of dealing with real property in a way which the law does not allow to freehold to be dealt with. Thus the freehold would be assimilated to the equitable estate, and rendered equally plastic and capable of being adapted to all the purposes of private property.

At a second reading Sir George further considered the subject. He says:

The conclusion arrived at in the former paper was—that whatever practical uses and advantages belong to the equitable estate ought to be extended to the legal estate, that is to say, that the legal estate should be rendered by law capable of being dealt with in the same way as the equitable estate, and moulded for the same purposes.

If this were effected by legislation, uses and trusts would become unnecessary in this country, as they are in other civilised countries of Europe.

But this is not sufficient. For no reform of the law of real property can be effectual unless it thoroughly carries into operation the principles of the Statute of Uses, which, as we have seen, are analogous to those of the civil law, by putting an end for the future to the distinction between the legal and the equitable estate in law.

This can only be done by preventing for the future limitations to trustees for terms of years in conveyances. We have an example of this in stat. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 76, sect. 8, repealed and re-enacted (in substance) by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, which provides that no estate in law shall be created by way of contingent remainder, but every estate which before the passing of the Act would have taken effect as a contingent remainder shall take effect, if in a will or codicil, as an executory devise, and if in a deed, as an executory estate of the same nature and having the same properties as an executory devise. To conveyances by will the law (as Burton expresses it, Real Prop. sect. 280,) has indulged the creation of future and contingent estates under the name of executory devises, according to a system analogous in other respects to springing and shifting uses, but with this difference, that the gift by will is allowed to be direct, and independent of the interposition of a third person, which the Statute of Uses requires. And thus the question of scintilla juris may be avoided.

The statute thus rendered unnecessary and abolished the conveyance to trustees to preserve contingent remainders. It also affords an example of that which I contended for in the former paper, namely, rendering the legal estate capable of being dealt with, and moulded to the same purposes as the equitable estate. The abolition of the limitation to trustees to preserve contingent remainders, and the well-known provision in the Act preventing the destruction of contingent remainders existing when the Act came into force, effected a great improvement and simplification of the law, rendering obsolete much of the abstruse law contained in Fearn's celebrated treatise.

The statute also illustrates the proposition that the interposition of trustees in conveyance is useless. It is indeed strange that lawyers did not see that if trustees to preserve were unnecessary in wills and codicils, they were unnecessary in deeds also. The distinction was founded on no principle either of jurisprudence or of common sense.

The stats. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 76, and 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, are in truth a very valuable step in law reform; and they sanction the very principles on which I base my propositions for the reform of the law of real property. They show that the legal estate may be made equally plastic and practically adaptable to every purpose as the equitable estate, and that limitations to trustees are useless. These are, indeed, most important propositions, for they involve the whole subject of the reform of the law of real property, either directly or consequentially.

For if the legal estate may be dealt with in the same way and for the same purposes as the equitable estate, there is no reason for the legal separation of the legal estate from the equitable estate. And if the interposition of trustees is not necessary, it follows that limitations to trustees, and the interposition of trustees in conveyances, are unnecessary. And if they be unnecessary, they must be prejudicial, because they complicate the law, and give rise to technical difficulties; and they therefore cause loss of time, and also much expense in dealing with landed property.

The most essential reform of the law of real property is to assimilate it to that which governs personality.

One evil of the legal distinction which makes estates in land less than freehold personality, is that they devolve on the executor or administrator, while the freehold passes to the heir. Thus we have two entirely different and separate laws of descent or inheritance affecting property of the same nature, that is to say, immovable property; so that even an estate from auter vie will go, on intestacy, to the heir, while an estate for a million of years, or until the day of judgment, will go to the executor or administrator.

This is contrary to the plainest common sense. It is obvious that all immovable property ought to be subject to the same law of descent or devolution in case of intestacy. If the law of primogeniture be good, it should extend to all immovable property, and if it be bad, it ought to be abolished altogether; and in either case all immovable property ought to descend, in case of intestacy, according to one homogeneous law.

Having considered the question of the creation of equitable estates and limitation to trustees in settlements, the author considers how the machinery of terms may be dispensed with. He says:

The solution of the difficulty depends entirely on the principle already laid down—that of dealing with property by contract, directly and without the intervention of trustees.

The proposed reform would make a very important change in the law of real property. By dealing with real property, not by conveyance, but by contract, the legal estate would always be and remain vested in the real owner of the property. Thus the unity of the title would be preserved, for there would be no conveyance to trustees. Even where trustees are useful to see to the management and appropriation of property, they would be in the nature of curators or guardians, having a legal power and authority, but no vested nor contingent interest in the land. The policy and object of the Statute of Uses would be fully carried into effect. And there would be no distinction between legal and equitable estates and legal and equitable rights and interests. Therefore the law of real property would no longer be administered partly by courts of law and partly by courts of equity, for the two jurisdictions would be practically amalgamated, except as regards difference of procedure, a difference which must be dealt with and remedied separately. Moreover the simplification of titles, by the introduction of the great principle of unity of title to the dominion or ownership of land, would greatly facilitate the establishment of a sound system of general registration of titles.

THE NEW LAW COURTS.

THE following is the report of the committee:—

1. Your committee have taken into consideration the matters referred to them, and have examined professional and other witnesses of experience and eminence.

2. They find that in 1842 a Select Committee was appointed "to consider the expediency of erecting a building in the neighbourhood of the Inns of Court for the sittings of the Courts of Law and Equity, with a view to the more speedy, convenient, and effectual administration of justice."

3. Inquiries were renewed, by direction of Parliament, from time to time, and a Royal Commission issued in 1859, whose recommendations all tended to that object.

4. In accordance with the report, made in 1860, of the Royal Commission, which included the present Lord Chancellor, Sir J. T. Coleridge, and the late Sir G. Cornewall Lewis, an Act was passed in the year 1865 authorising the purchase of a large area, since cleared, lying between the Strand and Carey-street, and containing 7½ acres.

5. By a second Act of the same Session the cost of the site to be thus acquired, and of the buildings to be erected upon it, was provided for partly by 1,000,000*l.* of stock standing to the credit of the Suitsors' Fund in the Court of Chancery, and partly by a redemption annuity, extending over a period not exceeding fifty years, to be levied by fees on suitsors.

6. The acquisition of the property and its clearance have occupied a period of nearly four years, and the cost of the purchase and clearance has amounted to a sum exceeding 800,000*l.*

7. A Royal Commission, dated 29th June 1865, was issued appointing the Lord Chancellor and many of the Judges, and other persons, "to advise and concur with the Treasury as to the plan and arrangements of the intended new courts," and during the period which has been occupied in acquiring and obtaining possession of the site the Commissioners have, from time to time, recorded their opinion as to the courts and offices necessary or desirable to be provided for.

8. Under the Thames Embankment Act, passed in 1862, a space of ground lying between Norfolk-street, Surrey-street, Arundel-street, and the river was reclaimed and directed to be set apart for the use of the public as ornamental ground.

9. Upon this ground, and the space lying between it and the Strand, a scheme was proposed early in the present session for erecting new courts of law and offices, instead of erecting them on the Carey-street site, acquired under the Act of 1865. This design was subsequently limited to an area comprising the houses and buildings to the south of Howard-street, and about an acre and a quarter of the reclaimed land, and involving for the sake of approaches and air the demolition of part of the houses on the north side of Howard-street.

10. Mr. Street, whose plans for the building on the Carey-street site had been sanctioned by the royal commission, was directed by the First Commissioner of Works to prepare a set of plans adapted to the lesser Embankment area, consisting of six acres; and likewise plans on a reduced scale suited to the seven and a half acres of the Carey-street site.

11. Thus the committee had before them, on the north of the Strand, seven and a half acres, forming the Carey-street site, already purchased and cleared, and from which upwards of 4000 resident occupiers had been removed, and on the south of the Strand, below Howard-street, a site to the extent of six acres, about four and a half acres of which are still covered by houses and buildings.

12. From the fullest consideration of all the circumstances of the case, and of the facts stated in evidence before them, your committee have come to the following conclusions:

13. They are of opinion that the Carey-street site, upon the whole, affords the best opportunity of concentrating the courts and offices in the centre of the great legal district lying between and nearly equi-distant from Lincoln's-inn and the Temple; and that it would be greatly to the public advantage that this site should be adhered to, and the new Law Courts and offices erected thereon, as sanctioned by Parliament in the Act of 1865.

14. The evidence received by your committee has satisfied them that the convenience of the public cannot be separated in the main from that of the legal profession, and that the economy of time which would result from placing the Law Courts in immediate proximity to the chambers of the practising barristers and solicitors would tend to the direct advantage of the suitors. On the other hand, the placing of the Equity Courts on the Embankment site would, in the judgment of your committee, be of serious detriment to the public and the Profession, and materially diminish, if not destroy, the benefit which has accrued from the transfer of the Chancery Courts from Westminster to Lincoln's-inn.

15. With regard to facility of access, your committee are impressed with the conviction that for all ordinary purposes connected with the courts no great additional expenditure need be incurred should the Carey-street site be adopted; while they desire to call attention to the fact that the increased accommodation likely to be afforded by the Embankment, the river, and the contemplated railway, must be taken into account as available, in the case of strangers, for the Carey-street site, to nearly the same degree as for that of Howard-street.

16. The Carey-street site admits of a building the same size as that proposed to be placed on the Embankment site, with an area available for improved approaches.

17. The reasons for any improvement in the approaches that may be desirable upon the north of Carey-street would equally apply if the building were erected on the Howard-street site.

18. It is alleged that the shape of the Carey-street site presents certain inconveniences, from the irregular shape of the western boundary; but your committee believe that the site may be made available for the reduced scheme without any additional purchases, by a give-and-take arrangement with Clement's-inn, and that if any additional purchase of ground were found necessary the cost of such purchase might be met by the sale of a portion of the ground already acquired.

19. Mr. Hardwick and other witnesses have stated their opinion that no difficulty whatever would exist in securing purity of air, adequate ventilation, and sufficiency of light in buildings erected on either site.

20. The Carey-street site, then, being in the opinion of your committee the most convenient for the accomplishment of the main objects of the proposed concentration, they proceed to consider whether, with relation either to cost or architectural effect, it would be wise to abandon the present Parliamentary site.

21. Your committee have carefully weighed the conflicting statements laid before them regarding the question of cost.

22. The estimated expense of acquiring the Howard-street site and widening Essex-street, which Mr. Street and Mr. Hunt concur in regarding as indispensable, would be as large as that already expended on the Carey-street site as it now stands.

23. If the Carey-street site were abandoned a considerable loss must inevitably occur on its re-sale, which Mr. Pownall, Mr. Hardwick, and Mr. Oakley agree in putting as high as 436,000*l.*

24. Mr. Hunt, indeed, says in his evidence that he has been in communication with a gentleman representing, according to his own statements, some very responsible persons who are willing to take the Carey-street site and lay it out for building purposes at an ultimate rent equivalent to 3½ per cent. on 780,000*l.*; but that, although the ultimate rent will be 3½ per cent., there must be a period of time when all the rent cannot be obtained, and so Mr. Hunt puts it 3 per cent.

ROLLS COURT.

The important decision of the Master of the Rolls in Re Commercial Bank Corporation of India and the East, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 839, that the court has power under the 159th and 160th section of the Companies Act 1862, to sanction a compromise between the creditors and contributories of a company, and to make it binding on everybody, seems likely to cut short the litigation in many winding-up cases. This decision has been followed in Re Charles Lafitte and Company, in which a summons was taken out by the official liquidator to confirm an agreement for a compromise of the suit of Gray v. Lewis, by the decree in which the National Bank were declared liable, to pay to Charles Lafitte and Co., the sum of 230,000*l.* and interest. An appeal from this decision is pending. The proposed compromise provided for the immediate payment by the National Bank of 28,000*l.*, the amount of the undisputed claims on Charles Lafitte and Co.; it provided that an indemnity should be given by the National Bank against all disputed claims: that the official liquidator's remuneration should be calculated upon the same scale as if the decree in Gray v. Lewis had been worked out, and it provided for the payment of the costs of the plaintiffs in that suit and in two other suits which had been instituted with the same object. At a meeting of shareholders, called to consider the compromise, it was approved by seventy-six shareholders, holding over 7000 shares, and opposed by twelve, holding some 300 shares. His Lordship was satisfied that it was for the interest of all parties that the compromise should be confirmed. He would, however, give the opposing shareholders liberty to stop the compromise on their giving security for the payment of the claims which had been allowed, and indemnifying the company against other claims and costs. The compromise would be confirmed if they did not give such security as his chief clerk should approve of, on or before the 9th August.

Re Natal Investment Company Wilson's case; was an application by a Mr. Wilson to have his name removed from the list of contributories to the above company, under the following circumstances:—When the company was formed in July 1864, Wilson was invited to take shares and to become a director, it being then expected that the Crédit Mobilier would set the company afloat; and Mr. Graham, the secretary, offered Wilson 10*s.* per share if he would take 300 shares and become a director, to which Wilson assented and paid a deposit of 1*l.* per share. In the following month he discovered that the Crédit Mobilier would not bring out the company, and, being then on the Continent, he requested his friend Mr. Simons, who was a director of the company, to withdraw his (Wilson's) application for shares and his name as director. The board were unwilling to do this, but consented on Mr. Simons threatening that he would otherwise make the matter public by means of an advertisement in the Times. Notwithstanding this, sixty shares were allotted to Wilson and registered in his name, the 300*l.* which he had paid as a deposit being appropriated to the payment of the deposit and the first call of 4*l.* per share on the sixty shares. On behalf of the official liquidator it was contended that the written application for the shares could not be verbally withdrawn; that the 10*s.* per share agreed to be paid to him by the secretary was a valuable consideration for his becoming a shareholder; and that he was disqualified by delay from having his name removed. His Lordship said that an application for shares was not binding until the shares were allotted, and might be withdrawn at any time previously. Mr. Simons was clearly proved to have been Wilson's agent for the purpose of withdrawing his application, and the directors were not justified in allotting the sixty shares to him. Wilson was not guilty of delay; he had throughout repudiated the shares. The agreement to pay 10*s.* per share was absolutely void, and was no consideration for the contract. Wilson was not precluded either on the ground of contract or delay from applying to have his name removed, and his name must be removed accordingly. He must have leave to prove for the 300*l.* under the winding-up.

V. C. MALINS' COURT.

During the past few days one or two cases have occurred requiring especial notice.

A somewhat singular case was that of the London and South-Western Bank (Limited) v. Fairlie. The plaintiff company sought to recover a sum of 200*l.* advanced upon the acceptance of the Earl of Shrewsbury in Jan. 1868. It appeared that the first defendant, Sir Arthur Percy Cuninghame Fairlie, Bart., was at that time a customer of the bank, and having the acceptance in question applied at the bank to have it discounted. The local manager refused to do so, and on application to the general manager he advanced 200*l.* upon it, and took a letter from the defendant promising to let him have certain wine delivery orders as a collateral security, and the wine firm, who were the apparent holders of the wine, on being applied to in a letter signed by one partner, stated the particulars of certain wine which they held "at the disposition of the bank." The security not being realised, and the wine firm having executed a deed of composition, not registered at the filing of the bill, the suit sought a declaration that they were trustees of the wine, and sought payment and costs. The wine firm and their trustees were made defendants, and opposed the claim on the ground that the remedy was at law, and that the letter of the partner to the bank was not in the ordinary course of their business, and did not bind the firm. The Vice-Chancellor, however, thought otherwise, and made some strong observations on the fact that at the time that letter was written there was not the wine specified, in the possession of the firm, although that was explained by saying that they relied on the statement of the first defendant that he also held sufficient to answer the security. There must be a decree that the plaintiffs were entitled to rank as creditors against the estate of the defendants the partners, and were entitled to such dividend as had been or would be paid, the trustees being liable to such costs as were caused by their opposition to the demand.

Another case was Crichell v. The Commissioners of Public Buildings, being a suit for specific performance in respect of a contract by the defendants to take a piece of land forming part of the Carey-street site of the New Law Courts. This was one of those cases in which the land had been supposed to be freehold. In consequence, however, of the defendants coming and compulsorily taking the land, and the title being sifted, it turned out, as was alleged, that it was held only for the fee-end of an old lease granted in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. There had been a deposit under the Lands Clauses Act in the present case of 2200*l.* in court. After a good deal of discussion, the Vice-Chancellor decreed specific performance with a reference as to title, it appearing that the plaintiff had a fee simple subject to the lease, and he being entitled to 1000*l.*, the defendants having to pay him that sum out of the 2200*l.* The remainder must remain subject to the investigation of the title, the plaintiff undertaking to concur with the defendants in any application for payment of the 1600*l.*

Two most important cases were then heard consecutively, relating to wards of court. The first, Burton v. Earl Darnley, was a case in which the mother had placed her infant daughter at a school at Bayonne, she being entitled to large property. A bill being filed by the testamentary guardian, the mother took the child to Spain, and for two years set the court at defiance. Latterly it was discovered that she was in England, and her solicitor being brought up in court, was sworn and examined, and being directly asked if he knew where she was, and what was her residence, he appealed to the Vice-Chancellor whether he was not privileged, although he had the day before ceased to be the lady's solicitor. The Vice-Chancellor said he had deliberately considered the question, and decided that he was bound to answer, and that every person, solicitor, or otherwise, could not aid or abet in frustrating the proceedings of the court in respect to a ward. The case of Ramsbotham v. Senior then came on, in which twins were entitled to 10,000*l.* a-year, and the mother having undertaken before the Vice-Chancellor in chambers to produce them whenever requisite, could not be found, and her solicitor swore that he was ignorant of her residence, but had received letters without address. It was now asked that he might produce the envelopes, as perhaps the post-marks might lead to discovery. The Vice-Chancellor ordered the production, on the ground that the privilege was the privilege of the client, not of the solicitor, and of course there could be none in this case.

LEGISLATION AND JURISPRUDENCE.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY BILL.

LORD PENZANCE moved the second reading of this Bill, the object of which is to alter the law in reference to the power of married women to hold property of their own. By the English common law, in theory, all the personal property possessed by a woman at her marriage, or acquired afterwards, passed absolutely to the husband, who in return was bound to maintain and protect her; but by gradual steps, and by means of marriage settlements, women in the upper and middle classes could be protected from the extravagance of their husbands. Among the poorer classes, however, all the harshness of the law made itself felt. If the husband failed to support his wife she could only go to the parish officers; while if she was industrious and he idle her earnings were always liable to be swallowed up by him. By the last census it appeared that there were then about 3,000,000 of 25. Even assuming that all Mr. Hunt's expectations could be realised, the very least amount of loss which can be calculated on is 34,000*l.* per annum for four years for interest of money.

26. The evidence has satisfied your committee that the area already acquired, and which is ready for the commencement of building, is sufficient for the erection of the courts of law and the offices on the reduced scale contemplated in the plan prepared for the Howard-street site by direction of the First Commissioner of Works.

27. If at any future period additional accommodation should be required, the ground in the neighbourhood of the Carey-street site would be obtained at a probably lower price than that in the neighbourhood of Howard-street; the latter site being bounded by King's College on the one side and the Temple on the other any extension would have to take the direction of the very expensive block of buildings on the south side of the Strand.

28. There is so much difference of opinion in your committee as to the comparative advantages of the two sites in point of architectural effect that they are unable to report upon that subject.

29. Looking at the delay that has occurred since the passing of the Act, and the further suspense that would be unavoidable in obtaining the powers for, and the compulsory purchase and clearance of, another site, and considering that no paramount reasons have been submitted to the committee for a change in the original design, your committee recommend that the Carey-street site be retained, and that the New Law Courts and offices be erected thereon.

July 30, 1869.

SAYINGS AND DOINGS OF THE COURTS.

[CONTRIBUTED BY THE REPORTERS OF THE SEVERAL COURTS.]

HOUSE OF LORDS.

A COMMITTEE for privileges of the House of Lords has been engaged since July 23rd in the hearing of the Wicklow Peerage claim. Lord Redesdale was in the chair, and the Lord Chancellor, Lords Chelmsford and Colonsay, and other noble lords were present. The original claimant of the peerage is the only son by a second marriage of the Hon. and Rev. Francis Howard, a brother of the late earl. The Hon. and Rev. Francis Howard had three sons by a first marriage, all of whom are now dead. But the eldest of these sons, the Hon. William George Howard, married in Feb. 1863 a Miss Ellen Richardson, and this lady now claims the peerage for an infant son, whom she alleges to have been born of this marriage in May 1864. The case stands over for judgment.

Judgment in the Shedden Legitimacy case was given on Friday, July 30. It will be remembered that this case was argued before the House by the appellants, Miss Shedden for twenty-one days and Mr. Shedden for two days, when he was stopped by the House. This was on July 5, and their Lordships then took time to consider whether it was necessary to call on counsel for the other side. Judgment was now given, without doing so. It will be remembered that this was an appeal from the Divorce Court, the full court (Sir Crosswell Cresswell, Mr. Justice Wightman, and Mr. Justice Williams), of which, on a petition by the appellants under the Legitimacy Declaration Act, decreed that Mr. Shedden was not legitimate nor a natural-born subject (See 2 Sw. & Tr. 170; 3 L. T. Rep. N. S. 592.). Mr. Shedden's father resided in America, and there in 1790 it was alleged that he married a Miss Wilson. She lived with him as his wife till his death in 1798. Of this alleged marriage Mr. Shedden and a daughter were the issue, the former having been born in 1795. The proof of marriage was entirely confined to evidence of habit and repute. Against the validity of the alleged marriage of 1790 the chief facts relied on were, (1) that the elder Mr. Shedden, when on his death-bed, was formally married to Miss Wilson; and (2) that in a letter, dated Nov. 12, 1798, said to have been written by the elder Mr. Shedden on his death-bed, there was this passage: "I have married Miss Wilson . . . which restores two fine children I have by her to honour and credit." The genuineness of the above letter was disputed by the appellants. The Lord Chancellor now delivered judgment (in which Lords Chelmsford and Colonsay concurred), and after a careful review of the facts and the evidence in the case, his Lordship said that the letter of Nov. 12, 1798, must be considered to be genuine; and on the whole it must be held that there was no valid marriage of the elder appellant's father and mother prior to his birth. The judgment of the court below would therefore be affirmed, and the appeal be dismissed with costs.

married women in England, of whom about 800,000 were earning money. By a recent provision the earnings of a married woman were protected against her husband if he had deserted her, but not otherwise; and as a rule such husbands took care not, in the legal sense of the word, to desert wives upon whose industry they lived in idleness and dissipation. Our law in this respect was peculiar to England. In America married women enjoyed their own property, and evidence strongly in favour of that state of things was given by witnesses from the United States before the House of Commons' committee that considered this subject in 1868, and upon whose recommendation this Bill was founded. It was proposed that the wife should have the power of retaining the property which she possessed at marriage, and afterwards disposing of it; that the wife should possess all the property that afterwards accrued to her; that the wife might sue and be sued as if she were unmarried; and that her estate should be distributed after death in the same way as her husband's. There was a subsidiary clause, providing that the wife should be liable to support her husband, under the poor law. In fact, the Bill proposed to make a fundamental change in the law relating to husband and wife. Many people might feel alarm at some of these provisions. The notion of a wife bringing an action against her husband, and holding a tight hand over the whole of her property, was so at variance with the common law that alarm and doubt might reasonably be generated. The Bill, it was fair to say, would revolutionise the marriage law. The indirect effect would be that the authority of the husband might be considerably weakened and that two independent parties might be set up in one household. But notwithstanding that those feelings were natural to the mind of anyone who contemplated these changes for the first time, they would not, he trusted, induce their Lordships to abstain from reading the Bill a second time. This Bill would deal with all marriages. A large majority of marriages were happy, and few married people would go to law with each other. Where the marriage was a success, and the harmony of the home was maintained, there was no need of the application of laws of this kind. He believed that the husband ought to have the paramount authority in his own home. It had been said that there was no difference between the sexes which should lead to the subordination of one to the other. It was impossible to think too profoundly on that subject; but, after all, truth was often found near the surface; and those who digged below the upper stratum often came to what was not truth. The conditions of married life obtained in all places. Everywhere the husband was the protector and support of the wife, and the wife was subordinate to the husband. He did not believe that the women of this country would desire any change such as that which would declare the equality of the sexes. The present subordination of the woman, as it was a law of Providence, was also, he believed, a source of the highest pleasure which either man or woman could enjoy. If this was not a useless and worn-out theory then the law ought to follow the same direction, and that was the reason why the common law of England had been framed as it was. But it did not follow that there might not be grievances under it, and the practical question which they had to grapple with was how they could preserve the principle of the husband being paramount in his home, with the protection of the woman against those who disregarded the duty which lay on them to supply that protection. If the harmony of the married home continued, the Bill would not apply; if it were broken up, there was no reason why the rights of the husband should be continued. But what could be done with the Bill at this advanced period of the session? No amount of diligence would enable the Bill to pass during the present session; but he was anxious that the Bill should be read a second time, and printed, and well considered during the recess, so that at no distant period the evils of the existing marriage system might be grappled with. He moved that the Bill be read a second time.—The Duke of NORTHUMBERLAND, who had a motion on the paper by way of amendment, that the second reading be deferred for three months, said the noble and learned lord had explained the reasons which actuated him, when he said that the Bill would revolutionise the marriage law. He (the noble duke) admitted the existence of a large amount of evil, and that legislation on the subject was absolutely necessary; but he could not support the Bill in its present shape.—The LORD CHANCELLOR wished to say one word in favour of the Bill. There might be many details requiring consideration; but there could be no doubt of the necessity of protection for the lower classes of females who acquired property by their labour. From a very early period, indeed, the Court of Chancery had felt the absolute necessity of protecting married women, and they had framed a rule that when a fund exceeding 200*l.* came into that court, care was taken that it should not be parted with till the married woman had an opportunity of claiming a share. Having so long been acquainted with the great value of that protection to married women, he could not withhold his assent to the Bill.—Lord CAIRNS said that nothing could be more fair and reasonable than the manner in which the noble and learned lord had laid before their Lordships' house the arguments that could be used for and against the Bill. He (Lord Cairns) was in favour of the principle of the measure. There were two kinds of protection provided by the Bill. One, of the earnings of married women. It had always appeared to him to be utterly impossible to use an argument that would justify a husband in depriving a wife of property acquired, by her own labour and skill. The other was the passing of a woman's property absolutely over to the husband at the time of marriage. This was an old law. Its effect was neutralised in the case of the rich, and the law ought to produce the same effect for those who could not indulge in the luxury of a marriage settlement. He should oppose the Bill passing into law without an investigation before a select committee, but he had no objection to the second reading.—Lord DUFFERIN supported the second reading, and presented a bundle of petitions in favour of the Bill.—Lord ROMILLY approved the second reading. The rich, by resorting to marriage settlements, excluded the operation of the common law; and it was doubly important that a like result should be secured to women who acquired property by their own industry. If their Lordships wished to preserve the dignity and character of the other sex, and to prevent them from being made the slaves of their husbands, he thought they ought to pass this Bill next session.—The EARL of HARROWBY was understood to say that there could be no analogy between the wives of the poor under this Bill and those of the rich, inasmuch as the latter were protected generally by legal settlements.—The EARL of SHAFTESBURY said that in order to appreciate the full importance of this Bill it was necessary to go into the manufacturing counties, where where women as a rule earned large wages, which were often swept away by their idle and dissolute husband.—The Bill was then read a second time.

TRADES UNIONS (PROTECTION OF FUNDS) BILL.

The Earl of MORLEY, in moving the second reading of this Bill, said it had been introduced simply to protect the funds of Trades Unions during next year, when it was expected a comprehensive measure, dealing with the whole subject of Trades Unions, would be introduced. At present the funds of Trades Unions could be embezzled with impunity, while the funds of friendly societies were protected by Mr. Russell Gurney's Act of last session, to which this would form a proper supplement.—Lord CAIRNS described the Bill as anomalous and premature, inasmuch as a Royal Commission had sat on the subject, and the Bill was not framed in accordance with any of that Commission's recommendations. The Government evidently hoped by this Bill to get Trades Unions recognised in some way or other as friendly societies, for the measure recited that, although the object of the society might be illegal, inasmuch as it tended to restrain trade, yet it should rank as a friendly society for the purpose of protecting its funds. If the measure were necessary there would be some shadow of excuse for accepting it, but it was not, as the Act initiated by Mr. Russell Gurney protected the funds of legitimate friendly societies, and he objected to giving Trades Unions illegal in their object the protection of law. The LORD CHANCELLOR said the measure had resulted from a somewhat strict construction having been put on the word "illegal" as applied to trade societies by the Court of Queen's Bench, which had declared that persons joined together as a trades union, not for the purpose of restricting trade by intimidation, but simply resolving among themselves not to engage in their trade except under certain conditions, were illegal. This decision prevented the societies from recovering money due to them or punishing those who embezzled their funds. In consequence a Bill had been introduced in another place, giving to trades unions all the benefits enjoyed by friendly societies, and thinking this was out of the question, the Government had resolved to introduce this temporary measure until the whole matter could be dealt with in a comprehensive manner. His Lordship concluded by reading the Bill to show how restricted it was in its scope.—In reply to Lord CAIRNS, the LORD CHANCELLOR said the decisions of the courts were that, if a society had anything in its rules which operated in restraint of trade, then it was an illegal society.—Lord CAIRNS.—The result is, we are now to declare that, although agreements may operate in restraint of trade, they are, notwithstanding, to make a society a legal society.—The Bill was then read a second time.—On the order of the day for going into committee, Lord CAIRNS repeated the opinion which he had formerly expressed that this Bill is not necessary for the protection of the funds of trades unions against fraud or embezzlement. It is true that these societies cannot be registered as friendly societies and cannot avail themselves of the remedies provided for these bodies; but that is the whole extent of the disability to which they are liable, and he did not think that it is expedient to remove this by an Act of Parliament which is only to last a single year, pending the full and complete consideration of the report of the Trades Unions Commission.—The LORD CHANCELLOR said that a society which is illegal in the eye of the law, because it operates in restraint of trade, cannot be registered as a friendly society, and cannot avail itself of the remedies provided for these societies. Nor is that all. In order to support an indictment for embezzlement the property must be laid as that of some one, and it cannot be laid as the property of an illegal society. The consequence is that the funds of these societies are at present wholly without protection.—After a few words from Lord CAIRNS, the Earl of MORLEY remarked that the Trades Unions Commission expressly recommended in their report that the funds of these societies should receive the protection which will be given to them by this Bill. Mr. Russell Gurney's Act of last session does not give the requisite protection, for it does not enable trades unions to proceed as friendly societies against those who embezzle their funds, nor does it give them the means of recovering by law books or other property of which they may have been deprived. No societies will be entitled to the protection of this Bill if they are illegal in any other way than so far as they operate in restraint of trade.—Lord CAIRNS said that the Trades Unions Commission recommend that the funds of trades unions should be protected in the same manner as friendly societies, only on condition that they submit their rules to the registrar of friendly societies, and show that they do not infringe any one of four cardinal points which the commissioners specify.—The EARL of LICHFIELD urged that the Bill is not at variance with the recommendations of the Trades Unions Commission (of which he was a member), and he cited various passages from their report in support of this contention. It is true that a majority of the commissioners did suggest that the funds of trades unions which offended against any one of four cardinal points which they specified should not receive the protection given to friendly societies; but then the mere giving of money to support strikes is not one of those points. It has, however, been decided by the courts of law that such an application of money, being in restraint of trade, will render a union illegal, and thus place it beyond the pale of the Friendly Societies Acts. This Bill was entirely confined to the remedy of this grievance, and as such it had his entire approval. He was very grateful to the Government for the introduction of a measure which would remove a great injustice, and would give to the funds of the trades unions the protection which is enjoyed by every other kind of property.—Lord PENZANCE said that the Bill only proposes to do one thing, and that is to give the trades unions the protection of the Friendly Societies Acts so far as relates to the punishment of those who embezzle their funds. Even if these societies were objectionable it would not be the best way of suppressing them to prevent their punishing those by whom they are defrauded. It is, however, confessed that they can do this by a prosecution in the ordinary way; and this Act, therefore, only gives them for one year, and until Parliament has considered the whole subject, the same summary remedy which is enjoyed by other societies. It did not confer upon trades unions the status of friendly societies.—After some further observations from Earl GRANVILLE, the House went into committee, when the several clauses were agreed to without amendment.

EVIDENCE AMENDMENT BILL.

Their Lordships went into committee on this Bill. On clause 1, Lord DENMAN objected to witnesses being allowed as a mere matter of caprice or convenience to substitute an affirmation for an oath.—Lord CAIRNS pointed out that the first and fourth clauses in their present form would have the effect of doing away with judicial oaths. They proposed that if witnesses simply disliked to take an oath they should be allowed to affirm that what they were going to say was the truth. The noble and learned lord who occupied the woolsack was anxious to encourage a state of feeling which would lead persons to regard a solemn statement as equally obligatory with an oath, and this, no doubt, was desirable; but if the country were to be educated up to that point oaths should be abolished altogether. Now, however much it might be regretted, large numbers of people regarded statements made under the sanction of an oath as much more solemn and requiring much greater accuracy than others. This was shown by the frequent appeals to witnesses by Judges and counsel to remember that they were on their oath, and it was notorious that truth was thus elicited in many cases where it would not otherwise be extracted. If it were left to individual discretion, the witness who at present would not tell the truth unless he was sworn would decline to take the oath, while it would be taken by the witness who in any case would tell the truth, so that those who required the obligation would escape it. Sometimes the only witness to a particular transaction was a person of no religious belief, upon whom the sanctity of an oath had no binding effect, and some provision should be made for such persons as well as for those who had religious scruples. The noble and learned lord (Penzance) who was not responsible for the present form of the Bill, might bring up amendments on the report limiting the operation of the Bill to those two classes.—Lord PENZANCE admitted that the effect of the clause would be wider than was intended. He had no objection to introduce such alterations in the clause on the report as would meet his noble and learned friend's view.—The clause was then agreed to.—On clause 2, Lord CAIRNS moved the addition of a proviso, to the effect that the plaintiff in any action for breach of promise of marriage should not be entitled to a verdict unless his or her testimony was corroborated by some other material evidence in support of such promise.—Lord PENZANCE said he had not the least objection to the amendment, which was agreed to, and the Bill passed through committee.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

Sir G. JENKINSON gave notice that, unless the Government undertook to deal with the subject, he would ask leave early next session to introduce a Bill to alter and amend the existing law in regard to the present system of the revision and commutation of capital sentences, and he would now ask the Home Secretary to grant a return of all convicts, male and female, who had been relieved from the execution of capital sentences passed upon them during the last ten years.—Mr. BRUCE said that if the hon. baronet would give notice of the information he wanted it should be granted as an unopposed return.

MUNICIPAL AND PARLIAMENTARY VOTERS.

Mr. V. HARCOURT asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether Her Majesty's Government would be prepared in the next session of Parliament to introduce a Bill for the reform of the registration of municipal and Parliamentary Voters in England and Wales.—Mr. BRUCE regretted that he had not had time to consider the report moved for by his hon. friend, but it should be taken into the fullest consideration with a view to introduce any improvement which might be deemed practical in the system of registration during next Session.

FRIENDLY SOCIETIES.

Mr. W. LOWTHER asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his attention had been called to a draft of Bill to consolidate, with amendments, the Acts relating to Friendly Societies; whether Her Majesty's Government intend to adopt any of the suggestions contained in that draft of Bill; and whether they would recommend the issuing of a royal commission upon the subject.—Mr. BRUCE said he had seen the Bill to which the hon. gentleman alluded, and he did not think the suggestions were such as Government could adopt. They had at this moment under consideration whether they should proceed to legislate for the amendment of the law, or should first institute a preliminary inquiry.

STAMPS FOR LOCAL FEES AND FINES.

In reply to Mr. SCLATER-BEOTH.—Mr. AYRTON said the Act recently passed, by which quarter sessions in counties and councils in boroughs might collect fines, fees, and small payments generally, by means of stamps, undoubtedly contained very comprehensive powers enabling the Government to regulate both the making and issuing of those stamps. If the local authorities should consider it advisable that a stamp should be made once for all under the superintendence of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, the commissioners would undertake the task, and have a stamp made of a uniform character, but with the distinction of having the name of the county or borough legibly impressed upon it.

THE PATENT LAWS.

In reply to Mr. MACFIE.—Mr. BRIGHT stated that every member of the Government was of opinion that some considerable change was necessary to be made in the patent laws. He was not sure how many, or whether any, were of opinion that there should be no patent laws at all; but notwithstanding that agreement as to the desirableness of some alteration, it would be very imprudent in him to pledge the Government to being in a measure on the subject when there was so great a difference of opinion upon it that it seemed impossible to get two men to agree as to the change that ought to be made. If they come to the question of a committee or commission, they were in the same difficulty as to whether the inquiry should be directed to the amendment of the patent laws, or to the question whether there should be any patent law at all. These two questions were quite distinct, and the one, perhaps, was more difficult than the other. He believed, with the hon. member for Leith, that this was a question which required to be attended to whenever there was time found to attend to it; but he was quite unable to give any pledge that the Government would bring in a Bill next session. If the hon. member proposed a committee it would be a reasonable proposition, and probably both the Government and the House would be willing to accede to it.

THE BANKRUPTCY BILL.

On the order of the day for the consideration of the Lords' amendments on the Bankruptcy Bill.—The ATTORNEY-GENERAL expressed his satisfaction with the manner in which the Bill had been dealt with in the other House. They had not endeavoured to interfere with its leading principles, or with its main provisions; and he was free to admit that the greater part of the amendments which they had made were improvements. There were, however, three points, on which it was desirable to invite their Lordships to a reconsideration of their amendments. The first was on the 5th clause, and related to the definition of a partnership, association or company. As the clause left this House, the definition was "a partnership, association, or company corporate, or liable to be registered." Their Lordships had added the words "or to be wound-up," which made a very serious difference. A partnership of seven members was liable to be wound-up; and if they adopted this Act, any persons by taking more than seven members into partnership, might exempt themselves from the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act. He would, therefore, propose to disagree with that amendment. The next amendment was in sub-section 3 of clause 6, in which they had inserted before the enumeration of the acts of bankruptcy "the debtor being a trader;" and the effect of that would be that a debtor might attempt to defeat or delay his creditors, without being subject to the bankruptcy law. He was, however, prepared to meet their Lordships half way, by adding words to the effect that it should not be considered an act of bankruptcy on the part of a non-travelling trader to leave the country. He proposed to amend their Lordships' amendment by adding to their clause A words providing that County Courts should only have power in trying causes to the extent of their present jurisdiction.—Mr. MORLEY believed, with regard to debtors quitting England, that it would be better to restore the words as they were in the Bill before it left the House.—The ATTORNEY-GENERAL said that by agreeing to the compromise he had suggested they would maintain the existing law. The words of the clause had acquired a technical signification in the case of traders.—Mr. MORLEY objected to landlords having preference over other creditors, and he submitted under protest to an amendment which would entitle a landlord to claim 20s. in the pound to the extent of six months' overdue rent out of the estate of an insolvent.—The other amendments of the Lords were then considered, and in the main agreed to.

HABITUAL CRIMINALS BILL.

Mr. BRUCE, in moving the committee on this Bill, said that its main objects were the more effective supervision of prisoners, and a proper system of registration. Several other principles of more or less importance would be found in the Bill, but he should be satisfied if it left the committee with its provisions for supervision and registration intact. The Bill, he should say, had not been introduced in consequence of the sudden or alarming increase of crime, although he admitted there had recently been some increase; for the gratifying fact was, that, on the whole, crime had diminished during the last thirty years. (Hear, hear.) It had decreased, not comparatively, but positively, in the face of a great increase of the population of the country. The causes which had led to this gratifying result were, first, emigration; and next, the wider spread of education. By examining the statistics of crime, it would be found that out of every 100 criminals 35 could neither write nor read, and only 3 could do either decently. Out of every 500 criminals only 1 was well educated. (Hear, hear.) In addition to the causes of education and emigration there had also been in operation improved systems of repression and penal legislation; and he thought that the present system of prison discipline and the establishment of reformatories had produced a beneficial effect. The average number of persons convicted each year was 18,000; but last year there was an increase of 1430, an increase due in a great measure to the great depression of our commerce. One object of the Bill was to repair some of the mischief that had been caused by short sentences, and the variety of sentence adopted by different judges. In some counties 40 per cent. of the convicts were sentenced to penal servitude, and in others only 16 per cent., a discrepancy which arose in consequence of the reluctance of some judges to sentence prisoners to the increased term of penal servitude which the Act of 1864 imposed on the second conviction. The result had been a great increase in the number of offenders at large, not less than 1430 in the year 1868. He found that last year no less than 635 of the worst class of criminals had been allowed to return unmolested to their haunts in excess of the number which had so returned in 1854. The manner in which the Bill proposed to deal with this state of things was this. With respect to convicts it altered existing legislation but little; what it did was to provide for a more complete system of registration. At present the ticket-of-leave man was obliged to report himself to the police on his arrival at any place; but if he failed to do so also on leaving all trace of him was lost. The number of tickets-of-leave at large in this country at present was 1500 men and 450 women, and the average duration of the licence was one year and seven months. Under the present Bill the person sentenced for the first time and committed would be under supervision only for the term of the original sentence; but if the criminal had been previously convicted the supervision would last seven years longer. Persons so situated would be liable to be summoned to give an account of themselves and to be apprehended, and if they could not give an account of themselves, to a year's imprisonment. If found by a constable in a private or public place under circumstances to warrant suspicion, or if found by a private person on private property, they would incur the same penalty. If a convict had twice suffered seven years' penal servitude, he would remain under the supervision of the police for life. His main object was to deal with these habitual criminals. With prisoners under short sentences he did not apprehend much difficulty; but with the hardened criminal there was no remedy but to hunt him down. The Bill proposed more stringent clauses against vagrants and receivers of stolen goods, and a few other provisions, which he trusted would obtain the approval of the House.—Sir C. ADDERLEY, who had given notice of his intention to move that the Bill should be "referred to a select committee, for the purpose of substituting a discharged prisoners' aid agency throughout the kingdom, to which the supervision of certain criminals may be entrusted, instead of the police; and of adding provision for the infliction of corporal punishment during imprisonment for brutal assaults on policemen and others; and of more completely carrying out the objects of the Bill in punishing habitual disorderly conduct and drunkenness," deprecated the introduction of so important a measure at a period of the session when three-fourths of the members of the House of Commons had left town. He objected to the Bill as introducing new principles into our criminal law, and greatly extending and developing old ones. The sooner stringent measures were applied to the class of habitual criminals the better, for it was a scandal to the administration of justice that these men, who were well known to the police, should be able to escape the punishment of their crimes; but any mistake made in dealing with that question would only aggravate the evil. Police supervision over convicted criminals who were not incurable was the very worst measure that could be devised, because the police were the natural enemies of the class, and would seek to gain credit by bringing them to justice; when the object of society should be to find them honest employment. All he feared in proposing that the discharged prisoners' aid societies should be employed in the supervision instead of the police was, that the connection of those institutions with the State would tend to impair their efficiency. Criminals when discharged should be placed under the care of these societies, who would provide them with the means of obtaining an honest livelihood if the men desired to reform; and then if those efforts failed, and the men proved incorrigible, he proposed that they should be handed over to the magistrates in quarter sessions for committal. Under the 10th clause of this Bill every person after a third conviction must be sentenced to seven years' penal servitude, and would be liable to police supervision for the rest of his life; and he thought some provision ought to be made to meet the case of brutal assaults upon the police. He quite agreed that some such Bill as this was necessary; but if they were to pass it in the present state of the House, it was necessary to be very cautious how they proceeded. It would be useless to press the motion of which he had given notice at that time of the session, but he should raise the points referred to in it after they got into committee.—Mr. G. HARDY said the main object was to provide some uniform system of inspection of habitual criminals throughout the country, and they were not legislating in panic, but after a great deal of consideration. The Bill certainly extended exceptional circumstances in the law, but it did not introduce novelties. It merely carried the principle of supervision from the holders of licences to other persons who were not getting their livings by honest means. Then as to the alleged innovation in the principles of English law, the proof of innocence had long been cast upon a class of offences in the trading districts. In the woollen and silk manufactures and many others, persons found in the possession of "waste" were obliged to give an account of how it came into their possession, and it was now only proposed to extend that principle to persons who had stamped themselves with a bad character. Discharged prisoners' aid societies did not exist in sufficient abundance to be entrusted with the proposed supervision, and these valuable institutions would lose all their influence if they ceased to be voluntary societies and became a department of the State. He was quite sure that the police would be only too glad to use them where they existed, for the heads of the police were anxious to be relieved from the incessant pressure of this surveillance, and would be glad to see criminals entering upon a career of honesty. It was his experience, derived not only from Ireland, but from the cases of licence-holders in England, that the police not only did not interfere with them, but assisted them in getting work. (Hear, hear.) In any reasonable proposal for the prevention of brutal assaults on the police he should be happy to assist his right hon. friend. —Mr. NEWDEGATE said he had done all he could to prevent the abolition of transportation, predicting the necessity, if that course was adopted, for arbitrary measures to deal with those criminals who under the old system underwent the most effectual means of reformation by separation from evil associations. That prediction was now fulfilled, for the effect of the present Bill was to create a servile class in this country, and it was a movement in the direction of despotism. —Sir G. JENKINSON looked upon the Bill as a very valuable Bill, and hoped they would now be allowed to go into committee. —Mr. HADFIELD expressed his entire disapproval of the Bill. For some years the tendency of legislation had been to decrease the severity of the law, but this Bill increased it. He should have been glad if the right hon. gentleman had moved the rejection of the Bill—he should have had much satisfaction in voting for that motion. —The House then went into committee on the Bill. On clause 4, Mr. STAPLETON proposed to leave out "whom he suspects," in order to insert "and any chief officer of police having reason to believe that any convict who is the holder of any such licence as aforesaid is getting a livelihood by dishonest means may authorise any constable or police officer, in writing, to take such convict into custody, and bring him before a justice of the peace." The amendment was agreed to. —Mr. M'MAHON moved to insert "if it shall appear from the facts proved before such magistrate that there are reasonable grounds for such suspicion." This amendment was also agreed to. —Sir G. JENKINSON moved a further amendment, giving power to the magistrate who did not choose to assume the responsibility of so acting to commit the holder of a licence for trial at the next quarter sessions. —Mr. BRUCE said he wished to relieve the apprehensions of the right hon. member for Oxford with regard to the danger of this Bill. He had obtained from the Chief Commissioner of Police the number of holders of licences in the metropolis to whom the Bill would apply, and he found that there were only twelve. —The amendment was agreed to. On clause 5, Mr. BRUCE said, with regard to the supervision of the police, which was so much objected to by the right hon. member for Oxford, he believed it had been of the greatest use to convicts, who had repeatedly acknowledged the kindness of the police. Besides, this clause got rid of a provision of the present law, which imposed on the convicts the necessity of reporting themselves to the police once a month, and which convicts had often asserted was productive of injury to them. —On clause 6, Mr. BRUCE said that this was the clause which provided for the registration of criminals to which the right hon. gentleman the member for Oxford objected. He put it to the House whether one of the greatest inconveniences that was now experienced was not that, unless by the accidental evidence of some policeman in the court, it was impossible to tell whether a person charged was an habitual criminal or not. It was not intended to register criminals for every light offence, but only in the graver cases, and he contended that such a system would be productive of the greatest good. —Mr. HENLEY opposed the clause as one that would seriously interfere with the chance of persons once convicted getting their living in an honest way afterwards. He also thought that it would cause great expense by rendering it necessary for police officers to visit different counties for the purpose of identifying prisoners, and he pointed out that there was already a system of registration in the gaols. —Mr. HARDY thought the word criminal should be put into the interpretation clause, as being persons who had committed certain offences named in the schedule.

He did not see that any harm could accrue by registering habitual criminals. —Mr. BRUCE repeated that it would only be those who committed grave offences. He explained that the registration would be something similar to that of convicts who had licences at present. He moved to substitute "criminals" for "convicts." —The amendment was agreed to. —Mr. BRUCE then moved to omit the words "holders of licences," and insert "all persons convicted of crime in England," which was also agreed to. The clause was then agreed to, as were clauses 7 and 8. Clause 9 was agreed to with amendments giving the judges discretionary power in cases of second conviction, and otherwise restricting supervision of persons who have been punished for criminal offences. Clause 10, relating to persons twice convicted of felony, was modified in the same spirit. —Mr. AMPHLETT complained of the hardship which would be inflicted if a person who had once been convicted of receiving stolen goods were in all future time compelled to prove his innocence if charged with a similar offence. He moved to insert words which would limit the onus of proof upon a prisoner to five years of the first offence. —Mr. BRUCE admitted the occasional hardship, but contended that the class of receivers ought to be guarded against in the most stringent manner possible. —After some discussion words were agreed to modifying the stringency of the clause.

THE CAREY-STREET SITE.

Mr. MONK asked the First Lord of the Treasury whether it was the intention of the Government to proceed forthwith with the erection of the New Law Courts on the Carey-street site, in accordance with the recommendation of the Select Committee. —Mr. GLADSTONE.—In answer to the question of my hon. friend I have to say that I do not think it possible for the Government to arrive at any positive decision, much less to take any positive step in relation to a document understood to proceed from a Select Committee, but not yet laid before the House, and which if laid before the House could not be considered along with the evidence. I am afraid at this period of the session my hon. friend's question is premature. (A laugh.)

PUBLIC COMPANIES.

RAILWAY COMPANIES.

Colchester and Stour Valley.—Dividend at the rate of 3l. 7s. per cent. per annum.
Great Northern and Western of Ireland.—A dividend of 3l. 3s. 4d. per cent. per annum be paid upon the ordinary stock held by the Midland Great Western, and 3l. 2s. 6d. per cent. per annum upon the other ordinary stock.
Lancashire and Yorkshire.—Dividend at the rate of 6½ per cent. per annum.
Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire.—Two per cent. dividend declared.
North Eastern.—Dividends: Berwick, 5½ per cent. per annum; York, 5½ per cent.; Leeds, 3½ per cent.; Carlisle, 7½ per cent.; Darlington, 8 per cent.

Ulster.—A dividend at the rate of 4½ per cent. per annum.

BANKS.

Birmingham Banking.—A dividend of 5 per cent.
Birmingham Town and District.—A dividend at the rate of 7½ per cent. per annum.
Bradford Old Bank.—A dividend of 1l. 2s. 6d. per share for the half year.
Central of London.—A dividend at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum.
London and County.—A dividend and bonus together, at the rate of 17 per cent. per annum.
Oriental Commercial Bank.—A dividend of 1s. 6d. in the pound, making 11s. 6d. in all, is payable to the creditors by Messrs. Cooper Brothers.

FINANCE, CREDIT, AND DISCOUNT COMPANIES.

Credit Foncier.—The half-year's report announces that no marked alteration in the company's affairs has occurred. A further debit to capital of 6706l. has been shown, owing to losses which, although made years ago, have only now been ascertained. The City offices debentures guarantee for 300,000l. has been got rid of without loss. Rigorous measures are to be taken against the ex-directors of the Chatham and Dover; and the claims against the former board of Credit Foncier have been arranged, but the arrangement requires the sanction of the meeting. If given, "it is the intention of the directors to recommend that 30,000l. of the amount shall be applied to the payment of a dividend for the half-year at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, and that the balance be carried forward as an aid to further dividends, or otherwise." With regard to the Millwall Docks Company, it is mentioned that this concern has not made the progress expected, but meanwhile "the income is stated to be sufficient to pay the interest on the debentures, if not upon the preference stock, and to be rapidly increasing." The Irrigation Company of France is spoken of more hopefully. The Consolidated Land Company of France is declared to be "in a very unsatisfactory, and indeed critical position." The Varna Railway and Belgian Public Works are spoken of favourably. The principal investments are as follows:—The Millwall Docks Company, 150,248l.; the Irrigation Company of France, 429,444l.; the Consolidated Land Company of France, 580,065l.; the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway, 831,342l.; the Varna and Rustchuk Railway, 673,256l.; the City of Milan Improvements Company, 335,888l.; and the Belgian Public Works Company, 229,698l.

Financial Corporation (Limited).—A further dividend of 3s. in the pound (making 14s. 6d. in all) is payable to the creditors by the official liquidator.

New Zealand Trust and Loan.—A dividend at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum.

Scottish Australian Investment.—A dividend at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum.

ASSURANCE COMPANIES.

Thames and Mersey Marine.—A dividend and bonus of 4s. per share.

MISCELLANEOUS COMPANIES.

Australian Agricultural.—A dividend of 7s. 6d. per share.

British Colonial Steamship.—A special general meeting is convened for the 12th August, to pass a resolution for a voluntary winding-up, and for the appointment of liquidators.

British and Irish Magnetic Telegraph.—A dividend at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum for the half year.

Croscome Chemical (Limited).—Vice-Chancellor Stuart has made a winding-up order.

London and St. Katharine Docks.—Two and a half per cent. per annum dividend.

Mediterranean Extension Telegraph.—Eight per cent. dividend on the preference shares.

Scottish Wagon.—A dividend at the rate of 12½ per cent. per annum.

Steam Biscuit and Flour (Limited).—Mr. W. J. White, the official liquidator, has announced that he has paid all the creditors in full, and is now prepared to refund 19s. 6d. per share to the contributors.

Thomas Adams and Co.—A 10 per cent. dividend.

Westminster Palace Hotel.—A dividend at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum.

ELECTION LAW.

It appears that the hire of court-houses and the reception of the judges for the trial of election petitions have cost 5000*l*. The amounts voted on account of the expenses of the trials of election petitions reach a total of 18,750*l*. It is explained that the 8000*l*. required by the education department represents the probable expense to 31st March 1870, of the commission to be appointed upon the passing of the Endowed Schools Bill.

ELECTION PETITIONS.—SOUTHAMPTON AND TAMWORTH.—Mr. Justice Willes attended on Monday at the judges' chambers to hear applications on election petitions. His Lordship last week heard an application in the Southampton petition, and a further application was made on the present occasion on the part of Mr. Hoare, the sitting member. On the former occasion Mr.
Justice Willes ordered 500*l*. out of the 1000*l*. deposit to be paid to Mr. Russell Gurney, M.P., on his taxed costs, but he could not make the order to Mr. Hoare, as his costs had not been taxed. It was intimated that next term the vexed question of costs on election petitions would be brought before the Court of Common Pleas. In the Tamworth election petition an application was made on the part of the petitioner for the deposit money. Mr. Justice Willes said he must have proof that the witnesses had been paid as provided by the Act. His Lordship made the order subject to the affidavit for the return of the deposit money.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

MISTAKE.—BILL TO RECTIFY.—DEMURRER
OVERRULED.—The plaintiff entered into a contract with the defendants to execute certain works for a gross sum. Appended to the contract was a schedule of quantities, in which the plaintiff had set out in detail the items making up the gross sum. Before the completion of the works the plaintiff discovered that there were several manifest mistakes in the schedule, and he thereupon filed a bill to have them rectified, alleging that they were known to the defendants' agents either at the date of the contract, or soon afterwards. To this bill the defendants demurred for want of equity. Demurrer overruled, with costs: (Neill v. Midland Railway Company, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 864. Rolls.)

The death of Mr. W. S. Rutter, the coroner for Salford, is announced. The deceased gentleman, who was seventy-seven, had held the office for thirty-seven years.

The Master of the Rolls has delivered judgment in the case of a petition which the Incorporated Law Society of Liverpool had presented to the court, complaining of the dishonest conduct of Mr.
Joseph Best, a solicitor practising at Liverpool, towards a client. The case was heard on a previous day, Mr. Wickens being counsel for the petitioners, and Mr. Ince for Mr. Best. It appeared that Mr. Best had been employed by a gentleman who died in 1866, and afterwards by his sister as administratrix. She required him to make out his bill of costs against her. The bill was subjected to the scrutiny of the taxing-master, and it was discovered that Mr. Best had given no credit for two payments of 275*l*. and 191*l*. which he had received. Lord Romilly said he was of opinion that the evidence established the allegations of the petition. He could not pass over the case without reprehension. Mr. Best must be suspended from practising for ten years. It would be open, however, to Mr. Best to lay before the court any facts which he might think would modify the judgment now delivered.

At the Devon assizes Mr. Justice Lush disposed of a singular case of forgery, the first one of the kind he said which had ever come before him.
The accused, William Downes, was charged with forging and uttering a promissory note for 150*l*.
It was a singular document, made out as follows:
—"1.5.0.0.0.0. 1867 Ap. 23 Promise to pay to G.
Harvey the sum of 1.5.0*l*. Value Receive Being part of a Mortgage of 6.5.0.0.0.0. on 57 and 58 Higher un-
St. Torquay. Wm. Downes Joseph Kentisbeer—Witness Wm. Holland." The prisoner received from Mr. Harvey, the prosecutor, 150*l*. as part of a mortgage on 650*l*. on the property in question, and on the security of the note. It turned out that the signature of Joseph Kentisbeer was a forgery. Yet, strange to say, Mr. Kentisbeer, when sued for the value on the note, paid 175*l*., the debt and costs. The point raised was whether after this payment the prisoner could be prosecuted. The judge, after conferring with Mr.

Justice Keating, ruled against the prisoner, who was found guilty of uttering the note, but on account of the peculiarity of the case his Lordship inflicted a light punishment—one month's imprisonment.

CHANCERY DIVIDENDS.—The following has been addressed to the editor of the Times:—"Sir, —Your announcement in the Times of to-day that we are to receive the comfort of having our Government dividends transmitted to us by post induces me to entreat you to favour me by giving utterance to a misery of my life upon a cognate subject—Chancery dividends. Nearly forty years ago my father lent some money, which authorised him to receive dividends in Chancery, little dreaming when he did so that he was entailing on me, his eldest son and chief executor, a veritable nuisance to last to the end of my life. During my father's life I used to receive the dividends for him personally by power of attorney. On his decease we, the executors, had to petition the court to be allowed to receive the dividends, the cost of which was, I think, about 16*l*. For a series of years the executors were obliged to go together to receive these half-yearly dividends, in that respect differing from the Bank of England, and giving more unnecessary trouble. This continued until bodily infirmity hindered my mounting the stone and iron stairs and bridge in Chancery-lane, when we, the executors, gave a power of attorney to our bankers to receive for us, which power is supplemented at each dividend with separate certificates that we are both alive, for the death of either would necessitate another petition, and I presume another 16*l*.
bill of costs, which my executors in due time will discover. This mode went on until further infirmity prevented me from attending a police-court to obtain the certificate, and I am reduced to be a trouble and annoyance to some friends I have in the magistracy of the county, asking them to visit my chamber and sign the certificate. I hate asking it. These gentlemen are above me in rank and fortune, and nothing but sheer necessity warrants my asking such a favour from them.
Now, Sir, it is utterly hopeless to expect aid or reformation in this matter save from the Lord Chancellor himself. The esprit de corps of the lawyers, and waifs and strays of which they have long been the recipients, render hope of assistance from them very futile. There really is no cause in this case why the dividends should not be sent to the recipients as railway companies send them.
Our numbers are few, and I imagine we all have banker's books. We have now a Lord Chancellor who is believed to be friendly to the commonalty.
He may emulate the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and give relief also to us in our own Court of Chancery. The bill of costs I do not care about: it is plucking a feather from me, and does not hurt me much; others may feel it more keenly, but the annoyance is detestable, in which forlorn hope I entreat you, Sir, to give insertion to this, and help, if you can,—AN EXECUTOR."

THE BENCH AND THE BAR.

MIDDLESEX SESSIONS.

Monday, Aug. 2.

(Before Mr. Serjeant Cox.)

Arrest of Mr. Brierley, the barrister—Scene in court.

Mr. Brierley, the barrister, who had taken his seat near the bench, rose and said: My Lord, will you permit me to make a complaint of one of the officers of this court?

Mr. Serjeant Cox.—What is your motion?

Mr. Brierley.—My Lord, I demand an audience.

Mr. Serjeant Cox.—What is your motion?

Mr. Brierley, raising his voice and staring wildly at the judge.—Your Lordship is aware that I have been robbed of my stones. A policeman took them.

Mr. Serjeant Cox.—I cannot interfere.

Mr. Brierley.—You can; you have the jurisdiction.

Mr. Serjeant Cox.—I cannot have the business of the court interrupted. If you do not desist I shall have to adopt another course.

Mr. Brierley.—You dare not. I dare anyone of you. Recollect what happened to the Lord Chief Justice of England. He was impeached before the House of Lords. You tell me that you have no jurisdiction in your own court; that a policeman in your court you have no power over.

Mr. Serjeant Cox.—It is for a magistrate.

Mr. Brierley.—Order me back my property. I have been robbed of my property. The policeman has got my stones.

Mr. Serjeant Cox: I shall order you into custody.

Mr. Brierley: You dare not. No one dare.

Mr. Serjeant Cox: Remove him and take him into custody.

Mr. Brierley (shouting at the pitch of his voice): None dare; none dare. No one dare.

The scene in court now became a painful one. Mr. Horsall, the beadle of the court, went towards where Mr. Brierley was seated and caught hold of him, and he resisted violently. Three other officers then approached them, seized Mr. Brierley, and lifted him off his seat. He shrieked and shouted "Are you all cowards. This is Judge Jeffreys again. Where is coward Ribton? Will no one resent this outrage?" While he was yelling the four officers dragged him out of the bar, and the barristers present said "Gently, gently, gently." The poor old gentleman's wig fell off, and it was trampled under foot. Everybody in court, except the judge, rose and tried to get a glimpse at the long grey beard of the prisoner as he was being carried by his head and his heels through the crowded crowd. He had to be carried through the whole of the court, and as he was being taken down to the cells he was heard shrieking, "Cowards! Outrage! You dare not."

Cooper then addressed the court, and said that there was no one in court who could but view with pity the scene of to-day. Mr. Brierley had only a sister, who allowed him a small weekly sum to support himself, and that was all that he had to live upon. Although she allowed him all that she could, he did nothing but attack her for her penury. The time had now come when something ought to be done. It would be well if something were done, and the poor gentleman were got into one of those charities which exist in the metropolis. About his state there could be no doubt after what had occurred that morning.

The judge said that it was intended to take a step of that kind. Two medical gentlemen would see Mr. Brierley, now that he was in custody.

Mr. Cooper then said that he was afraid that if that were not done mischief would occur, for he had seen Mr. Brierley pursuing boys in the street with a big stick, and he was very violent. The affair of the policeman taking the stones this morning was brought about in consequence of Mr. Brierley's bringing two very large stones to the court, and it was thought dangerous to leave them with him.

The subject then dropped, and it was rumoured that Mr. Brierley was to be sent to Colney Hatch asylum. He is at present in the House of Detention.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

Friday, July 30.

(Before Mr. Commissioner HOLROYD.)

Re WILLIAM GILL.

The bankrupt, who was described as of 94, Talbot-road, Bayswater, lately of 40, Chancery-lane, barrister-at-law, applied to pass his examination and for an order of discharge. He thus states the cause of his inability to meet his engagements: From having been disbarred by the Benchers of the Inner Temple and precluded from following his profession for a period of about eighteen months, from Nov. 1867 to March 1869, and from losses sustained by the holding shares in public companies now in liquidation as trustee for other persons." The list of creditors includes the liquidators of the Blakely Ordnance Company for £900l., the total amount due to the general body of the creditors being 14,898l. The assets are thus returned: Good debts, 140l.; property surrendered to the assignees, 60l.; leaving a balance of deficiency of 14,698l.

H. Linklater, who appeared for the assignee, said he had received a letter from his client, instructing him not to offer any opposition.

Mr. Commissioner HOLROYD said that at present no information had been given in regard to the deficiency which appeared on the accounts. His Honour asked for an explanation of that item.

Linklater said the deficiency arose mainly in consequence of liabilities on account of the Blakely Ordnance Company. He believed those liabilities brought the bankrupt here.

In reply to the learned COMMISSIONER,

Mr. Gill explained that the shares were placed in his name during arrangements with Mr. Kent, and in the mean time the company went into liquidation. The Master of the Rolls held that, although he was a bare trustee, yet that, as his name appeared on the register, he was liable for calls; and this was one of the causes of his failure.

After some further explanation with reference to another company in which the bankrupt held shares,

His Honour said that, in the absence of opposition, the bankrupt might pass and receive his order of discharge.

Whitehall, July 29. — The Queen has been pleased to direct letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal granting the dignity of Knight of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland unto James Cockle, Esq., Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the colony of Queensland.

Mr. Murphy, junior counsel of the Munster Circuit, died suddenly at Cork. He had attended circuit, and was in the courts up to a short time before his decease. The cause of death was an affection of the brain.

An action for libel has been commenced by Mr. A. N. Laughton, a barrister, of Douglas, Isle of Man, against the bishop of the diocese. It appears that some months since there was a dispute between the bishop and the Rev. W. Braddan as to the right of presentation, and the bishop caused a Bill to be introduced into the Manx Legislature, which was opposed by Mr. Laughton, who spoke strongly of the bishop. His Lordship, in a charge just delivered, spoke of Mr. Laughton's "slandorous statements," "uncharitable imputations," and "calumnious assertions," adding that Mr. Laughton had "borne false witness against his neighbour." Hence the action. The damages are laid at 1000l.

DEATH OF MR. HENRY LEIGH TRAFFORD. — Mr. Trafford, the stipendiary magistrate of the Salford hundred division of Lancashire, died on Saturday, in Wales, where he had gone to reside for a short time for the benefit of his health. During the month of June he took holidays because of ill health, but returned much recruited in strength. A relapse occurred about ten days ago, when the county magistracy granted him leave of absence till the 12th Aug., and he had gone to Wales to spend the interval. He has held the appointment of stipendiary magistrate twenty-five years. Mr. Trafford was occasionally a little eccentric in his manner, but was an able magistrate, and his decisions could rarely be taken exception to. At the Salford borough court on Monday morning, his brother magistrates passed a vote expressing regret at his loss, and stating that the Bench desired to record its high sense of the impartiality and ability which he had uniformly displayed in the discharge of the important duties of his office. The resolution also expressed sympathy with Mrs. Trafford in her bereavement. At the county police-court, Strangeways, a similar resolution was also recorded by the county magistrates.

MAGISTRATE AND PARISH LAWYER.

READINGS OF NEW STATUTES.

THE WINE AND BEERHOUSE ACT 1869. (a)

We have already referred to some of the questions which arise upon the 15th section. Clerks to magistrates and others interested in the matter are already inquiring if the clause will prohibit a beerhouse keeper from entertaining his friends gratuitously, and from supplying refreshments to "lodgers" and "travellers" during such times as he was lawfully permitted to entertain such person respectively prior to the passing of the Act under consideration. These points are left in considerable doubt, and must eventually be determined by one of the Superior Courts.

As to friends entertained gratuitously we have already observed that although in verbal strictness the section might include them, yet such a construction would not probably be supported.

As to "lodgers" and "travellers" the section is not altogether free from doubt. It enacts very plainly that "if any person shall suffer beer or cider to be drunk in his house at any time during which the house ought by law to be closed, he shall be liable, &c." It may be argued that this section will prevent lodgers and travellers being served by beerhouse keepers during the prohibited hours on the following grounds: 1. That inasmuch as the section repeals by implication all prior enactments inconsistent with it, the exemptions in former Acts in favour of lodgers and travellers are repealed. 2. That it was the intention of the Legislature to close beerhouses entirely during the prohibited hours, and to prevent drinking therein by lodgers and travellers as well as other persons. 3. That lodgers and travellers will still be entitled to obtain wine in refreshment houses, and refreshments in licensed inns and taverns as heretofore.

On the other hand, it may be contended very forcibly that the section does not extend to "lodgers" or "travellers" for the following reasons: First, that in the face of previous legislation, if it had been intended to take away the privileges of lodgers and travellers, such parties would have been expressly named. Secondly, that by the second Schedule certain enactments which are inconsistent with this Act are expressly repealed, and if it had been intended to repeal the clauses in former Acts in favour of lodgers and travellers, such clauses would also have been expressly repealed. Thirdly, that it would be a great hardship upon lodgers and travellers if they were not permitted to obtain refreshment in beerhouses during such times respectively as they may now do so by law, and that their rights cannot be taken away merely by implication.

Although there is much to be said on both sides of the question, we are, after further consideration, rather inclined to the opinion that lodgers and travellers will not be held to be included in this very vague and sweeping clause, and, therefore, that so far as such persons are concerned the law remains as it was prior to the passing of the Act.

If sect. 15 is difficult of interpretation, sect. 16 is equally so. It is as follows: "Where any person licensed under any of the said recited Acts to sell beer, cider, or wine by retail, or any person licensed under the said Act of the ninth year of the reign of King George the Fourth, is convicted of keeping his house open for the sale of or of selling beer, cider, wine, spirits, or any other exciseable liquor, or of suffering the same to be drunk in such house at any time during which such house ought, by law, to be closed, any person (other than the servants or inmates of such house) present in such house at such time shall, unless he account for his presence to the satisfaction of the justices having cognizance of the case, be liable on summary conviction to a penalty not exceeding forty shillings for each offence."

It will be seen that although sect. 15 does not extend to wine, sect. 16 extends not only to beer-houses, but to winehouses, and also to alehouses licensed under 9 Geo. 4, c. 61. It is important to observe that it applies only where a conviction has taken place for unlawfully keeping open, or selling, or suffering beer, &c., to be drunk under sect. 15. Of course the 15th section cannot be extended to either wine, or to inns or taverns by any implication to be drawn from the 16th clause.

The section under discussion, although entirely novel, is in accordance with the spirit of modern legislation. The principle involved is just, but the wording of the section is such as to render it almost impossible to prophesy the extent to which it will be carried. The intention undoubtedly is that persons who by their presence are countenancing the commission of an offence, shall be treated as particeps criminis with the keeper of the house. Some curious queries, however, arise upon the section. The following are two of them:—First, Does it extend to guests supplied gratuitously, or to "lodgers" and "travellers" who may be present? As to beerhouses, the answer to this query will probably depend upon the construction which is put upon sect. 15, but it may be forcibly argued that the section extends to the above-mentioned parties, as "servants and inmates" are expressly exempted from its operation. As to winehouses and inns and taverns, it is clear that lodgers and travellers may be present therein during such times as they may respectively be served with refreshments. Secondly, Does it extend to informers and to police constables who enter houses in plain clothes for the purpose, not of cautioning the keeper of the house, and thus preventing a breach of the law, but of detecting him in the commission of an offence? Will these persons fall into the trap which they attempt to set for others, and share in the punishment of their victims? The only persons exempted are the "servants and inmates of the house." But probably an officer of police will be able to "account for his presence to the satisfaction of the justices."

It will be observed that this section cannot come into operation until the licensed person has been actually convicted, and it will be necessary to allege the conviction in the information against a person present, within the meaning of the clause, and to prove the conviction at the hearing.

The exemption of persons who account for their presence to the satisfaction of the justices having cognizance of the case, cannot be regarded as satisfactory. Penal enactments ought to be clear, and offences well defined. The law ought to be certain, and administered in like manner throughout the kingdom. What one bench of justices may consider a good explanation may be looked upon by another bench as unsatisfactory, and vice versa, thus rendering the law uncertain, and exposing it to just criticism.

The 17th section provides that in the following cases; that is to say (1), where any person is convicted of an offence against the tenor or conditions of a licence granted to him under any of the recited Acts, or of an offence for which a penalty is imposed by any of the recited Acts; (2) where any person is convicted of an offence against the tenor of an alehouse licence, if any previous conviction or convictions since the passing of this Act for any of the said offences be proved against him, the offence of which he is last convicted shall be deemed to be a second or third offence, as the case may be; provided that the said previous conviction or convictions did not take place within the five years next preceding. The words "said offences" above used doubtless refer to offences under the 15th and 16th clauses of the present Act, and not to the offences alluded to in the first and second parts of the section under consideration. It is scarcely necessary to observe that previous convictions must be proved.

By sect. 18 it is provided that houses or shops licensed for the sale of table beer (24 & 25 Vict. c. 21, s. 3), and all premises on which any person is authorised by virtue of an additional licence to sell beer by retail (26 & 27 Vict. c. 33, s. 1), and all persons holding such licences, shall be subject and liable to all and every the regulations, restrictions, inspections, and penalties, as to times of opening and closing of houses and conduct of persons conducting and carrying on the trade to which beerhouses and persons licensed to keep the same are subject and liable under the several statutes relating thereto. From this and previous sections it is clear that one of the objects of the statute is to place all kinds of houses where beer is sold under the same discipline and penalties.

The 19th clause has already been commented upon to some extent. It enacts that "where on the 1st of May, 1869, a licence under any of the said recited Acts is in force with respect to any house or shop for the sale by retail therein of beer, cider, or wine, to be consumed on the premises, it shall not be lawful for the justices to refuse an application for a certificate for the sale of beer, cider, or wine, to be consumed on the premises in respect of such house or shop, except upon one or more of the grounds upon which an application for a certificate under this Act in respect of a licence for the sale of beer, cider, or wine, not to be consumed on the premises, may be refused in accordance with this Act:" (see sect. 8.)

To this section there are three provisos which are as follows:—"1. Where a person licensed in respect of such house or shop to sell therein by retail beer, cider, or wine, to be consumed on the premises is convicted, after the passing of this Act, of more than one offence against the tenor of his licence, or of more than one offence for which any penalty is imposed by any of the said recited Acts, the justices by whom such person is convicted may, if they think fit, order that the house or shop shall, for the purposes of this section, be thenceforth deemed to be a house or shop in respect of which no licence for the sale by retail of beer, cider, or wine, was in force at the time of the passing of this Act. 2. Every holder of such licence shall, when required by any two justices, be bound to produce his licence under a penalty not exceeding 10*l.*, to be levied in default of payment, on the order of such justices, by distraint upon his goods and chattels. 3. No conviction under the powers and provisions of this Act shall be deemed to affect any licence in force as aforesaid, unless the justices by whom such conviction was adjudged shall have directed their clerk to record, and the clerk shall have recorded on the licence the fact of that conviction."

It has been customary for the summons served upon a person for an offence under the Alehouse, Beerhouse, and Refreshment House Acts to contain a notice to produce the licence. The 2nd proviso above mentioned requires the holder of a licence to produce it when required by any two justices, and to meet this it is suggested that the summons shall still require the licence to be produced under the penalty of 10*l.*, but that it shall be signed by two justices instead of one as heretofore.

The Act is not to affect: First, the privileges heretofore enjoyed by any university in England, or the chancellor, masters, and scholars, of the same, or their successors. Secondly, the privileges heretofore enjoyed by the masters, wardens, freemen, and commonalty of the vintners of the City of London, except as to those freemen of the said vintners who have obtained their freedom by redemption only. Thirdly, the privileges heretofore enjoyed by the mayor or burgesses of the City of St. Albans, in the county of Hertford, or their successors. Fourthly, the right of any person who is duly authorised by justices of the peace to keep a common inn, alehouse, or victualling house to take out any excise licence. Fifthly, the grant of any occasional licence, or the power of any person duly authorised by the Excise to sell beer, spirits, or wine at any fair or public races.

The following parts of former Acts are repealed (sect. 21 and the second schedule):—

11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 64. So much of section 2 as requires the grant of an excise licence under the provisions of the Act to be made within ten days after application has been made for the same.

4 & 5 Will. 4 c. 85, sects. 2, 3, 8; and 9, 3 & 4 Vict. c. 61, ss. 2 and 3; so much of sect. 4 as enacts that in any extra-parochial place, or places where no rates are made or collected for the relief of the poor, a person applying for a licence shall produce to and deposit and leave with the proper officer of Excise who granted such licence a certificate in writing, signed by two inhabitant householders of the township or place, certifying that the party applying is the real resident in and occupier of the dwelling house sought to be licensed; and also certifying the true and real annual value of the same with the premises occupied therewith, according to the best of their judgment and belief: (ss. 5 and 6.)

23 Vict. c. 27, ss. 13, 14, and 15; 24 & 25 Vict. c. 21; so much of sect. 3 as renders it unnecessary that the person applying for a licence shall produce any certificate.

NORFOLK CIRCUIT.—BEDFORD SUMMER ASSIZES.

Friday, July 23.

(Before Lord Chief Justice COCKBURN.)

REG. v. MANN.

Rape—Indecent assault—Procedure.

Upon an indictment for rape the evidence failed to support that charge, but there was abundant proof of an indecent assault.

Held, per Cockburn, C. J. that the proper course was to direct the jury to acquit the prisoner of the offence charged, and to prefer an indictment for the minor offence of indecent assault. As the grand jury had been discharged he bound over the prisoner to answer an indictment for indecent assault at the sessions.

The prisoner, Charles Mann, was indicted for a rape on one Sarah Stringer at Maulden, on the 14th May 1869. Daniel Smith was also indicted for feloniously aiding and abetting the said Charles Mann in the commission of the said felony. The evidence against Smith was very slight, and the Chief Justice at an early stage charged the jury with respect to him, and he was acquitted, being then admitted as a witness for the prisoner Mann. The evidence against Mann failed to substantiate the charge of rape and by the direction of the learned judge, he was acquitted, but as the grand jury were discharged the Lord Chief Justice ordered him to enter into recognizances to appear to answer a charge of indecent assault at the next sessions.

Abdy for the prosecution; Merewether for the prisoner.

In the case of Reg. v. Dungay, 4 F. & F. 99, and note thereon, it was held that after an acquittal for rape that it was competent to prefer a charge for assault, and by the procedure in this case it seems that a charge of indecent assault may be preferred after an acquittal for rape.

CLERKENWELL POLICE COURT.

Friday, July 30.

LIABILITY OF ASSIGNEES—LOCAL RATES.

Mr. Charles Cheston, manager of the National Bank at the Camden-town branch, was summoned, at the instance of the vestry of the parish of St. Mary, Islington, to show cause why he, being the trade assignee of Mr. Spearing, now a bankrupt, and at the time of his bankruptcy the owner of the houses, 40, 41, 42, and 43A, Hungerford-road, Camden-road, Islington, does neglect to pay to the said vestry the sum of 68*l.* 2*s.* 4*d.*, the fair apportionment of the expenses towards the paving and widening the roadway of Hungerford-road.

Mr. Dewey, chief clerk to the vestry, supported the complaint. The defendant did not appear, nor was he represented by solicitor or counsel.

Mr. BARKER said it was a very difficult case, and remarking that he was of opinion he had no power to make the order on the defendant, suggested that the case had better be adjourned to see if a settlement could not be come to between the parties.

Mr. Dewey, on the case being called on, said no arrangement had been come to between the defendant and the vestry, and therefore he had to ask that the case might be allowed to proceed, and that an order for the payment of the money claimed, with costs—for the vestry had been put to much expense, by having to attend at the court with witnesses and books, through the defendant's neglect—might be made.

Mr. BARKER remarked that even if the case were gone on with, he had still a doubt whether he could make an order on the defendant, who was not the owner, but only the trade assignee of a bankrupt's estate.

Mr. Dewey said he had come prepared to meet that objection, and called the attention of the court to the duties and responsibilities of a bankrupt's trade assignee, as laid down by Petersdorff in his work on the Bankruptcy Laws. Without that he had no doubt about the matter, for the words of the 250th section of the 18 & 19 Vict. were evidently intended to meet such a case as this, and not only this court, but all the other courts in the metropolis, had acted upon them. By that section it was enacted, that the word "owner" should mean the person for the time being receiving the rack rent of the lands, or in connection with which the same word is used, whether on his own account or as agent or trustee for any other person, or who would receive the same if such lands or premises were let out at a rack rent. He contended that that section gave the magistrate power to make the order asked, and there could not be the least doubt that if the defendant received the rack rent of the houses in question—and it was admitted by himself that he was the trade assignee, and therefore the only person entitled to receive them—he was to all intents and purposes the owner.

Mr. Alexander asked if the defendant had given any reason why he did not pay the money.

Mr. Dewey replied that he had given none. Before coming to the court a clerk from the defendant had been to the offices of the vestry, and had offered to compromise the matter by paying a portion of the sum demanded, but as the acceptance of it would have been grossly unfair to the other owners of property in the same road, it had been declined, and the clerk had been informed that the vestry would take all proper steps to compel compliance with the demand.

Mr. BARKER: You may take the order for what it is worth.

Mr. Alexander: Recollect, if any trespass is committed in the execution of the warrant of distress, the vestry will be liable, not the magistrate.

Mr. Dewey said care would be taken in that matter. He then applied for costs, remarking that the defendant had put the vestry to all the trouble and expense that he could.

Mr. BARKER, again remarking that Mr. Dewey might take the order for what it was worth, said he would allow the vestry 2*l.* 6*s.* for costs.

The matter then terminated.

DOGS.—In the first quarter of the year 1869 381,476 dog licences were issued by the Post Office in Great Britain, 340,613 in England and Wales, and 40,863 in Scotland.

Capt. Coote, the high sheriff of Monaghan, has been superseded by the Lord-Lieutenant, in consequence of not appointing another sub-sheriff after the jury panel at the Spring Assizes had been quashed for partiality.

ROYAL SOCIETY FOR PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.—The forty-fifth annual meeting of the friends and supporters of the above society was held at Willis's Rooms, under the presidency of the Earl of Harrowby. Mr. Colam the secretary, read a long report, detailing the operations of the society during the past year, which have been of a most extensive and satisfactory character; 1200 convictions had been obtained by the society against persons guilty of cruelty to animals, mostly in the case of horses. The attention of the society had also been directed to the transit of cattle and poultry by railway, to the shearing of sheep in cold weather, to the cropping of dogs' ears, to the muzzling of dogs in hot weather, &c., and many modifications of the existing evils had been effected. By the efforts of the society the practice of vivisection, once so prevalent in France, had almost ceased in that country. The continental and colonial societies, acting in co-operation with this society, were in active operation, and several societies had been formed in the United States to promote the object sought by the society in England, and donations to the amount of 260*l.* had been received during the year, and the subscriptions amounted to nearly 3000*l.* The chairman said he felt the work carried on by the society was beneficial alike to animals and to mankind. The Bishop of Gloucester, Earl Romney, the Rev. Prebendary Jackson, Capt. Bethune, and several other gentlemen having addressed the meeting, the report was adopted, and a vote of thanks to the chairman concluded the proceedings.

EXTRAORDINARY SCENE IN A COURT.—A very unusual occurrence was witnessed in the Dundee Small Debt Court, at which Sheriff Smith presided. While the sheriff was giving judgment in a case, a person in the back of the court-room commenced to speak in a loud voice, and soon became so demonstrative that his Lordship was quite unable to proceed. It appeared that the excited individual was William Ogilvy, fisher, who had been on several occasions convicted of selling meat unfit for human food. The macer entreated Ogilvy to leave the court, but he persistently declined, proceeded to address the sheriff in violent language, and conducted himself with great indecorum, until taken into custody and brought to the bar. The Sheriff: What is your name?—Ogilvy: It is William Ogilvy, the renowned tink. I have been before you often; you ken me fine.—The sheriff then asked the clerk to read the sentence, which he did as follows:—"A man in court, who gives his name as William Ogilvy, having interrupted the proceedings of the court, being in a state of intoxication, the sheriff-substitute finds him guilty of contempt of court; therefore sentences and adjudges him to be imprisoned in the prison of Dundee for ten days from this date, and grants warrant to the officers of court to conduct him to the said prison accordingly." Ogilvy: Then I will go; but mind, I am not drunk. An action to which Ogilvy was a party was called at a subsequent stage of the proceedings, but, in consequence of what had taken place, was continued till next court.—Dundee Advertiser.

RECITALS.

140. Recital of a mortgage of leaseholds to building society.

Whereas, by an indenture dated, &c., and made between the said A. B. of the one part, and C. D., E. F., and G. H., trustees of the Benefit Building Society, of the other part, after reciting that the said A. B. was a member of the said society, and as such entitled to receive out of the funds thereof the sum of £ , in respect of shares held by him therein, on giving the security in respect thereof required by its rules. It was witnessed that, in consideration of £ then paid by the said trustees out of the funds of the said society to the said A. B., the premises in the said indenture of lease, particularly mentioned and described, with the appurtenances, were assigned unto the said trustees, their executors, administrators, and assigns, for the residue of the said term of years, subject to the rents and covenants in the said lease reserved and contained upon trust for the said A. B., his executors, administrators, and assigns, so long as he or they should duly make and pay the said subscription moneys, fines, and payments, and observe and perform the rules and regulations made payable or prescribed in and by the rules of the said society, or any other rule or rules thereof for the time being subsisting in respect of the said shares then held by the said A. B. as aforesaid, and of any other share or shares which he, his executors, administrators, or assigns should or might thereafter purchase or hold in the said society, in respect whereof an advance or advances, evidenced by a memorandum, indorsed upon those presents, and signed by him or them, should thereafter be made out of the funds of the said society, on security of the said premises.

141. Recital of a memorandum of further charge to building society.

Whereas by a memorandum dated, &c., indorsed on the said indenture of mortgage, and signed by the said A. B., he charged the premises with the payment of £ to be made in respect of other shares (which he had since purchased and then held) according to the rules of the said society, in addition to the payments to be made in respect of the said before-mentioned shares.

142. Recital of a contract for sale of freeholds in consideration of annuity.

Whereas the said A. B. has agreed with the said C. D. for the absolute sale to him of the hereditaments hereinafter particularly described and the freehold and inheritance thereof in fee simple in possession free from incumbrances in consideration of the annual sum or yearly rent-charge of £ to be limited to the said A. B. for his life, and to be secured to him as hereinafter mentioned.

143. Recital of a bond given as collateral security.

Whereas by a bond or deed poll dated, &c., under the hands and seals of the said A. B. and C. D., the said A. B. as principal, and the said C. D. as surety, became jointly and separately bound to the said E. F. in the sum of £ , conditioned to be void on the repayment to the said E. F. of £ advanced and lent by him to the said A. B., upon the deposit, by way of securities, of two policies of life assurance, which were thereby charged with the payment of the said sum of £ and interest, after the rate and in manner therein mentioned.

144. Recital of indebtedness on award.

Whereas, the said A. B. is indebted to the said C. D., upon an award made by Y. Z., on a submission made by them to his award concerning certain matters in difference between them, and upon which reference the said Y. Z., on the day of 18 , awarded that the said A. B. should pay to the said C. D. £ , with interest thereon after the rate of £ per cent. per annum from the date of the said award until payment; and there is also due from the said A. B. to the said C. D. £ paid for the said award.

145. Recital of a deposit of deeds.

Whereas, the said A. B., on the day of 18 , deposited the title deeds of the said piece of land, messuage, and hereditaments with the said C. D., as security for £ and interest.

146. Recital of an order in bankruptcy for sale. (a)

Whereas, by an order made, &c., in the said Court of Bankruptcy, before Mr. Commissioner in the matter of a motion by the said A. B., the court ordered and found that the said A. B. was equitable mortgagee of the hereditaments hereinafter described, and that the same should be sold by auction, in one or more lots, and that if found expedient that the same should be sold by private treaty, and that the money to arise from such sale or sales should be applied in the first place in payment of the costs, charges, and expenses of the sale, and then in payment and satisfaction of the debt due to the said A. B. on taking the accounts therein mentioned.

147. Recital of an agreement that purchase-money should be paid to mortgagees in part satisfaction of their debt.

Whereas upon the treaty for the said sale it was agreed that the said sum of £ , should be paid to the said A. B. and C. D. in part discharge of the said principal sum and interest owing to them as aforesaid, and that they should join in these presents in manner hereinafter appearing.

148. Recital of mortgagees having consented to release land.

Whereas the said A. B. and C. D. being satisfied that the other hereditaments comprised in the said indenture of mortgage are a sufficient security for the whole of the principal money and interest intended to be thereby secured, have consented that the said sum of £ , shall be paid to the said E. F., and have agreed to join in these presents in manner hereinafter appearing.

149. Recital of an auction sale of leaseholds by executors.

Whereas the said A. B. and C. D. in pursuance of the said recited will, advertised the tenant's interest in the unexpired residue of the said term in the premises for sale by public auction, at , on the day of 18 , at which sale the said E. F. became the purchaser thereof, at the price of £ , and thereupon paid £ to the said A. B. and C. D., by way of deposit and in part payment of the said purchase-money, leaving a balance of £ due in respect thereof.

150. Recital of a purchase having been made for joint benefit.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

VENDOR AND PURCHASER.—MISTAKE IN PARTICULARS OF SALE.—The owner of an estate, consisting of a manor-house and thirty-five acres of land, put up for sale by auction the whole estate (except one small plot, within 100 yards from the manor-house, containing about a rood) in lots, one of which comprised the manor-house, and the rest were building lots. The lots put up for sale were coloured on the plan annexed to the particulars of sale, and the adjoining lands had on them the owners' names, but the excepted plot was neither coloured nor had on it the name of any owner, so that on a cursory inspection of the plan it might appear to form part of some adjoining land which had on it its owner's name. By the conditions of sale it was stipulated that covenants should be entered into restraining the building on the estate of any house to be used as a public-house or for any trade, &c. B. purchased the lot containing the manor-house, and, alleging that he had been misled by the plan, refused to complete his purchase unless the vendor would enter into the restrictive building covenants, not only as to the lots put up for sale, but also as to the excepted plot. On a bill by the vendor for specific performance: Held, that the purchaser having been misled by the particulars of sale and the plan into the belief that that no part of the vendor's property would be exempted from the restrictive covenants, the vendor must either enter into such covenants as to the excepted plot or must have his bill dismissed, and that, in either case he must pay the costs of the suit: (Bascomb v. Beckwith, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 862. M. R.)

REGISTRY OF LAND.—Mr. Mordaunt writes to the Times:—"Sir,—As it would seem, from the discussion in the House of Commons on Thursday, on the vote for this office, that there is some misunderstanding as to the amount of its business, I should be obliged if you would publish the subjoined extract from a paper lately furnished by this office to the Land Transfer Commission. The amount of fees received in this office was also wrongly stated in the House. The fees received in stamps, according to a return of the Stamp-office, from the 10th Jan. 1868 to the 10th Jan. 1869, amounted to 1648l. 5s.; and from the 10th Jan. 1869 to the 10th July, to 721l. 15s.:—There are now about 710 separate registered estates with indefeasible titles on the register, and the original value of the property brought under the operation of the Act is about 4,700,000l., but much of the land being building property, its value is constantly increasing. The number of registered dealings with registered property is now about 1210, and the aggregate consideration for the same 3,000,000l.; 241 of these dealings, comprising transfers, mortgages, &c., the consideration for which exceeded half a million, took place since the 9th Jan. last, up to which date a return has already been made to the Commission."

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

WINDING-UP.—PAYMENT OF DIVIDEND ON PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST.—Dividends are to be paid to creditors whose debts carry interest upon the amount due for principal and interest at the time of the winding-up, and not upon interest due since that time. If there is a surplus the amount will be taken as in an administration suit, and the dividends will be applied, first, to interest due at the date of the declaration of dividend, and then to reduction of the principal: (Re The Humber Ironworks, &c., Company, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 859. L.J.J.)

RAILWAY ABANDONMENT.—PRACTICE.—A petition to wind-up an abandoned railway can be presented only by a shareholder: (Re North Kent, &c., Railway Company, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 867. V.C.J.)

PASSENGER'S LUGGAGE.—LIABILITY FOR LOSS ON ANOTHER LINE.—Sect. 7 of the Railway and

Canal Traffic Act (17 & 18 Vict. c. 31) is to be read in connection with sect. 2, and applies only to lines "belonging to or worked by" the companies who undertake to carry. A railway company may, therefore, make any stipulations it pleases as to the receiving, forwarding, and delivering of traffic beyond the limits of the lines belonging to or worked by it; and the special contract containing such stipulations need not be signed by the person with whom the company contracts. The plaintiffs took at the Charing-cross station of the defendants' railway a through ticket from London to Paris, the ticket being in three coupons, the first from London to Dover; the second from Dover to Calais; and the third from Calais to Paris. On the ticket was printed a notice that the defendants would not be responsible for loss, or detention of, or injury to, the luggage of passengers travelling by this through ticket, except whilst travelling by the defendants' trains or boats, and would incur no responsibility of any kind beyond what should arise in connection with its own trains and boats, in consequence of passengers being booked to travel over the railways of other companies, such through booking being only for the convenience of the passenger. The hatbox and portmanteau of the plaintiff having been lost on the journey between Calais and Paris, held that the defendants were exempted from liability for the loss by the conditions of the special contract, and that it was not necessary for that purpose that the plaintiff should have signed the contract: (Zanz v. The South Eastern Railway Company, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 873. Q. B.)

LIABILITIES OF SHAREHOLDERS.—Does a man who signs a memorandum of association for a certain number of shares satisfy the obligation by applying for a larger number of shares and obtaining an allotment in the usual way? or is he to take the shares mentioned in the memorandum in addition? This was the point before Lord Justice Giffard on Tuesday in Re the China Steamship and Labuan Coal Company (Limited), Drummond's case—where the Hon. F. C. Drummond had subscribed the memorandum for twenty-five shares, and afterwards applied for and received the allotment of 479. The Vice-Chancellor held that the allotment of the latter number satisfied the obligation in the memorandum. Such points it is, perhaps, proper to notice are mainly points of evidence, and shareholders will learn for the future by this and similar cases that they cannot be too careful as to what obligations they come under, and in retaining full and clear evidence as to what their holding is.—Economist.

EXAMINATIONS AT THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

Trinity Term 1869.

FINAL EXAMINATION.

At the examination of candidates for admission on the roll of attorneys and solicitors of the Superior Courts, the examiners recommended the following gentlemen, under the age of twenty-six, as being entitled to honorary distinction:—

1. William Warburton, who served his clerkship to Mr. Francis Marriott, of Manchester; and Messrs. Chester and Urquhart, of London.
2. Thomas Mortimer Siddall, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Wilson and Burkinshaw, of Alfreton; Mr. Thomas Diggles, of Manchester; and Messrs. Norris, Allens, and Carter, of London.
3. William John Battishill, B.A., who served his clerkship to Mr. James Pitt, of Exeter; and Mr. Wm. Moon, of London. Charles James Burrill, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Robinson and Chapman, of Leyburn; and Messrs. Williamson, Hill, and Co., of London. William Cockcroft, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Eastwood, of Todmorden; and Messrs. Torr, Janeway, and Tagart, of London. Edward Thomas Moore, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Broomhead and Wightman, of Sheffield; and Messrs. Pattison, Wigg, and Co., of London. Richard Petch, who served his clerkship to Mr. Thos. B. Burland, of South Cave, Yorkshire; and Messrs. Lambert and Burgin, of London.

The Council of the Incorporated Law Society have accordingly awarded the following prizes of books:—

- To Mr. Warburton, the prize of the Honourable Society of Clifford's-inn.
- To Mr. Siddall, the prize of the Honourable Society of New-inn.
- To Mr. Battishill, Mr. Burrill, Mr. Cockcroft, Mr. Moore, and Mr. Petch, prizes of the Incorporated Law Society.

The examiners also certified that the following candidates, under the age of twenty-six, whose names are placed in alphabetical order, passed examinations which entitle them to commendation:—

William Henry Crowder, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Vizard, Crowder, Anstie, and Young, of London.

Thomas Parry Jones, who served his clerkship to Mr. Llewellyn Adams, of Ruthven; and Messrs. Rooks, Kenrick, and Harston, of London.

Lewis Chalmers Lockhart, who served his clerkship to Mr. John Oswald Head, of Hexham; and Messrs. Bell, Brodick, and Gray, of London.

James Ryley, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Winder, of Bolton-le-Moors; and Messrs. Mackeson and Goldring, of London.

Edward Lee Warner, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Crawley, Arnold, and Green, of London.

Warner Wright, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Coaks and Rackham, of Norwich; and Messrs. Sharpe, Parkers, and Pritchard, of London.

The Council have accordingly awarded them certificates of merit.

The examiners further announced to the following candidates that their answers to the questions at the examination were highly satisfactory, and would have entitled them to certificates of merit if they had not been above the age of twenty-six:—

Frank Crisp, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Ashurst, Son, and Morris, of London; Messrs. Ashurst, Morris, and Knight, of London; and Messrs. Morris and Harvey, of London.

Edwin Cotterill Newey, who served his clerkship to Mr. William Ridout Wills, of Birmingham.

Edmund Warriner, who served his clerkship to Mr. Robert Fisher Thompson, of Kendal; Mr. Thomas Wight, of Dudley; and Mr. Archibald Scott Lawson, of London.

The number of candidates examined in this term was 178; of these, 149 passed, and twenty-nine were postponed.

By order of the Council,
E. W. WILLIAMSON, Secretary.
Law Society's Hall, Chancery-lane, London.

MARITIME LAW.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

MARINE INSURANCE—INSURANCE OF CARGO IN A BRITISH SHIP—TRANSFER OF SHIP TO A FOREIGNER—WRECK—JUDGMENT OF FOREIGN COURT—SALVAGE.—The plaintiff, acting on behalf of the Finance Minister of the Sultan of Turkey, in Nov. 1858 made arrangements with the owners of the British ship the Dutchman, then in the port of London, and about to sail for Constantinople, for the conveyance of certain gold. He thereupon effected with the defendant's company a policy of insurance upon the said gold, dated the 26th of the said month. On the 27th the owners of the vessel transferred her to a Russian company, and her name was changed to the Dnieper. Neither the plaintiff nor the defendant knew, until the termination of the voyage, that the ship had ceased to be a British vessel. She sailed on the 4th Jan. 1859, and whilst proceeding on her voyage was wrecked on the Dohan Aslan shoal, about 110 miles from Constantinople. The captain sent off the chief officer with the gold to Gallipoli, which was two and half miles distant. The gold was then deposited with the Russian consul where it remained twelve days, the fees demanded upon delivering it up being 2½ per cent. upon its value. At the time of the gold being sent to the Russian consul, no expenses had been incurred in saving the ship or any part of the cargo; the ship became a total wreck. A court was afterwards appointed by the consul-general according to Russian law, and it was determined that this case was one which required a settlement of salvage, and it was adjudged that the gold should contribute the sum of 7149l. 6s. 1d. towards the expense of saving the cargo. The plaintiff having paid the amount, and brought an action against the defendant to recover the sum of 1108l. 3s. 3d., his proportion on the policy: Held, first, that the court at Constantinople, being a court of competent jurisdiction according to Russian law to decide the question of salvage, this court could not interfere with such decision, whether given in consonance with maritime law or not. Second, that there being no statement in the policy, that the ship should remain an English ship, the defendant was not discharged from his liability on account of the ship becoming a Russian ship. Third, that the loss was incurred by the perils of the seas, and that so the plaintiff was entitled to recover: (Dent v. Smith, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 868. Q. B.)

MERCANTILE LAW.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

CHEQUE—NOTICE OF DISHONOUR.—To entitle the drawer of a cheque to notice of dishonour it is not enough that he should have some effects in the drawee's hands, but he must show that there were practically sufficient funds there to meet the cheque during the period within which it ought to be presented; or that the state of his account at the drawee's was such that he had reasonable ground for supposing that his cheque would be honoured. In an action by the holder against the drawer of a cheque it was proved that the latter had a small "fluctuating balance" in the hands of the drawee, but that never during the time within which the cheque ought to be presented had he practically sufficient funds there to meet it, nor, as the jury found, had he any "reasonable expectation" that it would be honoured. Held, by the Court of Exchequer (Bramwell, Channell, and Cleasby, BB.) that the drawer was not entitled to notice of dishonour: (Carew v. Duckworth, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 882. Ex.)

BILL OF EXCHANGE—INDORSER'S SIGNATURE OBTAINED BY FRAUD—LIABILITY OF INDORSER TO HOLDER FOR VALUE.—In an action by indorsee for value of a bill of exchange against indorser, it appeared that the acceptor of the bill, upon the back of which just below the impress of the stamp the payee had written his name, induced the defendant to append his signature below that of the first indorser by telling him that the document was a guarantee similar to one he had signed on a previous occasion. The jury were directed to find a verdict for the defendant if they considered that his signature was obtained upon a fraudulent representation that the document was a guarantee, that he signed it without knowing it to be a bill, but under the belief that it was a guarantee, and that he was not guilty of negligence; verdict for defendant. Held (although upon the evidence the court granted a new trial), that this direction was right: (Foster v. Mackinnon, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 887. C. P.)

ECCLIESIASTICAL LAW.

THE NEW IRISH CHURCH LAW.

The good old English fashion of fighting vigorously for victory, and shaking hands when the fortune of the battle is determined, has characterised the Irish Church conflict. The opposing parties did not spare hard blows while the battle was raging, but now that it is over they are everywhere exchanging courtesies, and there appears to be no inclination on the part of the victors to crow over the defeated. The Roman Catholics are enjoying their great triumph with a most creditable moderation, and conquered Protestantism is enduring its degradation with commendable calmness, and even with dignity. Instead of crying over the past, and wasting time in useless regrets for power and place that have for ever passed away from it, the Irish Protestant Church is turning its thoughts to the difficult work of reconstruction that lies before it. Already steps are being taken for the formation of the Church Body, which is to be incorporated by charter, and in which the property is to be vested. The practical difficulty in this process is doubtless very formidable, and all lawyers will look with curiosity to see how it is to be overcome. It meets the members of the Disestablished Church on the very threshold. By the provisions of the Abolition Acts the Church Body must constitute itself under some scheme of self-government, and it is said that Mr. A. J. STEPHENS, Q. C., has been instructed to prepare such a scheme. But there is a wide difference of opinion among churchmen as to the proper constitution of that government. Is it to be purely ecclesiastical, or is the laity to be admitted to an equal voice with the clergy, or is it to be admitted at all? This is not merely a matter of detail to be determined by views of expediency, or treated as a question for concession and compromise. It involves fundamental principles upon which there are, and ever will be, irreconcilable opinions. The claims of the ecclesiastical form of church government are based upon the doctrine of Apostolical succession, and the sacred character of the priesthood thence derived. That claim cannot well be abandoned without abandoning also the doctrine on which it is founded. Now this doctrine is zealously maintained by the entire of the High Church party, and it is not at all probable that they will consent to put it aside. On the other hand, the Low Church and the Broad Church alike repudiate it, and demand for the laity an equal participation in the government of the Church with the clergy, and they are not likely to yield one iota of their principles to the demands of their brethren of the High Church. The strife that is coming may be already seen in embryo in the dispute that is now proceeding as to whether the work of reconstruction shall be undertaken by Convocation, or by a Synod, or by a body representing clergy and laity alike, by election of magnates in the various dioceses. If this difference should be overcome, the Assembly can scarcely fail to fall into a feud upon the moment that their opposing principles are to take the shape of action, and especially when the whole future of the Church will be determined by what is then done.

Although it will be an Irish experiment, it will excite almost as much interest in England, for if it is impossible not to recognise the fact that the English institution must speedily share the fate of its Irish sister. The Liberal whip, we believe, gives to the English Church twenty years of life. We believe it will not survive for ten years, and for a reason which does not appear to have presented itself to any one of the many speculators upon the value of its life. There will be arrayed against it precisely the same forces that have extinguished the Established Church in Ireland, and they will be recruited by a force which nobody seems to have calculated upon. The disestablished Protestants of Ireland who have been hitherto the staunch allies and supporters of the Church of England, will now go over to the opposite camp and be among the foremost of its assailants—at once weakening the defensive force they quit, and increasing the hostile forces they join. Churches are made up of men, and the fox with the shorn tail illustrates an universal weakness in human nature. The Irish Disestablished Church will naturally desire to see the English Church treated as themselves. The Protestant party in Ireland returns some thirty members, and their secession will swell the majority of 120 to 180. With such a majority in favour of the abolition of the English Church, it is not probable that any long time will be suffered to pass without turning it to account. Wisdom counsels preparation.

SALE OF A CHURCH LIVING.—The next presentation to the rectory of Guiseley, near Leeds, the net annual income of which is described as being 1073*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.*, inclusive of house and garden, is to be sold by auction on the 19th inst. It is stated that the present incumbent is in his fifty-ninth year, and that the rector for the time being is also patron of the adjoining living of Yeodon, which possesses a suitable residence and an annual income of nearly 300*l.* The patronage of Guiseley rests, according to the Clergy List, with Mr. G. L. Fox for two turns, and with the Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge, for one turn.

BANKRUPTCY LAW.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

DETENTION OF BANKRUPT—CERTIFICATE.—The provision of sect. 113 of the Bankruptcy Act 1849, that "if any officer shall detain any" bankrupt who has obtained an order of protection "after he shall have shown such protection to him, except for so long as shall be necessary for obtaining a copy of the same, such officer shall forfeit to such bankrupt, for his own use, the sum of five pounds for every day he shall detain such bankrupt," does not apply to the gaoler into whose custody the bankrupt has been delivered, but only to the officer who arrests the bankrupt: (Myers v. Veitch, 20 L. T. Rep. N.S. 847. Q. B.)

LIVERPOOL BANKRUPTCY COURT.

July 23 and 24.

(Before Mr. Commissioner THRING.)

Re WILLIAM TITHERINGTON.

Solicitors' costs—Proof of debt—Right of double proof.

Held, that the rule that a joint creditor cannot prove against one of his debtors if another be solvent, although applicable to partnerships and co-contractors, does not apply to the joint employment by several persons of a solicitor for a specific purpose.

This was a dividend meeting.

John Hughes, solicitor, appeared for the assignees.

Wilfred Bushby, solicitor (for his firm of Lace and Co.), and W. G. Bateson for a creditor for 13,000*l.*

Bushby tendered a proof for 1000*l.* on behalf of himself and partners for professional services rendered to the bankrupt and several other shareholders in a defunct mining company, with a view to relieve them from certain liabilities in connection with the company.

Hughes objected to the claim on two grounds—first, that it was at variance with a rule in bankruptcy to allow a joint creditor to prove against one of his debtors till he had exhausted the others who might be solvent; and, secondly, that the estate of this bankrupt was only liable for the bankrupt's quota of the costs incurred.

Evidence in support of the latter objection was adduced, which, although of a conflicting character, established the fact of a retainer of Messrs. Lace by Mr. Titherington on behalf of himself and his co-shareholders, and negatived the assumption that there was any arrangement that each shareholder should pay only his quota of the costs.

Both the respective advocates were heard at length upon the law of the subject as applied to the first objection, and the learned commissioner afterwards reserved judgment till the following day.

July 24.—His HONOUR now, after stating the nature of the claim, and the arguments which had been adduced, said that he had taken time to read the cases bearing on the subject, and had found that the matter was by no means free from doubt. The rule that a joint creditor cannot prove against one of his debtors if another be solvent is not, according to Ex parte Field, re Rogers, 3 Mont. D. & D. 95, confined to partnerships only, but applies to co-contractors generally. Now the question arose, what was a co-contractor? and he assumed, although it was not in evidence before him, that some of the parties who employed Mr. Lace were solvent, or rather that they had not been judicially declared insolvent. In Re Agnew, 27 L. T. 27, a case in the Irish Bankruptcy Court, it was decided that a mere joint liability where there was no joint interest, and could be none, came within the rule, and that in the case of joint obligors on a bond there could not be proof against the separate assets of one who became bankrupt while any remained who were not so. The observations of Mr. Griffiths in his excellent work on the Practice of Bankruptcy, gave a fair view of the extent to which the cases had carried the rule. He states that it extends to all cases of joint contractors, whether they have any joint interest, as distinguished from joint liability, or not. The rule, which was in a great measure arbitrary, had never, however, been extended beyond either a partnership for a given purpose or a joint adventure, except in the Irish case referred to, where joint obligors on a bond were held to be within its meaning, but there it may be observed it was not necessary to decide such a point, as there seemed clearly to have been a joint adventure in the strict sense, which ended in a loss. The present case was neither a partnership for a given purpose nor a joint adventure, nor did it come within the case of the joint obligor, but was simply a joint employment of a solicitor by several persons for the purpose of instituting a suit in Chancery. He did not consider it was a case of co-contractors, and should therefore hold generally that the joint employment of a solicitor by several persons did not constitute a joint contract within the meaning of the rule in bankruptcy. With respect to the second ground of objection, he considered there was abundant proof, apart from the conflicting evidence adduced before him, that the bankrupt was jointly interested, along with others in the suit, that it was carried on successfully for their joint benefit to relieve them from their liabilities as shareholders in the mining company, and that consequently they became jointly liable to Messrs. Lace and Co. for their costs. Mr. Hughes had very properly called his attention to the question of what would be the rights and liabilities of the parties at law. Now, the case of King v. Hoare 13 M. & W., decided that a party injured may sue all the joint tortfeasors or contractors or he may sue one, subject to the right of pleading in abatement in the one case and not in the other; but such a plea is a mere instrument of delay, for a judgment obtained against the joint contractors could be executed against each of the defendants. That decision, in fact, proved that at common law the creditor would thus have his remedy against the individual debtor, and by analogy he would in the present case, by the admission of this proof, have his remedy in the Court of Bankruptcy. The debt, therefore, of Messrs. Lace and Co. must be admitted, subject, of course, to taxation if it should be so insisted upon by the assignees.

Hughes gave notice of appeal, and the court fixed 10*l.* as the amount of deposit.

CORRESPONDENCE OF THE PROFESSION.

[NOTE.—This department of the Law Times being open to free discussion on all professional topics, the Editor is not responsible for any opinions or statements contained in it.]

COUNTY COURT—CONTEMPT—IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.—Commenting on the Bill now before the House of Lords, you refer to the power of the County Courts to imprison for disobedience to an order to pay unless the defendant satisfy the court of his inability. Having seen this quoted in a weekly paper, as the lawyers' version of "contempt of court," you will I am confident allow me to correct an important error. By the original County Court Act in 1847, debtors not attending personally to a judgment summons were, for that cause alone liable to commitment, but this ground of imprisonment has been repealed, and the creditor required, in all cases, to prove his complaint against the debtor on the hearing of a judgment summons. So far, indeed, from the debtor having to satisfy the judge of his inability to pay, the plaintiff has to sign the following form of application for judgment summons: "And I undertake to prove, to the satisfaction of the judge at the hearing, that the judgment-debtor has been able since the judgment to pay the amount ordered by the court as it became due. I am aware that if I do not prove the same accordingly that I shall have to pay the costs of this summons." As I read the Imprisonment for Debt Bill, the power given to the Superior Court judge is simply that now possessed by the County Courts, therefore plaintiffs will clearly have to prove debtors' means before a commitment can issue under a judge's order. By the new Act no other ground either in the Superior or County Courts will remain but defendant's "ability to pay." Although opposed to all imprisonment for mere debt, I see no objection, but, on the contrary, strongly approve of such imprisonment after due proof that debtor's obstinacy alone keeps the creditor out of his rights. I would go further, and make these obstinates work in prison for their own support, and also to pay off their debts; but is it so certain that the obstinate only are sent to prison, and that no warrants issue without the strict proof of means which certainly should be given before a poor man is sent to gaol?

PURCHASE—RIGHT TO ABATEMENT IN PURCHASE MONEY—CONDITION OF SALE.—Will you be good enough again to allow me space in your valuable publication for the present communication, which may be found interesting to some of your numerous readers, and in respect whereof, it being a matter of great importance, the writer humbly invites their opinions. Freehold property was purchased by A. B. by private contract, after an attempted sale by auction by the mortgagee. A condition of the printed particulars of sale, and the contract subjoined thereto was signed by the purchaser, runs as follows:—"The property is believed to be correctly described, and shall be assumed to be so, and is sold subject to all rights of way, and other easements, and as the property is open to view no error of description in the particulars shall annul the sale or entitle the purchaser to compensation, and no further identity of the property shall be required than the plan thereof drawn upon the conveyance to —" (the vendor's name). The property is described in the particulars of sale as consisting of about 2½ acres of land, but in the plan as consisting of about 2a. 1r. This plan is an exact copy of one endorsed on the conveyance to the vendor, and was annexed to the said particulars. The property has been measured by the purchaser's surveyor, and according to his measurement contains almost half an acre less than the quantity mentioned on the plan, and less, to the extent of three-fourths of an acre, than the quantity specified in the particulars of sale. As the condition which has been mentioned speaks only of a misstatement in the particulars, is not the plan entirely out of the question, and would not the purchaser consequently be held in equity entitled to an abatement in the amount of his purchase money? It may be argued contra that the plan forms part of the particulars, but not, it is submitted, with any reason, seeing that the plan contains no reference to the particulars, nor vice versa do the particulars contain any reference to the plan; and, as the vendor has had, as the condition entitles him to have, the benefit of one mis-statement in the particulars, it is submitted that to give him the benefit of another in the plan would be inequitable, unjust, and unreasonable. See on the subject, Sugden's Vendors and Purchasers, Dart's do., passim.

DELAY IN COUNTY COURTS.—I entered a case in the Salford County Court on the 30th July. The plaint note fixes the case to be tried on the 20th Oct. Surely delays like this defeat the object of the County Courts, which I have always understood to be speedy and economical administration of justice.

Queries.

64. COPYHOLDS.—SALE OF.—A. devised a copyhold estate to his wife B. for life, and from and after her decease, to the use thereof of such person or persons for such use and uses, estate and estates, as she, his said wife, whether sole or covert, should by any surrender or surrenders, deed or deeds, or by her last will and testament, give, devise, limit, or appoint the same. A. is dead, B. has married again and has contracted for the sale of the copyholds in fee. Can B. exercise the power of appointment, so as to give a good title to a purchaser? Is the lord of the manor, in which the copyholds are situate bound to admit the purchaser at once to the fee, or can he only admit the purchaser to B. life estate, and after her death then admit the purchaser to the remainder?

65. TRESPASS TO A MARE.—Will an action lie against a farmer for turning out to pasture, an entire horse; or if not will an action lie for injury to a mare pasturing in an adjoining field, and which waded to leap the ditch by the presence of the horse, and was depreciated in value, by the service of the said entire horse?

Answers.

(Q. 56.) WILL.—PERPETUITY.—On reconsidering my answer, I do not think that the construction put upon the words "after the decease of all and every the said children or issue" as being merely referential to the decease of the children taking life estates under the previous devise, can be maintained. Had the words been "the said issue" there is no doubt that the referential construction must have been adopted, but the testator evidently intended that there should be a failure, not merely of children, but of issue generally, before the gifts over were to take effect. Hence, if the copyholds be susceptible of entail, a construction similar to that in Doe v. Halley, 8 T. R. 5; Parr v. Swindell, 4 Russ. 283; Doe v. Gallini, 3 Adol. and Ell. 340; and Forsbrook v. Forsbrook, L. Rep. 3 Ch. Ap. 93 would I think be adopted. If the copyholds be not susceptible of entail, B. must be held to have taken a fee conditional on there being issue, for on such an estate a remainder could not be limited, Doe v. Simpson, 5 Scott 770. On B's death without ever having had issue, B's estate was at an end. The testator after creating a conditional fee, had only a possibility of reverter, and as he died prior to the operation of the 1 Vict. c. 26, such possibility though descendible, was according to the better opinion not devisable. See Earl of Stafford v. Buckley, 2 Ves. Sen. 180.

(Q. 61.) DRAWING LEASES.—The directions of the Act of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 124, authorise the introduction of an exception from, or qualification of, the clauses therein given, but do not authorise any extension of them, except in the single instance of the form No. 2. Does this mean an exception from the covenants as a whole, or an exception of only a portion of a single covenant? If the former, of course the subsequent covenant would take the place of an omitted one. Vide Sweet's Conc. Proc. Conv. 2nd edit. Notes p. 16.

—The concurrence of the married women appears to be unnecessary, a fortiori their statutory acknowledgment must be unnecessary. If their concurrence be necessary their acknowledgment would be so also.

LAW LIBRARY.

Doctors' Commons, its Courts and Registries; with a Treatise on Probate Court Business. By G. J. FOSTER, formerly Clerk of the Papers of the Prerogative Court of Canterbury, now of Her Majesty's Court of Probate. Second Edition. London: Reeves.

THE work was originally suggested by the numerous questions asked of the officials in the principal registry by the newly-admitted practitioners in the new court, who were necessarily but imperfectly acquainted with its technicalities. To Mr. Foster, as one of the most intelligent and best informed of these officials, was the duty for the most part delegated of answering these inquiries, which were to a great extent irregular. It occurred to him that much needless trouble might be saved to the office by the publication of a little book giving the kind of information so generally sought by the multitude of solicitors now admitted to a practice which previously had been confined to 130 fortunate proctors. The volume, of which the second edition is before us, was the result of this resolve. The contentious business has been largely developed since the appearance of the first edition, and copious instructions are now given to the practitioner for the conduct of it.

Mr. Foster, with rare liberality, awards in his preface very great praise to Mr. Coote's Practice of the Probate Court, which has passed into a fifth edition; and he pertinently suggests the query, "With so successful a work in existence, where was the necessity for any other?" He supplies the answer, "The whole subject of testamentary business is too large to be treated of in one book." Nearly ninety-five millions of money, he says, pass yearly in England under probates and administrations! In fact there are few solicitors who are not, in the course of business, called upon to prove many wills and take out many administrations in the course of the year; and the necessity for some testamentary knowledge is, therefore, obvious. They could not anywhere find it in a more condensed and practical form than in this volume.

LAW SOCIETIES.

INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY. ANNUAL REPORT OF THE COUNCIL.

Lands Clauses Consolidation Act 1845.

The council have advertised in a former report (see Annual Report 1867-8) to the action taken by them with a view of protecting landowners from the oppressive operation of those sections of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act 1845, which facilitate the acquisition of lands by the promoters of public undertakings, which action resulted in the insertion of the following clauses in the Act of 1867 (Railways Companies Act, 30 & 31 Vict. c. 127.)

"Where after the passing of this Act a company exercise the powers conferred on the promoters of the undertaking by sect. 85 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act 1845, the following provisions shall have effect:

"(1.) The surveyor to be appointed as in that section provided shall be appointed by the Board of Trade instead of by two justices, and all the provisions of that Act relative to a surveyor appointed by two justices shall apply to a surveyor so appointed by the Board of Trade;

"(2.) The company shall give not less than seven days' notice of their intention to apply to the Board of Trade for the appointment of a surveyor to any party interested in or entitled to sell and convey the lands in question, and not consenting to the entry of the company;

"(3.) The valuation to be made by the surveyor so appointed shall include the amount of compensation for all damage and injury to be sustained by reason of the exercise of the powers conferred by the said section, as far as such damage and injury are capable of estimation;

"(4.) The sureties to the bond to be given by the company under that section shall, in case the parties differ, instead of being approved of by two justices, be approved of by the Board of Trade, after hearing the parties."

With reference to the appointment of the surveyor by the Board of Trade instead of by two justices, under the 36th section of the above Act, Mr. Watkin, on the introduction last session of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act Amendment Bill, moved the insertion of a clause which would in effect have repealed the clause introduced at the instance of this society, who objected that the powers conferred upon promoters, facilitating the acquisition of lands by them under the Act of 1845, were intended only to be had recourse to in cases of urgency where it was necessary, for the proper construction of the works, or the convenience of the public, that the promoters should obtain possession of the lands in a summary manner before the amount of purchase money and compensation payable to the owners could be agreed upon.

These powers, owing to defects in the language of the Act of 1845, or to a laxity of practice, afforded promoters opportunities, which they have frequently used, of acting most prejudicially to owners or claimants, and in a manner which could never have been intended by the Legislature.

Landowners complained, and very justly, that although they might be actually in negotiation with the promoters on the subject of the compensation to be paid them for their land, the promoters could, without any notice to them, procure a surveyor to be appointed by two justices, and actually take possession of the land; depositing in the bank, by way of security, the amount determined by the surveyor to be the mere dry value of it, and without taking into consideration the consequential damage, by severance or otherwise, to be sustained by the owner; and upon giving a bond with two sureties, of whose sufficiency the owner or claimant had no means of satisfying himself, in a penal sum equal only to the sum deposited.

A letter was addressed to the Attorney-General, protesting strongly against the repeal of a clause involving a measure of such very great importance; and the council forwarded to the Attorney-General a statement in writing, explaining their views on the subject, and showing, by reference to actual facts, the necessity for the amendment effected by the section which Mr. Watkin sought to have repealed.

The council also communicated with other members of Parliament on the same subject, but the Bill was not proceeded with.

Legal Education and Status of the Profession.

In September last a meeting of the Profession was held at Leeds with the view of discussing a paper written by Mr. Wm. A. Jevons, of Liverpool, with reference to the establishment of a Law University common to both branches of the Profession, the degrees of which should be the sole basis of determining the status and rank in the Profession of all practitioners alike; also in regard to the relation which exists between the two branches of the Profession.

At this meeting the following resolutions were passed:—

"That the present status of our branch of the legal profession, and their exclusion from all offices of honour and distinction, is unsatisfactory, and injurious to the interests of the public; especially having regard to the fact, that before admission to our branch of the legal profession, examinations of a stringent character as to knowledge of the law are required, whilst with respect to the Bar no test of legal knowledge is necessary.

"That the tendency of modern legislation to continue and extend the exclusion of attorneys from various offices and appointments for which their education specially qualifies them, calls for united action on their part to remove this injustice, and that it is only necessary to call the attention of the Bar and the public to the matter, in order to ensure their co-operation in devising a remedy.

"That this meeting is of opinion that the time has come when provision should be made for the foundation of a law university, which should be open to both branches of the Profession without distinction; and that the means of providing an institution already exist in the funds at the disposal of the Inns of Court, and Inns of Chancery, which were originally common to both branches of the Profession.

"That the foregoing resolutions, and the paper of Mr. Jevons be referred to a provisional committee for consideration, with instructions to invite the co-operation of the Bar, and of our branch of the Profession generally, and to report to a future meeting, to be summoned in such mode, and at such place and time as they shall determine."

These resolutions having been brought to the notice of the council, it was thereupon resolved that the whole subject should be referred to a committee of their own body to confer with a special committee of the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association, and a committee formed out of the meeting held at Leeds in September, which is called the "Legal Education and Status of the Profession Committee." Several members of the committees thus associated contributed some valuable observations upon the subjects referred to them, and it appeared to the associated committee to be desirable that an inquiry should be instituted by the Government, or the Legislature, into the whole system of legal education, and organisation, and professional status and remuneration.

Having this object in view, it was considered by the associated committee expedient that the Lord Chancellor, the Prime Minister, and other authorities, and the Houses of Parliament, should be memorialised and petitioned to cause these subjects to be brought under consideration, and other efforts made to that end; and that the several branches of the Profession, and all professional and other associations taking an interest in the subject, should be invited to take part in such efforts.

The following propositions were also agreed to by the associated committee:—

1. It would be right that the regulation as to admission to the Bar should be placed under Act of Parliament, as is the case as to attorneys and the medical profession.
2. It is not right that the benchers of the Inns of Court should have the uncontrolled power of making rules which may place attorneys in a position more restricted than the rest of the public as to the right of admission to the Bar.
3. That compulsory examinations ought to be established as to both branches of the Profession.
4. The establishments of the Inns of Court, and the Inns of Chancery should be, under legal control, made subservient to purposes of legal education.
5. We think it is not right that barristers should be allowed to exercise the offices of registrars in bankruptcy and probate, of common law masters, and of solicitors to the public departments, without passing such examinations as the law has imposed on every solicitor before he can become qualified to be appointed to the same offices.
6. Is it right that a barrister should be held irresponsible as to the performance of legal work, for the doing of which he has accepted fees; while a solicitor is held responsible?
7. It is not right that the rate of remuneration for the solicitor should be governed by fixed tariffs, whilst barristers, physicians, civil engineers, and other professional men, are allowed to determine for themselves their rate of remuneration.

The Leeds Executive Committee were, therefore, requested to prepare, for the consideration of the Associated Committee, a draft memorial, based on the above resolutions and propositions.

At a subsequent meeting a draft of the memorial was very fully discussed, when it was thought desirable that it should be confined to legal education only; and that the subjects of the responsibility of the members of the Bar, and the remuneration of both branches of the Profession should be reserved for future consideration.

It was accordingly proposed that a memorial should be addressed to the Lord Chancellor, asking His Lordship to introduce a Bill into Parliament in such a manner as should seem desirable, for the following measures:—

1. Regulating the conditions under which persons may be called to the Bar, including a compulsory examination test.
2. For the appropriation of the revenues of the Inns of Court, and Chancery; and for the regulation of those inns for the purposes of legal education of students intending to enter both branches of the Profession.

And it was thereupon arranged that the draft memorial, as settled by the associated committee, should be submitted to the several governing bodies out of which that committee was formed.

The council of the society, having taken the subject of the proposed memorial into consideration, are not at present prepared to take action in the matter. The subject is too large to be disposed of without the most anxious discussion, to which the council and the committee of its members will always willingly be parties. But the council consider that the opinion of the Profession and the public is not at present sufficiently pronounced to justify them in attempting to procure legislation on the subject.

Law Reporting.

Mr. William Williams, one of the members of the council of this society, and its representative on the council of law reporting, was, on his retirement, in accordance with the second clause of the scheme of law reporting, unanimously re-appointed a member of that council.

State of Business in the Chambers of the Chancery Judges.

The council referred, in the last report to the necessity which, in their opinion, existed for an increase of the staff in the chambers of some of the Chancery judges, and that they had communicated with the proper authorities upon the subject.

The members are, doubtless, aware that Mr. Joshua Bird Allen has since been appointed chief clerk in the chambers of the Vice-Chancellor James, and Mr. Henry Prichard in the chambers of the Vice-Chancellor Stuart.

Rules under the Parliamentary Election Act 1868.

These rules came into operation in Michaelmas Term last.

Under the 57th section of the Act of Parliament, the permission to practise as agents in the matter of election petitions extends only to attorneys, and to those persons who, at the time of passing the Act, were entitled to practise as Parliamentary agents; but under the 58th rule, the permission appeared to extend beyond the class of persons contemplated by the Act of Parliament.

The council, therefore, placed themselves in communication with the proper authorities with a view to having the rule in question altered; but they afterwards ascertained that the question had been raised before Mr. Justice Willes, on the application of a person who was not an attorney, and had not subscribed to the Parliamentary roll at the time of the passing of the Act, and his Lordship had refused such application. The council, therefore, considered it unnecessary to take further notice of what, at first sight, seemed to be a manifest inconsistency in the language of the Act of Parliament and of the rules.

SOCIAL SCIENCE ASSOCIATION.

The annual business meeting of members of this association was held on Friday, the 30th ult., to receive a report from the council, and to elect officers and standing committees for the ensuing year, G. W. Hastings, Esq., in the chair. It was reported that during the session just brought to a close there had been thirty-six meetings for the reading and discussion of papers, representations by means of deputations or memorials had been made to the Government in reference to the Control of Criminals, the Bankruptcy Bill, the Endowed Schools Bill, the Scotch Education Bill, the Extension of the Contagious Diseases Act, the Suppression of Gambling Farms in Hong Kong, and the Registration of Nurses. A deputation also waited upon the Earl of Mayo, previous to his lordship's departure for India, to urge the necessity of instituting inquiries as Governor-General into the prison discipline of that country. Petitions were presented to Parliament on the subject of the Habitual Criminals Bill, the Endowed Schools Bill, the Beerhouse Licensing Bill, the Real Estates Intestacy Bill, the Evidence further Amendment Bill, and the Married Women's Property Bill. A communication was made to the Trades Union Commission, strongly recommending the appointment of a public prosecutor for the repression of outrages of the kind which had been brought under their notice. A form for preparation of hospital accounts had been drawn up and circulated among the principal metropolitan and provincial hospitals with a view to introduce uniformity and render investigation comparatively easy. The joint committee of the association and the British Medical Association had framed a schedule for presentation to the Sanitary Commission illustrative of an inquiry into the whole subject for the United Kingdom. Officers and standing committees were elected for the ensuing year. The next annual congress was announced to take place at Bristol on the 29th Sept. next.

LEGAL OBITUARY.

J. M. WINGFIELD, Esq.

The late John Muxloe Wingfield, Esq., barrister-at-law, of Tickenote Hall, Rutland, who died on the 17th ult., in the 80th year of his age, was the oldest son of the late John Wingfield, Esq., of Tickenote (who died in 1841), by Mary Anne, daughter of E. Muxloe, Esq., of Pickwell, county Leicester, and was born in 1790. He was educated at Harrow and St. John's College, Cambridge, where he graduated B. A. in 1812 and proceeded M. A. in 1815, and having chosen the Bar as his profession, he was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in 1815. He was magistrate and deputy-lieutenant for county Rutland, and chairman of the Quarter Sessions, and served as high sheriff of that county in 1828. He married in 1819 Catherine Anne Harriet, only daughter of H. L. Lee, Esq., of Coton Hall, county Salop, and by her, who died in 1863, had issue four sons and three daughters.

J. CORRY LOWRY, Esq.

The late James Corry Lowry, Esq., Q.C., of Rockdale, county Tyrone, who died at his residence in Mountjoy-square, Dublin, on the 20th ult., in the 61st year of his age, was the eldest son of the late James Lowry, Esq., of Rockdale, by Henrietta, daughter of T. Pepper, Esq., of Gallygarth, county Meath, and was born in 1809. He was called to the Irish Bar in 1837, and received a silk gown in 1867; was a magistrate for county Tyrone, and master of the Court of Exchequer in Ireland. He was thrice married; first, in 1832 to Dorinda, daughter of the late Captain Jones; secondly, 1847, Ellen, widow of F. Gamble, Esq.; and thirdly, in 1850, to Jane, daughter of Booth Jones Esq., and has left issue.

LEGAL NEWS.

A JERSEY JUDGE AND HIS FEES.—The straits to which Jersey officials, owing to the emptiness of the island exchequer, are driven for money have been repeatedly referred to in the Times. Last Saturday the Jersey Jurats sat as a Court of Admiralty, when they gave judgment in several cases against the South-Western and Weymouth and Channel Islands Packet Companies for harbour dues which both companies allege to be excessive and unwarranted, but which the States have determined to enforce. A characteristic conversation was originated by the Bench. Judge Le Montais asked why his fees had not been paid for attendance on the bench in the last South-Western Steam Packet Company's case. He added, "In all Admiralty cases we are entitled to 2s. fees." The Attorney-General (who appeared as counsel for the States): "I am not going to advance money for the public; I cannot get paid my own fees." Judge Le Montais: "But the harbour-master should advance the money; he is continually receiving harbour dues." The Attorney-General said the money could not be advanced without an order from the Committee of Harbours. If the judges wished, he would apply to the committee, but unless provided by the committee with cash, he would not advance a single halfpenny for the public. Judge Le Montais: "But, the Greffier informs me his fees have been paid." The Attorney-General explained that this was by mistake. He should not in another case pay the fees. The Greffier: "In that case the cause would not be inscribed on the list." The Attorney-General: "I will not advance money for the public." Judge Le Montais: "The harbour-master must pay our fees." The Harbour-Master: "You must make an order to that effect as my discharge." Judge Le Montais: "You don't want anything of the kind. Shall we not be in the States to vouch for the order we now give you?" The harbour-master assented. In order to appreciate the conversation fully, it is necessary to bear in mind that the judge, who seems apprehensive of losing his 2s., sat in a case equivalent to a Crown prosecution, and the insular resources are his security for the fees. The Attorney-General, who declined to advance a halfpenny for the public, was at the time the advocate of the public, that is, of the States. Confidence in the future finances of Jersey, therefore, would seem at a low ebb.

Law and the Lawyers.

THE vacant Lord Justiceship of Appeal in Chancery is a position which it may be found difficult to fill satisfactorily, unless Lord CAIRNS or Sir ROUNDELL PALMER accepts it. The duties of Lord CAIRNS, in a political point of view, are at present very important, and considerable doubt is expressed concerning his probable inclination to return to his old post. On the other hand we have been given to understand that Sir ROUNDELL PALMER is disinclined to give up his magnificent practice, unless called to the woolpack. In the event of Lord CAIRNS and Sir R. PALMER both declining, it is considered that Vice-Chancellor JAMES stands first in the ranks for promotion. These speculations, however, are somewhat premature; for the Profession has, up to the time at which we write, almost entirely confined itself to expressions of regret at the loss of a most amiable Judge, and one who never forgot the friendships formed during his career at the Bar.

ACCORDING to the Judicial Statistics, published on Thursday, the LORDS JUSTICES sat last year 146 days by themselves and on two days with the LORD CHANCELLOR.

THE annual provincial meeting of the members and friends of the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association will be held this year in the city of York, and will commence on Tuesday, the 19th Oct., at eleven o'clock in the forenoon, in the Board Room, Museum-street, Mr. EDWARD LAWRENCE, of London, the chairman of the association, presiding. The members of the association and their friends will afterwards dine with the Yorkshire Law Society, at the Royal Station Hotel, York, Mr. JOHN JAMES PAUL MOODY, of Scarborough, the president of that society, taking the chair. A further meeting will be held the following day at eleven o'clock, in the Board Room, Museum-street, under the presidency of Mr. LAWRENCE. On the Thursday there will be an excursion by special train to Scarborough, where the visitors will be entertained at a dejeuner by the Yorkshire Law Society, and will afterwards be conveyed back to York in time to reach London that night. It is of great importance to the interests, not only of the association, but of the Profession generally, that these annual meetings should pass off in a spirited and successful manner; and the metropolitan members trust that their provincial brethren will embrace the opportunity to express their opinion as to the best mode of conducting the affairs of the association; an opinion which will be the more valuable to the London members of the committee, as being expressed at a meeting composed chiefly of provincial members. The half-yearly meeting of the Solicitors' Benevolent Association will be held in the Board Room, Museum-street, York, on Wednesday, the 20th Oct., at ten o'clock.

SIR ROUNDELL PALMER's admirable and exhaustive speech on the differing laws of marriage in this country, and the serious inconveniences that result from it, will be found at length in its proper place. The obstacle to reform lies, we believe, in Scotland, which persists in preserving its own code intact, although fraught with objections that have never been answered. The consequences of the confused state of the marriage law, which differs in each of the three kingdoms, are much more serious and extensive than is commonly supposed. The remedy is obvious—uniformity, making it a civil rite, with certain prescribed forms, and leaving the religious ceremony to be performed in any manner the parties please. That is the Continental plan, and it works admirably. The English plan approaches to it very nearly, and is generally approved. Why cannot Scotland do what all the rest of the civilised world does in this momentous question?

"NEXT Session" is the "to-morrow" of legislation; to it are all good intentions remitted. Enough work is already promised for next session to occupy three sessions. Among them is the consolidation and amendment of the law of highways, and, we hope, the abolition of turnpikes.

The following motions are to be made:—

Sir Henry Bulwer—To move a resolution in favour of adopting vote by ballot for the future election of members of Parliament.

Mr. Cranford—To call attention to the operation of the Parliamentary Elections Act 1868.

Mr. Christopher Denison—To move for a select committee to inquire into the present operation of the law "awarding compensation for death and personal injuries caused by wrongful act or neglect," in so far as it exposes railway companies to unlimited damages at the discretion of a jury.

Mr. Dodds—Bill to amend the laws relating to the registration of Parliamentary voters in counties in England and Wales.

Viscount Enfield—Bill to amend the laws regulating the qualifications, summoning, attendance, and remuneration of special and common juries in England and Wales.

Mr. Eykyn—Bill for the appointment of a public prosecutor.

Mr. Russell Gurney—Bill to amend the law relating to the property of married women.

Mr. Vernon Harcourt—To move to repeal so much of the Reform Acts as make the right of voting for members of Parliament dependent on the payment of rates.

Sir George Jenkinson—Bill to amend the law in regard to revision and commutation of capital sentences.

Mr. M'Mahon—Bill for facilitating the granting of new trials in all criminal cases.

Mr. Monk—To call attention to the disabilities under which the civil servants of the Crown in the Revenue Departments still labour in reference to Parliamentary elections; and to move for a select committee.

Mr. Mundella—To move in reference to the operation of the Factories and Workshops Acts.

Mr. Raikes—To protect the earnings and secure the property of married women.

UNLIQUIDATED DEMANDS IN BANKRUPTCY.

BEFORE the passing of the Bankruptcy Act 1861, unliquidated damages for breach of contract could not be proved. That Act, by its 153rd section, provided that "if any bankrupt shall, at the time of adjudication, be liable, by reason of any contract or promise, to a demand in the nature of damages which have not been and cannot be otherwise liquidated or ascertained, it shall be lawful for the court, acting in prosecution of such bankruptcy, to direct such damages to be assessed by a jury, either before itself or in a court of law, and to give all necessary directions for such purpose; and the amount of damage, when assessed, shall be proveable as if a debt due at the time of the bankruptcy." A perfectly new question has arisen on this section, relating to the meaning of the words "contract or promise:" (Johnson v. Skafte, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 909.)

That case came to the Court of Queen's Bench on appeal from the County Court. In the proceedings in the latter court, the claim sought to be enforced against the defendant, and which he contended was barred as a debt provable under his bankruptcy, was a claim for compensation for injury and loss alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff, who occupied a room in the defendant's house, by reason of the defendant having allowed the rent of the premises to get into arrear, thereby causing the plaintiff's goods to be distrained by the landlord. The plaintiff paid the amount necessary to release his goods, and after that payment had been made the defendant became bankrupt, and in due course obtained his order of discharge. The plaintiff neither proved nor claimed to prove under the bankruptcy in respect of this cause of action; but after the defendant had obtained his order of discharge the plaintiff commenced proceedings against him in the County Court, and the learned Judge allowed the case to go to the jury, who found a verdict for the plaintiff. The defendant appealed, on the ground that, as the claim was provable under the bankruptcy, it was barred by his order of discharge.

The judgment of the court upon the question was shortly this: That the 153rd section is intended to refer to express contracts, and not to implied contracts arising out of the relation of parties to one another. The court indeed seemed to agree that the section contemplated only mercantile contracts. Mr. Justice Hayes stated this to be the case as if he possessed some special knowledge, for he says unequivocally "The 153rd section of the Bankruptcy Act 1861 was passed with reference to mercantile contracts made by the bankrupt, an illustration of which is given in the case of Green v. Bicknell, 8 Ad. & El. 701, cited by Mr. Chitty in his book on Contracts, where an agreement was made for the sale of oil, which should arrive by a certain ship, and when the oil was tendered to the party who contracted to purchase it, he refused to take it; on his afterwards becoming bankrupt the measure of the claim against him was the difference between the contract and market prices at the time when he should have fulfilled his contract. But though the market price was known to the parties in that case, it was nevertheless held that the claim sounded in damages, and could not be proved under the bankruptcy. That was a grievance which is now remedied." And he agreed that the present claim was to be regarded as an action of tort, although, had it been framed in contract, it might have been difficult to say that it could not be regarded in that light also.

BREACH OF PROMISE OF MARRIAGE.

A LIEUTENANT in a marching regiment has been by a Surrey jury, cast in damages of 2000*l.* for having refused to marry a girl, to whom he had thoughtlessly engaged himself, because he had not an income sufficient for their respectable maintenance. What a mockery of justice! Two young people fall in love, swear eternal fidelity, and, burning to marry without calculating the cost, ask the consent of friends. Prudent parent says, "No; I cannot approve your taking a wife when your income does not suffice to maintain yourself, and if you do, I shall withdraw my allowance." The young man is counselled to prudence, and he reluctantly resolves not to make a fool of himself and bring the young lady to poverty. For this an action is brought against him, and a sapient jury awards to the young lady 2000*l.* as damages for the loss she has sustained in escaping from a barrack life with an income of something less than a hundred a year!

Sentimental juries have done many strange things in actions for breach of promise, but never anything so monstrous as the verdict to which we refer. There was no seduction in the case; the defendant had insinuated nothing against the reputation of the plaintiff; his sole excuse was the very solid one, that his pay did not enable him to maintain a wife, and his father had declared he would stop his allowance if he were such a fool as to marry. Surely a valid excuse; surely such an one as every jurymen would have recognised in his own case. Is a promise of marriage, however hastily made, to be fulfilled at all hazards of happiness to the parties? A law that can operate in the manner we have described must be a bad law, and requires amendment.

And it will be worse hereafter. The new law of evidence admits the woman as a witness in this form of action. It may be well imagined what scenes will be enacted in the witness-box, and how readily soft sayings will be construed into offers of marriage by the too willing witnesses. Against the oath of a pretty girl, what will be the oath of the unlucky man? If juries forget justice in sentimentalism in the absence of the plaintiff, what will be their softheadedness and softheadedness in her presence? Actions will be more frequent than ever, and verdicts more absurd. The only remedy for the coming flood of mischief will be, to place the contract of marriage under the Statute of Frauds, and require that it shall be in writing. This would secure deliberation in the making of it, and certain proof, now wanting, that it has ever been made at all.

THE REVISING BARRISTERS ON THE HOME CIRCUIT.

THE facts to which we called attention last week have been the subject of several questions to the HOME SECRETARY in the House of Commons. The answers given have not been satisfactory, the LORD CHIEF BARON stating in his letter merely that he had not said that the Judges had "agreed" that the appointments should be given to Judges' sons. We threw somewhat of a veil over the matter, but "Temple," writing to the Pall Mall Gazette, has laid bare all the circumstances.

He writes: "When the appointments of revising barristers were made last summer there were on the Home Circuit only eight gentlemen soliciting re-election, and there would have been, therefore, in ordinary course, two vacancies to be filled up under 6 Vict. c. 18. But by 31 & 32 Vict. c. 58, an Act specially passed last year to expedite the registration before the general election, it was provided that the number of revising barristers to be appointed on the Home Circuit for the year 1868 should be fifteen, so that there were besides the two above mentioned five extra appointments, in all seven, to be made, and Mr. Baron MARTIN, then the senior Judge of assize, accordingly appointed, in addition to the eight who had previously held the posts, the following gentlemen:—

	Standing at the Bar.
Mr. G. Francis (Recorder of Faversham).....	18 years.
Mr. Philips	11 "
Mr. Witherspoon	6 "
Mr. Cowie	6 "
Mr. Channell (son of Mr. Baron Channell)	5 "
Mr. Williams (son of Mr. Justice Williams) (a)	4 "
Mr. Macleod	3 "

"Mr. Baron MARTIN allotted to Mr. FRANCIS one of the regular districts which had become vacant through the resignation of Mr. DEEDS, a barrister of thirty-nine years' standing. The appointment of Mr. FRANCIS and Mr. PHILIPS gave general satisfaction to the Circuit (which numbers about 400 members), and it was presumed that those two gentlemen would, as a matter of course, be reappointed this year.

"To the astonishment of all uninitiated, Chief Baron KELLY, the present senior Judge of assize, on being called upon to nominate, as usual, the ten revising barristers for the Home Circuit, thought it desirable to pass over Mr. FRANCIS and Mr. PHILIPS, and to select in their stead Mr. CHANNELL, the son of Mr. Baron CHANNELL, and a Mr. C. E. JEMMETT, a gentleman whose name does not appear either in the Law List or in the printed circuit list as a member of the Home Circuit at all, but who, it is believed, has gone the circuit this summer for the first time, and who practises as an equity draughtsman in Lincoln's-inn and in the Lancashire Chancery Court. If a reason is sought for this appointment it may, perhaps, be found in the fact that Mr. JEMMETT is fortunate enough to be the grandson of a former Lord Chancellor, 'an old and valued friend' of the CHIEF BARON."

We have pointed out that it is more essential now than it hitherto has been that revising barristers should possess some experience. To make the appointments subservient to influence must tend to weaken the confidence of the public as certainly as it disgusts all the working members of the Bar.

(a) The Right Honourable Sir E. V. Williams, till recently one of the judges of the Common Pleas.

THE NEW LAWS OF THE SESSION.

XI.—SPECIALTY AND CONTRACT DEBTS.

(32 & 33 Vict. c. 46.)

THIS Act is designed to abolish the distinction as to priority of payment between the specialty and simple contract debts of deceased persons. It enacts that, in the administration of the estate of every person dying after Jan. 1, 1870, no debt or liability shall be entitled to any preference or priority by reason merely that the same is secured by or arises under a bond, deed, or other instrument under seal, or is otherwise made or constituted a specialty debt; but all the creditors are to be treated as standing in equal degree, and to be paid accordingly out of the assets, whether legal or equitable.

XII.—HIGH CONSTABLES.

(32 & 33 Vict. c. 47.)

The abolition of the office of High Constable is accomplished by this Act, which enacts, by sect. 2, that when vacancies occur in this office they are not to be filled up, except where the High Constable is the returning officer at an election. Notices hitherto served by that officer are to be sent by post by the clerk to the justices. In actions against the hundred for compensation, the chief constable of police is to represent the hundred. Justices may give compensation to any person whose emoluments may be affected by this Act. Where any part of a hundred is within a borough or place having a separate police jurisdiction, the hundred is, for the purposes of this Act, to be deemed to be in the county in which the other part of such hundred or district is situate.

It is to be cited as "The High Constable's Act 1869."

XIII. COLLECTION OF FINES AND FEES BY STAMPS.

(32 & 33 Vict. c. 49.)

The object of this statute is to enable local authorities to avail themselves of the very convenient plan, adopted in the public offices, of collecting fines and fees by means of stamps. The local authority is defined to mean, in a county, the justices in general or quarter sessions assembled, and, in a borough, the council or other governing body.

Where the clerks to justices are paid wholly or in part by salary, the local authority may order that all or any of the fees, fines, and penalties payable to the treasurer of such county or borough shall be received by means of stamps, denoting the sums payable, and not in money, and the Treasury may order dies to be made and stamps issued for that purpose. Thereafter, unstamped documents are not to be valid. The local authority may authorise persons to sell such stamps, on such terms as it directs. The expenses are to be a charge upon the rate.

A series of penalties is then imposed for forging, uttering, selling, defacing, or having in possession forged stamps.

The Act is to be cited as "The Local Stamp Act 1869."

XIV.—COUNTY COURTS (ADMIRALTY JURISDICTION).

(32 & 33 Vict. c. 51.)

This Act amends certain defects in the Act that gave a limited Admiralty jurisdiction to the County Courts. It is to be read and interpreted as one Act with that statute.

The jurisdiction of the County Courts is hereby extended:

1. To any claim arising out of any agreement in relation to the use or hire of any ship; and as to any claim in tort in respect of goods carried in any ship to the extent of 300*l.*

2. To any of such claim exceeding 300*l.* in amount where the parties agree in writing to give the County Courts jurisdiction.

The 3rd section of the Act of 1868 is to extend to all claims for damage to ships, whether by collision or otherwise, to the amount of 300*l.*

In any Admiralty cause in the County Court, the judge may be assisted by two mercantile assessors, subject to the same rules as affect nautical assessors in the Act of 1868.

The assessor of the Court of Passage of Liverpool is empowered to make general rules and orders.

The Act is to come into operation on Sept. 1, and is to be cited as "The County Court Admiralty Jurisdiction Act 1868."

XV.—THE MUNICIPAL FRANCHISE.

(32 & 33 Vict. c. 55.)

This Act makes certain regulations as to the municipal franchise. One year's occupation is to be sufficient qualification instead of two years as hitherto. A councillor or alderman may be elected if he resides within fifteen miles of the borough, although by reason of his residence beyond seven miles he is not entitled to be on the burgess roll, provided that he be otherwise qualified to be on the roll (s. 3).

Where any borough, having less than four wards, is divided into a greater number of wards, the qualification for alderman or councillor is not therefore to be altered or increased.

Proprietors of shares in companies are not to be deemed contractors, so as to be disqualified from election to municipal offices by reason of being parties to a contract with the corporation: (s. 5.)

Every nomination for the office of councillor, assessor, or auditor must be sent to the borough clerk, so that the same may be received in his office before five o'clock in the evening of the last day for nomination.

Elections to supply extraordinary vacancies are to be held before the alderman of the ward, or mayor where there are no wards, the continuing assessor, and such burgess as the mayor shall appoint.

This Act is to be construed as one with the Municipal Corporation Act (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76).

DIGEST OF SHIPPING LAW CASES FROM 1860 TO 1864.

Edited by F. O. CRUMP, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

2. Consular courts.—Arrest of ship in cases of bottomry before consular courts is usual, and it is also competent to them to entertain proceedings in rem in collision cases. The jurisdiction of consular courts explained: (The Colchide, J. C. P. C., Aug. 5, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 378.)

3. Law of foreign countries.—Advances—Bottomry bond.—A law sanctioning arrest for advances will not convert a transaction on personal credit into a bottomry transaction; but the existence of such a law, in the absence of proof that the advances were made on personal credit, supports the presumption that the advances were made on the credit of the ship. The Alexander, 1 Dods. 278; The Augusta, 1b. 233; The Vibilia, 1 W. Rob. 1, compared: (The Laurel, A. C. Nov. 3 & 10, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 405; 33 L. J. 17.)

4. Illegal detention of salvors.—Action for extravagant amount.—Salvors, having arrested a foreign vessel in the Admiralty Court, in an action for an extravagant amount, and only 10*l.* being awarded by magistrates, were held liable in damages for the illegal detention of the ship and for costs. The ship was detained under arrest, the owners being unable to obtain bail for the amount claimed: (The Elbonore, A. C. Nov. 17, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 400.)

5. Damage by negligence before transshipment.—Liability.—A ship from which goods are transhipped is not liable to arrest for damage arising from negligence before the transshipment: (The Invades, A. C. Feb. 26, and March 4, 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 200; 31 L. J. 129, Adm.)

ASSIGNMENT.

1. Assignment of agreement to build ship.—Registration of agreement.—An agreement to build a schooner was assigned to secure 500*l.* and future advances. The ship herself was also assigned. This agreement was cancelled, and a contract entered into with the assignee to complete the ship and sell it to him for a sum including the 500*l.* The lien under the first agreement was held to be destroyed by merger of the sum secured in the sum named in the second agreement, but it was held that there was a lien under the latter agreement for the 500*l.* actually advanced. It was doubted whether the deed of assignment required registration under the Bills of Sale Act. It was held that the deed of sale did not: (Swanston v. Clay, Ch. C. April 22 and June 11, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 343; 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 563; 9 Jur. N. S. 401; 32 L. J. 338, 503; 4 Giff. 187.)

2. Off freight by master.—A master is not entitled to assign freight by means of bills of lading as security for advances made to him abroad. If he had such a right, the shipowner might lose his lien for chartered freight when more than bill of lading freight. The proper way to secure such advances when necessary, is by a bottomry bond: (Reynolds v. Jez, Q. B. 1865; Mich. Mar. Reg. June 24.)

BAIL.

1. Collision.—Security in cross action in personam decreed, where plaintiffs in first action in rem had obtained bail: (The Cameo, A. C., Feb. 11, 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 191.)

2. Security.—Bail for costs.—Application to extend it.—Where, in a cause of damage, in which the vessel of the defendants had been arrested, it appeared upon affidavits that the plaintiffs were mistaken as to the identity of the vessel proceeded against, and the defendants offered to disclose the real wrongdoer, the court refused to accede to an application to extend the security to be given by the plaintiffs to meet the costs if unsuccessful, so as to cover the damages caused by the wrongful arrest. Cases may arise in which the court will extend the amount beyond the costs: (The Peri, 32 L. J. 46, Adm.; 8 Jur. N. S. 1230.)

3. Amount sued for insufficient to cover damage by collision.—Bail not having been given in a collision suit, and the amount sued for being less than the actual cost of repairs to the ship, the plaintiff was allowed to amend by increasing the amount: (The Mæander, A. C., May 19, 1862.)

4. Claims disallowed.—Reduction.—In an action by a master for alleged disbursements, bail was given to cover all claims. The court, deciding that it had no jurisdiction as to some of the claims, reduced the bail in proportion: (The Chieftain, A. C., March 3, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 327; 32 L. J. 106; 9 Jur. N. S. 388; 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 120.)

BAR (LOADING OUTSIDE OF).

(See Charter-party, 5.)

(The General Steam Navigation Company v. Slipper, 1 Mar. Law Cas. 180; 5 L. T. Rep. N. S. 641; 32 L. J. 185, C. P.)

BARGE.

1. Damage done to "dummies" by steam-ship.—A ship in charge of a pilot came into collision with barges or "dummies" attached to a pier in the river Thames, by which the barges were damaged. In an action brought against the owners of the ship, it was held that they were not liable, because the master and crew were in no degree to blame; and that it made no difference whether the damage was the result of accident or the fault of the pilot: (The Castor, A. C., March 16, 1859; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 205; 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 106.)

1. Refusal to ship acids and gunpowder.—Stipulation in charter-party as to signing bills of lading, &c.—Condition precedent—Freight—Demurrage.—A charter-party contained a stipulation that the captain should "attend daily at the broker's office to sign bills of lading," and also to receive goods on board, and it was held that this stipulation was a condition precedent to the right of shipowner to sue for freight. A claim for demurrage is not applicable where there is a refusal by the master to take a cargo which bonâ fide he did not think was a proper one. The court acted on the law as laid down in Abbott on Shipping, edit. 1847, p. 266: (Error from the Common Bench, Seegur v. Duthie and others, E. C. Nov. 30, 1860; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 3; 29 L. J. 253, C. P.; 2 L. T. Rep. N. S. 483; 8 C. B. N. S., 45, 72; 30 L. J. 65, C. P.; 6 Jur. N. S. 1095; 7 Jur. N. S. 239; 3 L. T. Rep. N. S. 478.)

2. Consular manifest.—Charterer handing copies of bills of lading to shipowner—Custom at Liverpool—Misrepresentation.—A charterer is not bound to hand over to a shipowner copies of bills of lading in order that a consular manifest may be made out, there being no mercantile usage imposing such a duty upon him. The existence of a custom among merchants at a particular port for shippers of goods to make out for the captain a correct copy of bill of lading, cannot impose a duty which is not named in the contract. The handing over by the charterer of six out of eight bills of lading "as for the whole" would be a mere misrepresentation, for which, if fraudulently made, an action would lie at the instance of the shippers, but not at that of the shipowner. Distinction between Boorman v. Brown, 3 Q. B. 511; and Burnett v. Lynch, 5 B. & C. 589: (Dutton v.

Powles, Q. B. Jan. 22 and 25, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 22; E. C. Feb. 3 and 8, 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 209; 3 L. T. Rep. N. S. 695; 31 L. J. 191, Q. B., in error; 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 224; 8 Jur. N. S. 970; 2 B. & S. 174, in error; 8 Law Dig. 601.)

3. Indorsement—Liability for freight.—18 & 19 Vict. c. 111.—An indorsee of a bill of lading, who had indorsed it over to a purchaser for valuable consideration, was held not liable for freight under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 111 (the Bills of Lading Act), he not being the person to whom the property would ultimately pass under such bill of lading. It was held, further, that the common law liability of the assignee is founded on the principle that the actual receipt of the cargo is a good consideration for an implied promise to pay the charge attaching to it: (Smurthwaite v. Wilkins, C. B., Feb. 11, 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 198; 5 L. T. Rep. N. S. 842; 7 L. T. Rep. N. S. 65; 31 L. J. 214, C. P.; 11 C. B. N. S., 842.)

4. Demurrage—Liability of assignee of bill of lading.—Reference to charter-party.—In an action for demurrage against the assignee of a bill of lading, the evidence was that the bill of lading made the goods deliverable to the assignee on his paying freight according to charter-party, and that in the margin of such bill of lading was the following:—"There are eight working days for unloading in London." The defendant was held exempt from liability on the ground that there was no intimation in the bill of lading that the person receiving the goods thereunder was to pay demurrage: (Chappel v. Comfort, 31 L. J. 58, C. P.; 8 Jur., N. S., 177; 3 L. Dig. 1363; 4 L. Dig. 309.)

5. Liability of shipper—Freight—Effect of indorsement to shipowner—Vesting property in goods.—18 & 19 Vict. c. 111.—The defendant shipped at Liverpool on board the plaintiffs' vessel certain goods, and the master signed a bill of lading, which stated that the goods were shipped by the defendant, "as agent," and were to be delivered at the port of Colombo, "unto order or assigns, he or they paying freight for the goods." Before the shipment the plaintiffs advanced to E., on whose behalf the goods were shipped 400*l.*, under an undertaking by E. that he would indorse to them as security a bill of lading of the goods, wherein the freight should be payable by E. in this country. The defendant indorsed the bill of lading to E., who indorsed it to the plaintiffs as security for the advance, and a further advance made upon an estimate between the plaintiffs and E. of the value of the goods freight free. E. did not pay the freight, and it was held that the defendant was liable under the bill of lading to pay the freight to the plaintiffs. It was held further that 18 & 19 Vict. c. 111, did not vest the property in the goods in the plaintiffs, as indorsees of the bill of lading, so as to deprive them of their right to sue the defendant for the freight: (Fox v. Nott, 3 L. Dig. 1259; 6 H. & N. 630.)

6. Effect of condition in bill of lading—Delivery of goods—Measure of damages.—An action was brought by consignees of goods against the shipowner for non-delivery according to bills of lading in which there was a condition that the goods should be taken from the ship by the consignees immediately the ship was ready for discharge, and that otherwise they would be landed or put into craft at the merchant's risk and expense. The goods were landed at dock the day after the ship was ready for discharge, but after the consignees were ready to receive on payment of freight; and the goods having been detained for some time for dock charges, payment of which was refused, it was held, that it was for the jury whether the consignees had complied with the condition, or whether, if not, the defendant had gone beyond it in landing the goods; but that even if the plaintiffs were entitled to recover, yet they might have received the goods on payment of a small sum under protest, and they were not entitled to recover full damages for the delay, as their proper course was to have paid the disputed sum under protest, and then sued to recover it: (Alexiadi v. Robinson, 2 F. & F. 679, Cockburn, C. J.)

7. Signature of master—Freight.—The master of a ship is not entitled to sign bills of lading at a lower rate of freight than previously contracted for by the owners: (Pickernell v. Jauberry, 3 F. & F. 217, Erle, C. J.)

FEES ON BEERHOUSE LICENCES.

WE have received the following correspondence, which, just now, is important:

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "LAW TIMES."

Swindon, Wilts, 11th Aug. 1869.

Sir,—As there has been considerable doubt expressed whether justices' clerks could charge the same amount of fees for the certificate of justices as were allowed by statute for the alehouse licences, we wrote to the Home Secretary on the subject, and, having been favoured with his reply, we forward it for insertion in your paper, as it might be serviceable as a guide to the clerks.—

We remain, yours obediently,

BRADFORD AND FOOTE.

[COPY.]

Whitehall, 4th Aug. 1869.

Gentlemen,—I am directed by Mr. Secretary Bruce to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 29th ult., relative to fees payable to clerks to justices under the Wine and Beer-house Act 1869, and I am to inform you that Mr. Bruce is of opinion that the words in the 8th section of that Act cannot be construed so as to empower clerks to justices to demand the fees payable in respect of licences, under the 15th section of the Act 9 Geo. 4, c. 61.—I am, Gentlemen, your obedient servant.

A. F. O. LIDDELL.

PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS.

We quote the following from a contemporary :

A subject of no small importance to the general public was mooted at the recent gathering of doctors at Leeds too late to elicit the discussion which it undoubtedly deserves. Mr. Bateman, a Norwich practitioner, pointed out the very serious consequences which result from the present doubtful condition of the law as to the "privileged" or "non-privileged" nature of the communications between medical men and their patients. That in innumerable cases there could be no possible confidence placed in a doctor's discretion unless he were bound by a tacit obligation to secrecy, is a truth which few people would venture to deny. The doctor, in fact, stands towards his patients very much in the same relationship as the confessor, under the Roman Catholic system, towards his penitents. It is needless to specify cases in detail in which men and women would be absolutely shut out from all medical help if there were any chance of the public getting the slightest hint of the matter. And, in truth, the medical profession, as a rule, set up to their obligations of this kind with the most rigorous honour. Yet, as Mr. Bateman reminds us, doctors have now and then been compelled, in a court of law, to violate this pledge of secrecy, to the extreme injury of those who have consulted them. He specified various instances of great hardship and cruelty resulting from the existing practice, among others an accusation of poisoning, and a remarkable will case, in which a surgeon was forced to make public the true cause for which he had been called in to attend a female servant by her mistress's desire, and by which irreparable mischief was inflicted upon her. Vice-Chancellor Kindersley decided that he was bound to reveal the facts of the case, and the doctor was not only compelled to damage his patient for life, and having been guilty of no criminal offence whatsoever, but he had to pay 30*l.* for his own costs in getting the point of law determined. The question at issue is clear enough. On the one side is the danger of a miscarriage of justice, owing to the absence of important evidence. On the other is a destruction of that confidence between doctors and their patients without which the exercise of the healing art would in some cases be practically impossible.

Cordially do we indorse the views here suggested. The limitations of privileged communication, as recognised by the existing law, are irrational, unjust, and most injurious. All communications to persons whose calling raises a fair presumption that they are made in confidence, should be protected against compulsory revelation in the witness-box. A clergyman calls upon a sick or dying sinner to confess and repent. Under this solemn obligation he tells the story of his crimes. A patient makes known to his doctor secrets not to be divulged without shame and injury. Should not both be privileged communications? Is it not right to encourage the sinner to make his peace with Heaven? Is it not just to permit the sick in mind or body to tell their malady freely to him who cannot heal them unless he knows them? The revelations of a client to his solicitor are privileged, on the express ground of necessity that the client should without restraint give the information requisite to the due conduct of his suit. Surely the saving of the soul and the healing of the mind or of the body are at least as important as the protection of property.

It is objected that secrecy in such cases would defeat the administration of justice. It is not so. If it were known that the secret would be revealed, it would not be confided to the clergyman or the doctor, and in such case justice is kept in the dark as perfectly as if the lips of the receiver of the secret were sealed. Communications that ought to be made without reserve are by the existing law either prevented or mutilated, to the grievous injury of the sufferer, and to the advantage of none. We trust that the Recorder, to whom the country is already indebted for so many improvements in the criminal law, will next session undertake this one also.

THE LIABILITIES OF RAILWAY COMPANIES.

THE verdicts of juries in actions against railway companies have at length obtained attention in the House of Commons. Parliament being prorogued, the question of railway liability cannot be further discussed, except in the press, and there is therefore ample time for its consideration in all its bearings.

A very common error has been fallen into by the public journals, who have attempted an utterly useless analogy. Our readers will recollect a case, which we should imagine will come before the courts in banc, where damages to the extent of 1500*l.* were obtained by a person who tripped over a hole in a carpet upon a railway company's premises. The question is thereupon asked whether damages for such an accident would have been given or even sought for against a private individual. There is positively no analogy whatever between the two cases.

The liability of a company springs from the contract which the law implies between the company and the public that due care shall be taken by the former for the safety of the latter. The public go upon the premises of railway companies by invitation, and their so doing is a matter of gain to the companies. On the other hand anyone who enters upon the premises of a private individual is either a trespasser, or he is there by permission of the owner. But no contract can be implied on the part of the owner that the premises shall be in such a state of thorough repair that his visitor may not meet with an accident. We should not contend that railway companies are to be made responsible to the extent recently sanctioned, but it is very difficult to draw the line. We doubt much whether Parliament ought to do it.

In respect of another division of the question of the liability of companies, we have a case from Ireland upon the subject of "through" booking. Our readers will recollect Zunn's case, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 873, in which the liability of a company to a passenger was held to be limited to lines worked by them, or over which they have running powers, under sect. 7 of the Canal Traffic Act. The general liability of a company accepting a passenger with a through ticket given by another company was not decided. The liability in respect of goods has been discussed and adjudicated upon in the Irish case, a report of which, in the Exchequer Chamber, is given in the Irish Law Times. The importance of the question induces us to append this report, as follows:—

This case came before the Court of Exchequer Chamber upon appeal by the defendants from the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench allowing the cause shown against a conditional order that a verdict should be entered for the defendants in pursuance of the leave reserved in that behalf by the learned judge (Fitzgerald, J.) who tried the case. As appears from the learned judge's certificate, the action was brought for loss and injury to thirty-one bullocks of the plaintiff, delivered to the defendants to be carried from Dublin to Leicester, via Liverpool. Two of the cattle died, and several of the rest received injuries on the sea passage between Dublin and Liverpool:

"The question between the parties eventually was, whether there was evidence of a contract on the part of the defendants to carry the cattle from Dublin to Leicester.

"The evidence for the plaintiff on this subject was as follows:

"First, Patrick M'Court, the plaintiff, deposed as follows: On the 30th Oct. 1867 I took thirty-one bullocks to the North Wall, and went to Mr. Harden at his office there. [Armstrong, Serjt. calls on plaintiff to show that Harden was the agent of the defendants.] On former occasions I had booked cattle with Harden for the London and North-Western Railway Company, and paid the fare for the whole journey from Dublin at the office of the company in Liverpool. On the 30th Oct. I told Harden I had the thirty-one bullocks to go to Leicester by the London and North-Western Railway Company, and he said, 'All right; you are in time for the late boat.' I got no docket. I brought the cattle to the ship, and they were shipped by the foreman of the boat. I told Harden's man in the office the same as I had told him. My man, Finnegan, went on the ship with the cattle. I paid for the cattle in Liverpool, as by this docket, which is correct. (Docket handed in.)

"Cross-examined—Finnegan was charged 1*s.* for his passage; I have seen bills like this yellow one (now produced), but have never read the whole of any of them; I have formerly sent cattle by the City of Dublin Steam Packet Company to Liverpool. The London and North Western Railway Company have their own office on the North Wall for the transmission of goods, via Holyhead; Harden books for them; Roberts, of the North Wall, is the agent of the London and North Western Railway Company; Harden is agent of the City of Dublin Company.

"Patrick Finnegan—I went with the cattle; got a ticket from Harden, and paid 1*s.* for my bed; arrived at Liverpool at seven next morning; the men of the London and North Western Railway Company then took charge of the cattle and fed them, and put them on the trucks. I paid the fare at the office of the company in Liverpool, and got this waybill, which I gave up at Leicester. (a)

"Cross-examined.—I have been over before: I got a ticket on going over; I believe this is it; the men of the railway companies attend the arrival of the steamers with badges on their arms, and drive off the cattle for their different companies.

"Joseph Finnegan, cattle dealer—I know Harden; have shipped cattle with him for the interior of England by the defendants' line of railway, and I always paid in Liverpool at their office for the whole journey from Dublin.

"Patrick Shiels, horse dealer—I know Harden, and I have more than once booked horses with him for England by the defendants' line, and have paid at his office in Dublin, from Dublin to Rugby; they were carried through and received by men of the London and North-Western Railway Company at Liverpool.

"Cross-examined—I booked more than once with Harden. In 1867 I booked at his office for Rugby, and paid him the whole fare for the horses; I got through receipts, which I now produce (put in and read for the plaintiff.)

"James Hanlon, cattle dealer—I am in the habit of sending cattle to England, and I know Harden's office; I went there on the 21st May last, and I booked there forty-one bullocks for Northampton, by the London and North-Western Railway Company; I paid for the whole journey from Dublin to Northampton at the office of the defendants in Liverpool; I got no docket in Dublin.

"The plaintiff closes, reading the way bill and the two receipts produced by Shiels.

"Mr. Serjt. Armstrong states the case for defendants. Their case was, that the contract was not with them, but with the City of Dublin Steam Packet Company.

"EVIDENCE FOR DEFENCE.

"John Harden, agent of the City of Dublin Steam Packet Company.—14, North Wall, is our cattle office; the office of the defendants is on the same quay, but about one-eighth of a mile from us. I made the entry of plaintiff's cattle in our books, but I don't recollect the transaction. The City of Dublin Company own the line of steamers from Dublin to Liverpool, and the men on board are our men. I am not agent of the London and North-Western Railway Company, but I have authority to book cattle through over their line from Dublin via Liverpool. In booking the plaintiff's cattle I acted for the City of Dublin Company.

"Cross-examined by Dewese.—I would book horses for you to London by the London and North Western Railway Company, and they would carry it through; their office below ours is for booking cattle via Holyhead, ours is for cattle via Liverpool. The defendants have steamers on the Holyhead line, but not on the Liverpool line.

"To me.—It is by the directions of the City of Dublin Company that I book through over the defendants' line, and it is from my own company that I derive my authority; the defendants never refuse to receive the cattle I have booked; the company does not always receive the whole fare I sometimes receive the whole, and account with them for their share, and they account with us for our share.

"At the close of the evidence on both sides, informed the counsel for the parties that I proposed to send two questions to the jury on the traverse of the contract.

"1st. Whether Harden had authority from the defendants to enter into the contract with the plaintiff for the carriage of the cattle from Dublin to Leicester, via Liverpool.

"2nd. Whether the memorandum on the cattle driver's ticket formed part of the contract.

"Mr. Armstrong, for defendants, submits that there is no evidence that the defendants had entered into the contract stated in the plaint, and calls for a direction. I decline so to direct, but reserve leave to the defendants to move to enter a verdict, if I ought to have directed a verdict for them. The jury found in answer to the questions left to them, that Harden had authority from the defendants to enter into the contract as alleged, and that the memorandum on the cattle driver's ticket formed no part of the agreement, and I thereupon left to the jury the several issues, and submitted for their consideration the evidence adduced for the plaintiff, and for the defendants, with such observations as appeared to me fit and proper. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff on the first six issues with 45*l.* damages, and for the defendants on the last three issues.

THE NEW LAW COURTS.

In addition to the report of the committee (which was proposed by Mr. GOLDNEY), published last week, the House has ordered the publication of the following reports, presented but not adopted.

DRAFT REPORT.

Proposed by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, read the first time.

Your committee have decided to limit their inquiry to the subject which seems to be practically in issue, that is, the respective merits of the site already purchased north of the Strand for the erection of Courts of Justice, and the site south of the Strand, which the Government propose to purchase for the same purpose.

They propose to compare the two sites under the following heads:

1. Shape, buildings, and elevation.
2. Light, air, ventilation, and quiet.
3. Surroundings and approaches.
4. Convenience of public and of legal profession.
5. Expense.
6. Architectural capabilities.

1. Shape, Buildings, and Elevation.

"Nothing," in Mr. Street's opinion, "can be less convenient than the outline of the Carey-street site as it stands at present, and no one can," he thinks, "have sanctioned the purchase of such a site with the impression that the purchases were to terminate with those which were already completed."

The shape of the Carey-street site, especially towards the west, is inconvenient, and necessitates some new arrangements.

Nevertheless, your committee are of opinion that the same quantity of courts and offices can be placed on either site, and that these courts and offices are sufficient to answer the purpose which Parliament had in view in 1865.

The slope from Howard-street to the river is more rapid than the slope from Carey-street to the Strand. The height of Howard-street above the Embankment road is 21 feet. This, however, is not, in Mr. Street's opinion, any disadvantage. It adds very slightly to the expense, and it gives the opportunity of making approaches to the building at many different levels.

2. Light, Air, Ventilation, and Quiet.

In all these respects the Howard-street is decidedly superior to Carey-street. The wide open space in front of the proposed building secured by the river, the movement in the air produced by the perpetual rise and fall of its waters, the vicinity of the Temple Gardens, the superior character of the buildings east, west, and north, and the long distance that separates Howard-street from the noisy thoroughfare of the Strand, appear to establish these points beyond doubt or dispute.

3. Surroundings and Approaches.

Taking the Carey-street site as it stands without the purchase of more land, it is difficult to conceive a site more difficult of access, and placed in a more objectionable neighbourhood. From the north the Carey-street site can only be approached by narrow streets. Thus:

Little Queen-street is, at the narrowest part	27	8	wide
Great Queen-street	26	0	"
Portsmouth-street	18	0	"
Portugal-street	—	—	"
Serle-street	26	10	"
Duke-street	12	0	"
Chancery-lane	20	0	"

(Street, 701, 702.)

The only remaining approach is by the Strand, which is perhaps the most crowded thoroughfare in London.

The access to the Howard-street site is really admirable. 1. The Embankment road, 100 feet wide, from Westminster to Blackfriars, and thence to the very heart of the City by the new street from Blackfriars to the Mansion-house, the river with its steamers, Waterloo and Blackfriars bridges about equi-distant, a carriage road from Wellington-street by the terrace of Somerset-house, an approach from the Strand by four streets (Norfolk, Arundel, Surrey, and Essex streets) and a railway with a station close to the building, which brings the courts in direct communication with the City, the Houses of Parliament, and the suburbs that surround London, seem to leave little to desire.

As regards its surroundings the Carey-street site is most unfortunately placed.

The plan proposed by Mr. Street for building at Carey-street without purchasing further ground, leaves in one place only ten feet between the courts and unbought buildings, and hardly anywhere leaves the distance of sixty feet between the courts and property of the most objectionable description. To the west, Clare-market and its neighbourhood are highly offensive and objectionable, and Bell-yard is a place quite unsuited to the neighbourhood of a great public building. If the Carey-street site is selected, we think it quite obvious that very extensive purchases, north, east, and west, must at once be made. Howard-street is separated from the Strand by four streets, consisting of clean, substantial, and respectfully inhabited houses; on the east it is close to the Temple and the Temple Gardens; on the west it is flanked by King's College and Somerset-house with its terrace; and on the south is fronted by the Embankment road and the river. As regards approaches and surroundings, the superiority of the Howard-street site over the Carey-street site, supposing no purchases to be made to either, is great and unquestionable.

4. Convenience of Public and Legal Profession.

For the above reasons the committee are satisfied that, regarding London and its suburbs as a whole, and the Courts of Law as places to which everyone may be obliged to resort, the Embankment site offers the greatest amount of convenience to the public, by its accessibility, and by the greater comfort it will afford to those who resort to it. But it has been strongly urged upon the committee, on behalf of the Royal Commission and the Law Institution, that all this is a delusion; that the legal profession should alone be considered, that the legal profession resides mainly to the north of the Strand, and that the fact that Carey-street is more acceptable to them than Howard-street, is conclusive of the whole controversy. The facts on which this statement rest will not bear investigation. It appears from a paper handed in by Mr. Baxter, of the firm of Baxter, Rose, and Norton, that there live north of the Strand—Barristers, 895; Attorneys, 1342.

	Barristers.	Attorneys.
In the City	14	1270
Temple	1107	248
Westminster	56	200
	1177	1718

So that the numbers largely preponderate against those practitioners who profess to represent the legal profession. Moreover, the interests of the more numerous class are identified with those of the public. They are, as a rule, common law barristers, and carry with them jurors and witnesses, who are seldom seen in courts of equity. But the committee think that it is not on grounds like these that this question must now be decided. We are building for posterity and for a nation. It is our duty to do what is best for the public at large, in the full confidence that the legal profession will adapt their residence to whatever site may be decided upon, and will not permanently suffer by whatever may be for the general interest of the public. The committee regret to observe, that the claim which they have just been obliged to disallow has been supported by the circulation among members of Parliament of plans professing to represent the Carey-street and Howard-street sites, which were found, on examination by a committee of the Courts of Justice Commission, to be, as Mr. Street had pointed out, extremely inaccurate as to the shape and available area for building purposes on the two sites.

5. Expense.

The Carey-street site, already purchased, has cost somewhere about 780,000*l.* Mr. Hunt estimates the cost of the Howard-street site at 600,000*l.*, including the purchase of the houses on the north side of Howard-street. Mr. Street suggests the purchase of Essex-street for the purpose of widening it, improving the gradients, and making a road from the railway station to the Strand. However desirable this purchase may be, the committee do not regard it as a necessary adjunct to the purchase of the Howard-street site. The expense would be lightened by the sale of very valuable building sites in an improved street, but, even without this, Howard-street would be excellently provided with approaches. Beyond this there is no suggestion of any contingent purchase arising from the purchase of Howard-street. The case of Carey-street is very different. On the north and east Mr. Street is of opinion that all the land which was required for the larger scheme recommended by the Royal Commission will be required. On the west probably less would be wanted for the smaller building. A portion of the property purchased might, perhaps, be resold, though it is impossible to say how much, or whether, when once acquired, there would be a disposition to sell any of it. Old streets must be widened, new ones laid out, all the property between the courts and Chancery-lane and from the Law Institution to Fleet-street must be acquired. These various expenses Mr. Hunt, founding himself on an estimate by Mr. Pownall, estimates at 1,000,000*l.*, that is 600,000*l.* for the purchase of property, and 400,000*l.* for approaches, an estimate which appears to us by no means unreasonable. But after this expense has been incurred, Carey-street would still be, as to light and ventilation, quiet, surroundings, and approaches very inferior to Howard-street. As regards the site, therefore, the matter would seem to stand thus:—

Carey-street site	£780,000
Approaches and surroundings, &c.	1,000,000
	1,780,000
Howard-street	600,000
	£1,180,000

From this, however, some deduction may be made if any of the property be resold. The land between Howard-street and the Strand is estimated to be worth 1,000,000*l.*, and if any such sum could be expended, it would appear to be much better spent by clearing a portion of this away up to the Strand, than by dealing imperfectly with all the surroundings of Carey-street; on all other sides, with the single exception of King's College, extension is impracticable. This puts a clear and definite limit to the expense which can be incurred. The Carey-street site, on the other hand, has no such limit to its extension. It is almost encompassed by property, the very existence of which is a considerable nuisance, and the tendency to buy up which, within a rather long radius, will be almost irresistible. The buildings on the two sites Mr. Street estimates at 900,000*l.*, and Mr. Hunt at 800,000*l.* each; but when it is considered that Mr. Street's plan has not yet undergone the revision of the Board of Works, the two estimates are perhaps not very divergent. It is said that the foundation of the Howard-street Courts will be very expensive. Mr. Street allows 50,000*l.* for concrete foundations for the whole building; and Mr. Fowler, who has the best practical experience on the subject, thinks the foundations provided by Mr. Street would be sufficient. Against this expense is to be set the great convenience and cheapness of carrying all the building materials by water, which has been estimated at 5 per cent. on the whole cost of the building. It is urged that against the Howard-street site should be set the cost of reselling the land already acquired in Carey-street, a loss estimated by Mr. Pownall at 440,000*l.* But Mr. Hunt is in possession of an offer by which the Carey-street site would be taken off the hands of the Government at an ultimate rent at the rate of 3½ per cent. on 780,000*l.*; and it is very probable that, considering the value which the vicinity of the Law Courts must impart to the estate, better terms may be obtained.

Upon the whole, the committee think that the Howard-street site may be acquired, built upon, and provided with all necessary access for 1,600,000*l.*; that the Carey-street site cannot be built on and provided with necessary access for less than an ultimate outlay of 1,580,000*l.*, and that even then the surroundings, air, quiet, light, ventilation, and approaches will be very inferior on the Carey-street site, and will lead to even greater expense hereafter.

6. Architectural Capabilities.

The site north of the Strand offers, undoubtedly, a fine elevated position for a public building; but this is marred by its surroundings. From nearer streets it would be little seen, and as part of a more remote view it would be darkened by smoke, and obscured by the lofty buildings which might be expected to rise to the height of (e. g.) Messrs

Smith's warehouses on the south side of the Strand. The building on the Embankment site would be visible from the river, from the Embankment road, from Waterloo, Blackfriars, and Westminster Bridges, and from the Houses of Parliament.

Your committee are of opinion that one great incidental advantage of the selection of the Howard-street site will be the facility it would afford for making, at very small cost, a great new artery from north to south just where it is most wanted. The prolongation of Essex-street to Holborn would be very easily accomplished, and would give access to the Embankment roadway at the most convenient point for the whole north of London.

Your committee are of opinion that, on the grounds of superior light and quiet, of better access and surroundings, of economy, public convenience, and architectural effect, the Howard-street site is greatly to be preferred to the site between Carey-street and the Strand; and they recommend that the standing orders be suspended, and the Bill introduced by the Government be proceeded with without delay.

SAYINGS AND DOINGS OF THE COURTS.

[CONTRIBUTED BY THE REPORTERS OF THE SEVERAL COURTS.]

ROLLS COURT.

THIS court rose for the Long Vacation on Saturday the 31st July, but his Lordship sat again on Friday the 6th inst., to deliver judgment in several cases, which were argued during the Trinity after sittings. We shall briefly notice two of them.

The first, Attorney-General v. The Wax Chandlers' Company, was an information filed to obtain a declaration that the defendants are trustees of certain property devised to them in 1558 by William Kendall, and of the income of it, for charitable purposes. The property consisted of houses in Old Change, which, at the time of the testator's death, were of the annual value of 9l. 6s. The testator directed that the company should distribute, in charity, certain sums amounting to 7l. 10s. per annum, and that, after retaining 5s. a year for their master and wardens, they should apply the residue in the reparation of the houses; and in default of performance of the condition as to repairs, the property was to go to the testator's next of kin. The annual value of the property has now risen to 330l., and the company, after making the payments directed by the will, have hitherto applied all the residue for their own purposes. The informants contended that the residue ought to be applied for charitable purposes. His Lordship was of opinion that the devise was in substance a gift to the company upon trust to pay out of the rents the specific sums expressly given to charitable objects, and upon condition to keep the property in repair; subject to this, he was of opinion that the property was devised to the company for their own benefit, and that the surplus rents belonged to them. What led his Lordship to determine in this way a point that was new, and as to which he had in vain searched for cases in point, was the main fact of the testator having been a member of, and, therefore, greatly interested in the company. If the gift of the residue did not go to the company, there was, in fact, no benefit provided for the company, inasmuch as the gift of 5s. a year was personal to the master and wardens. If the residue were held applicable to charity, there was no motive to induce the company to perform the trust, and the gift over in default of performance of the condition as to repairs was a threat without terror, for they would lose nothing by it. As to a part of the informants' case, which endeavoured to show that a piece of land bought by the company had been bought out of moneys derived from the property in question, and was, therefore, subject to the same trusts, there was no evidence that the purchase had been made from that source, and strict proof to this effect was necessary. The information must, therefore, be dismissed on all points with costs.

The other case, Re Duke of Newcastle, ex parte Padwick, was a petition by Mr. Padwick, a judgment-creditor of the Duke of Newcastle, for an order for the sale of the life interest of the Duke of Newcastle in the family mansion in Carlton House-terrace. The petition was presented under the Judgment Law Amendment Act (27 & 28 Vict. c. 112), which authorises the court to make an order for the sale of a debtor's property, which has been "actually delivered in execution," and the writ of execution of which has been duly registered. The house is vested in trustees to be held by them in trust for the duke during his life upon certain conditions. His Lordship was of opinion that the duke had performed these conditions, and that it was, therefore, clear that the duke had a life interest in the house. His Lordship then read the sections of the Act, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, which empower a judgment-creditor to reach the land of his debtor, and observed that in that Act the Legislature evidently provided a more effective remedy as to certain kinds of property than as to others. The 4th section of the 27 & 28 Vict. c. 112 required the land to be "actually delivered in execution," and the Legislature must be taken to have known that there were certain interests in land which were incapable of being "actually delivered in execution." The equitable life interest of the duke in the mansion was such an interest, and his Lordship said that he could not extend the express operation of the Act. Here there had been, and there could be, no actual delivery, and he must, therefore, make no order on the petition.

V. C. MALINS' COURT.

One or two cases remain to be noticed at the conclusion of the sittings.

Cook v. Hathway raised the question whether the assessors of a party to a suit who had become bankrupt, and who had been ordered to pay costs, must pay such costs as a condition to prosecuting the proceedings. After a lengthened argument the Vice-Chancellor held that the assignees could not continue the suit without fulfilling the bankrupt's obligation, and must pay the costs.

Chance v. Shephard was a case of trade mark, being a motion to restrain the defendant from publishing and circulating a newspaper called The Bedfordshire Express, and in large type, and in smaller, under, "General Advertiser to the County," the plaintiff being the proprietor of The Bedfordshire Express, in large type, and in smaller "And General Advertiser for Cambridge, Hertfordshire, Huntingdonshire, and Middlesex." The plaintiff had purchased the paper in 1866, and registered himself as proprietor and publisher in Jan. last, and in June the defendant had commenced at Luton (ten miles distant only), publishing one with the words Bedfordshire Express in precisely the same large open German type. On being communicated with he wrote requesting that the plaintiff would cease to publish the Bedfordshire Express, the copyright of which was his property, he having in the mean time registered it as his. The motion was resisted in a lengthened argument, which the Vice-Chancellor considered totally untenable, and said that the plaintiff, being the proprietor, by purchase, of a paper, which had been published for nine years, and of which he was the registered owner, the defendant had published one with the identical title, and instead of apologising, had actually requested him to cease publishing—a course almost transcending credibility—and pleaded ignorance, equally difficult to believe; of course, he must be restrained.

Another case was Carter v. Carter, where there was a covenant in a marriage settlement by the husband and wife, to settle any property coming to the wife or the husband in her right, the words "during the coverture" not being inserted; but the words "executors or administrators" following the names of the parties. The husband acquired landed property in New Zealand, and the question was whether it was included in the covenant, and it was held that it was not.

The last case occupying the public attention, although not adjudicated upon, deserves mention, as it related to the well-known "Captive Balloon." The bill was filed and motion made by the Rev. Mr. Cromwell, the principal of St. Mark's College, immediately adjoining Ashburnham House, where the machine is exhibited. This establishment consists of 700 pupils, and there was evidence that the constant overhanging of the enormous machine caused the greatest terror and annoyance. The cable (1500 feet long) weighed two tons, and there was a great weight of ballast, and also the risk of explosion and escape. After considerable discussion, and a suggestion by the Vice-Chancellor that some undertaking should be given, the case was ordered to stand until Michaelmas term; a vast number having the same distinction.

LEGISLATION AND JURISPRUDENCE.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

BANKRUPTCY BILL.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR moved that the House agree to the consequential amendments of the Commons, and do not insist on those of their own amendments to which the Commons have disagreed. The Commons had adopted all their Lordships' amendments, which occupied twelve pages, with the exception of two. One of these related to companies, which their Lordships thought should not be adjudged bankrupt. It had been found that there might be an easy means of avoiding bankruptcy in such cases, and the Commons had therefore adhered to their original proposal. The other left the appointment of the committee of inspection optional. With regard to non-traders the Bill originally exposed them to the consequences of bankruptcy to a greater extent than the existing law; but the select committee of this House, while amending this, went further and diminished their present liability. The Commons now proposed to continue the existing liability, neither widening nor contracting it.—The motion was agreed to.

THE NEW LAW COURTS.

LORD DENMAN rose to call attention to the report of the select committee of the House of Commons on the new law courts. The noble lord condemned the proposed abandonment of the Carey-street site, and thought that if the Government decided upon taking that step they would most assuredly have cause hereafter to regret it. The Carey-street site was far preferable to the circumscribed site by the side of the river. Considering that a pledge had been given to Parliament that the clearing away of the old site should not exceed 750,000l., and that that sum had already been exceeded, they should pause before they determined upon embarking in any fresh scheme. For himself, he thought the proposed concentration of the law courts was really unnecessary, and he was happy to say that that opinion was shared in by one member of their Lordships' House. It was desirable that the trial of causes should be carried on in different parts of the metropolis.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THE MARRIAGE LAWS.

SIR ROUNDELL PALMER rose to call attention to the report of the Marriage Law Commissioners, and to inquire whether it was the intention of Her Majesty's Government, in the next session of Parliament, to introduce a Bill for the purpose of establishing a marriage law as nearly as possible uniform for all parts of the United Kingdom, upon principles of equality as between all Churches and religious denominations. He said, the House will permit me to remind them of both the circumstances under which the commission of 1865 was appointed on this subject, and the nature of the report made by the commission. There had been several Bills introduced in order to mitigate the inequalities and inconveniences of the extraordinary state of law as to marriage now prevailing in Ireland. There had also been brought very prominently before the attention of the public a succession of cases of a very singular description from Scotland, illustrating what are there called irregular marriages. One of these cases attained very great notoriety, in which, first of all, a lady took advantage of an action by a tradesman against her alleged husband, to raise the question of her being married in Ireland. She had been married there by a Roman Catholic priest, but the husband was a Protestant. She persuaded an Irish jury that she was married. The question was afterwards raised in Scotland. There was a great difference of opinion on the Bench, and it was ultimately decided by the House of Lords that she was not married. That and other remarkable trials called attention to the singular law prevailing in Scotland, and to the great scandal of there being in this highly civilised United Kingdom such a great mass and variety of marriage laws which no Government had yet attempted to reduce to consistent and uniform principles. Under these circumstances a Royal Commission was appointed to inquire into the laws in force in different parts of the United Kingdom with respect to the constitution and proof of the contract of marriage and registration and other means of preserving evidence thereof, and also into the state and operation of the laws of the United Kingdom in relation to the marriages of European British subjects in India and the colonies—a much less important, but not unimportant subject. The commission was composed of many persons of very considerable eminence in the law, and of representatives well selected, I think, from all parts of the United Kingdom. Its report received the entire concurrence of three noblemen, who now or formerly filled the office of Lord Chancellor—Lord Chelmsford, Lord Cairns, and Lord Hatherley; and the mention of those three names as entirely and without qualification concurring in the report must go a long way to recommend to the favourable consideration of the House the propositions which have their united sanction. Besides these eminent men there were on the commission the judge of the Divorce Court, Lord Penzance, who entirely concurred in their recommendations; the Queen's Advocate, Sir Travers Triss, who, with some trifling modifications, concurred in the report; Mr. Walpole, the right hon. member of the University of Cambridge; and Lord Lyveden, the under-secretary for the Colonies, and the Lord Chancellor of Ireland—both able and worthy representatives of the Roman Catholic portion of the community. From Scotland, entirely concurring in the recommendations of the report, were the Solicitor-General for Scotland, Mr. Young, and Mr. Murray Dunlop, formerly M.P. for Greenock, and who, I believe, I am not wrong in saying is connected with the free church. These gentlemen—entirely and without qualification, except in the case of one of their number, an immaterial qualification on a small point of detail, the rest without any qualification—occurred in the report to which I shall now invite the attention of the House. There was one other commissioner—Lord Lieutenant Inglie—who did not concur in the recommendations affecting Scotland. With that exception we have the Scotch commissioners representing the feeling of the Presbyterians; the Irish commissioners representing the Roman Catholics; and the English commissioners representing the legal science, as well as, to a great degree, the general intelligence of the country. The state of the law which the commission had to examine and report upon exhibits probably as extraordinary a condition of the law as it is possible to imagine in a country so highly civilised as ours. I will take, in the first place, the marriage law of England, which, perhaps, of the three presents the smallest amount of anomaly. The law of England draws a very sharp line at the outset between members of the Established Church and all other members of the community. As regards members of the Established Church, in its desire to guard against clandestine marriages the law recognises two modes of doing so. One, the process of marriage by banns, appears by the evidence to be perfectly useless in the only cases in which, at first sight, it would appear to be of importance. Persons who are desirous of evading the law go to populous places where they are not known (hear, hear), and where the long bead-roll of names is called over in such a way as not only to constitute in itself a somewhat indecorous interruption of divine service, but to defeat altogether the object of publicity. I really believe that if any hon. member of this House had a member of his family desirous of being married without his knowledge the most effectual method of accomplishing this would be by having the banns published either in London or in Manchester in the very church attended by the other members of the family. (Laughter.) The names would probably not be heard at all, or if heard would not be recognised; and accordingly the publication of banns has been found to be a useless formality. In some small rural parishes, it is true the publication of banns may be useful, but then the same object would be accomplished by the mere personal knowledge of the clergyman. As to the licence, a very small sum—a sum small to us, at least, though, perhaps, not small to everybody—will procure what is practically a dispensation from all precautions whatever. A person may get the licence and be married the same day. The inquiries made are purely formal, and if everything that is said in answer is absolutely false it will make no difference whatever in the ultimate results. In the Established Church marriages no civil registrar is required to be present, or to have any notice given to him. On the other hand, with regard to all bodies of Nonconformists the presence of a civil registrar is required, and notice has to be given in his office. In many respects the particulars required are well conceived; but the difficulty is to explain why, whatever is good for one class as far as notice be concerned is not equally good for the other. The House, generally speaking, would probably be disposed to agree that if we could provide a uniform law applicable on the same principle to all it would be a great improvement. The Quakers have also a separate law for themselves; I do not know that any great inconvenience arises from this, but it is possible that there may be questions of a theological character which would invalidate marriages. In all those forms of English marriages the law may be invalidated by a non-compliance with any of the requirements of the law, although these, in themselves, for the most part do not seem so important as that a marriage once solemnised should be voided on the mere ground of error or accident. For instance, if the place where the marriage is celebrated is not properly consecrated or set apart, or if the marriage is effected in some other locality than where the banns have been called, or if any other error affecting time or place is made by the parties, that entirely invalidates the marriage, although, upon other grounds, there may be no objection whatever to it. (Hear, hear.) These are criticisms which in Scotland are thought to be solid and sound against the English marriage law. The Commissioners thought them well deserving of attention, and while it would be a great thing to get an uniform system for all parts of the United Kingdom, they considered that this was to be gained by applying principles of amendment to every part of the United Kingdom, and not by endeavouring to force the law of England upon Scotland or Ireland, or the law of either of these countries upon England. Then I come to Ireland, where the state of the law is very much worse. To reduce it to a minimum, there are at least five different methods of marriage. First of all, in the Established Church, or what was lately the Established Church, there is no material difference from the system prevailing in England, though there are some differences of detail, with which I will not trouble the House, which seem to exist only for the purpose of increasing the anomalies. Then we come to the Roman Catholics. As to them there is absolutely no marriage law at all; it is left under the old canon law, and nothing but the presence of a priest is necessary in order to make a complete and good marriage between Roman Catholics in Ireland. But if a Roman Catholic priest should presume to celebrate a marriage between a Roman Catholic and a Protestant, or even between a Roman Catholic and a person who had been a Protestant within a year of the marriage, till comparatively a recent time that was a capital offence, and even now it is a criminal offence of a very high order, and the marriage is absolutely void. That has not been so in England. A Roman Catholic priest, in a place duly registered, might solemnise a marriage, even between two Protestants; and so might a Dissenting minister. But in Ireland the marriage law is denominational to a most extraordinary degree. There is one law for the Episcopalian Anglicans; another, and the loosest of all, except that of Scotland, for the Roman Catholics; a third law for the Presbyterians, who have a special system of their own, rather like that of the lately Established Church, but not the same; and for all the other bodies a fourth system. Lastly, there is the system of civil registry. I do not fatigue the House by going into all the diversities of forms and ceremonies, differing in each case; it is enough to say that there has been a most ingenious system of inventing differences and distinctions where the object ought to have been to get rid of them, these differences and distinctions turning almost entirely on sectarian and denominational grounds. Then in Scotland we have a state of things entirely different from both the other countries. Till 1834 this state of things existed; there were several laws in force, and there were also irregular marriages, subjecting the parties to fine. I do not know whether they were subject to imprisonment also; at all events, they were subject to punishment at the hands of the civil magistrate, but the marriages themselves were recognised as valid. The regular marriages were those in which banns were asked, and marriages celebrated by a minister of religion; but the regular marriages were only permitted to be celebrated by ministers of the Established Church. The consequence was that a very considerable proportion of the marriages in Scotland were solemnised irregularly, and parties used to go before the magistrates and get themselves convicted of the crime of an irregular marriage, and so procure, if not a marriage licence in another form, at all events some legal recognition of the fact. In 1834 Lord Russell, then in this House, introduced a measure to do away with these religious distinctions, enabling ministers of other religious denominations to solemnise marriages in all respects as lawful as those of the Established Church. He left—I do not know whether by accident or not—one singular remnant of the old system, namely, a requirement that the banns should be in all cases called in the Established Church; and a very odd operation that regulation is attended with. Strictly speaking, the banns should be called on three successive Sundays, so that a long time ought to elapse before the marriage can be effected; but, practically, on the payment of a fee, the session clerk will call over the three sets of banns altogether. (Laughter.) That is a remnant of the old system, and I suppose the small fee has operated very mildly, for it has not been got rid of; but the effect of the change has been that irregular marriages have disappeared very largely from the general social system of the country. Irregular marriages still occur here and there; but all the witnesses from Scotland say that the enormous preponderating proportion of marriages in Scotland are solemnised in the presence of a minister of religion, and therefore the wants and habits of the people no longer oppose themselves, as they formerly did, to such an assimilation of the law of the countries as would get rid of irregular marriages altogether. I may mention that a material step was taken by Lord Brougham fourteen or fifteen years ago, when he introduced an Act to abolish Gretna-green marriages, a system of irregular marriages, of which advantage was taken by the people in England, for the most part living just over the Border. But that Act abolished these marriages by requiring fourteen days' residence in Scotland. No public excitement followed. From that time Gretna-green marriages have ceased, and the time has now become ripe for dealing with the subject of the marriage law of Scotland in a manner consistent with preponderance of opinion, not only of those who bring ecclesiastical minds to bear upon the question, but those who look on it from an imperial point of view, of whom there are many in Scotland as well as elsewhere. The system of irregular marriages in Scotland is a very startling thing to those whose minds are not thoroughly accustomed to it. It is contracted in two different ways. Suppose any gentleman in this House visited a house in Scotland where a young lady happened to be staying, and that he and the young lady took a walk together, and in the course of the walk he took a piece of paper out of his pocket on which they wrote down a mutual promise to marry; though the piece of paper might be simply put back again into his pocket, though nothing might be said to anybody about the writing, and though nobody else might be there at the time, if the persons afterwards lived in a certain way together, that would be a valid marriage, although nobody might know of the fact of the marriage for years afterwards. No mere promise will constitute a marriage unless it be in writing, and unless subsequente copula. A promise so given and so followed constitutes a good marriage, however long it may be kept secret. There is another even even more extraordinary mode, in which no writing at all is necessary, and that is where the promise is made not de futuro but de presenti—where the woman says, "I take you, John, for my husband," and where the man says, "I take you, Mary, for my wife," before witnesses. A promise of that kind being brought up at any future period, even although the people have never lived together, will hold good, and will be sufficient to overturn any perfectly honourable and reputable marriage that either of the parties may have subsequently entered into, and this actually occurred in the celebrated Dalrymple case. I think that after all it is only right that we should endeavour to have a just and uniform marriage law, founded upon certain and reasonable principles. Having already overturned a material portion of the marriage law of Ireland, I venture to suggest that the report of the commission to which I have referred is entitled to the favourable consideration of Her Majesty's Government. I do not ask them to pledge themselves to all the recommendations in that report, some of which refer to the preliminaries of marriage, and others to the notice to be given, and may admit of a difference of opinion and of improvement; but most of them will, I think, be approved by the House generally. I will state the most important of the recommendations which I think may be adopted with advantage. The commissioners think that our object should be to secure uniformity of the marriage laws, if possible, throughout the United Kingdom, to secure, as far as possible, the authentication of the fact of the marriage having occurred, so that a man and woman may know with certainty whether they are married or not, and while taking precautions against hasty and precipitate marriages, to endeavour to secure the greatest freedom in the matter of marriage. How do the commissioners propose to effect those objects? Of course the commissioners had to consider whether it was desirable to adopt the continental system, under which the parties merely enter into a civil contract before civil officers. While admitting the simplicity of that system, the commissioners did not recommend its adoption for two reasons, the first being that it would be impossible to reconcile the public mind of these kingdoms to a purely secular system of marriage; and the second being that they could obtain their object by making every religious minister, of whatever denomination, a civil officer for the purpose of seeing that the requirements of the law are satisfied, and of reporting to the registrar that the marriage has been solemnised. This latter system they have embodied in their recommendations under which all religious denominations are to be placed upon an equal footing, while, of course, they propose to sweep away all incompetency on account of religious belief. The commission was appointed in March 1865, and they did not make their report until July 1868, and, therefore, it is evident that they have not drawn up these recommendations without having carefully considered the subject. I will not further occupy the time of the House, but will conclude by asking the right hon. gentleman the Home Secretary whether it is the intention of Her Majesty's Government, in the next session of Parliament, to introduce a Bill for the purpose of establishing a marriage law as nearly as possible uniform for all parts of the United Kingdom, upon principles of equality as between all churches and religious denominations.—Mr. MONK remarked that he rose chiefly for the purpose of adverting to two of the recommendations of the commissioners, the first of which related to the presence of the civil registrar at the solemnisation of marriages in places of worship other than those belonging to the Church of England, a regulation that had occasioned painful feelings among those who were subject to it. He was glad to find that the commissioners recommended that that cause of irritation should be removed, and he trusted that under any future measure which might be introduced on this subject ministers of all denominations might be placed on an equal footing, and that they would be allowed to register marriages without the presence of a civil registrar. The other recommendation to which he wished to refer was that which related to the publication of the banns, which, by the Marriage Act of Lord Hardwicke, was directed to be read after the Second Lesson, whereas many ministers thought it right to publish them after reading the Nicene Creed, according to the law as it stood before the passing of Lord Hardwicke's Act. Upon this point he wished to remark that the proper time for the publication of the banns should be clearly fixed by law. An objection had been taken by Dr. Travers Twiss to one of the recommendations of the commissioners, on the ground that the licence should not be granted by the same spiritual person who was subsequently to celebrate the marriage. By extending the power of granting marriage licences to every incumbent of a parish—who would be the same person that had to solemnise the marriage—you would take away the greatest check against irregular marriages which the present system of licences provided.—Mr. BRUCE.—It would be impossible for me to give an absolute pledge that this question of the marriage laws will be dealt with in its entirety next session; but I can honestly assure my hon. and learned friend that it is the desire of the Government to deal with the question, and deal with it once and for all, and to deal with it on the broad and liberal principles laid down in the report of the commissioners. Without binding myself as to details, I may say that the measure will be not less broad and liberal than the scheme which my hon. and learned friend, as the organ of the commission, has recommended in his speech this evening. I hope that, under the circumstances of the case, my hon. and learned friend will be satisfied with that assurance.—Mr. HINDE PALMER expressed a hope that when dealing with the marriage laws the Government would consider the subject of marriage with a deceased wife's sister, with the view of arriving at a settlement on that much-disputed question.

REVISING BARRISTERS.

Col. FRENCH asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if there was any foundation for the statement which appeared in the Morning Star newspaper on Wednesday, the 4th Aug. last, that the Lord Chief Baron called a meeting of the revising barristers for the Home Circuit at Lewes, and informed them that the judges had agreed that the appointment to their offices should be considered temporary, and that in future a preference should always be shown to the sons and relatives of judges in selecting individuals for these offices.—Mr. Secretary BRUCE said he was sure that his right hon. friend in putting the question merely wished to give him an opportunity, and of giving the learned judge an opportunity, of publicly denying that statement, which, if true, would reflect discredit upon him and upon the bench to which he belonged. The best answer he could give would be in the words of the letter of the learned Chief Baron, who said that the statement in the newspaper must be founded upon some unaccountable mistake, or else was a mere fiction. He never informed the revising barristers on the Home Circuit, nor anybody else, that the judges had agreed that the appointment to these offices should be considered temporary, nor had the judges ever so agreed. The judges had not the power to make appointments permanent or temporary at their pleasure. What he did was to call together at Lewes the gentlemen whom he intended to appoint, and he had since appointed them according to the provisions of the statute. He had appointed ten gentlemen. One of them was the son of a judge, another was the grandson of a former Lord Chancellor, and the remaining eight were appointments. They were all unquestionably competent men.—Mr. CRAWFORD subsequently drew attention to recent appointments on the Home Circuit by the Lord Chief Baron. The senior judge on the Summer Circuit had the right of appointing revising barristers each year, but the practice had invariably been, unless there were special reasons for not doing so, to re-appoint the same persons year after year. On the present occasion that practice had been departed from in one, if not in two, cases; and in one case especially a gentleman of long standing at the bar, who much needed the appointment, and who had discharged the duties of the office with general satisfaction, had been displaced by a young gentleman only recently called to the bar, and only this year elected a member of the Home Circuit.—Mr. BRUCE stated that all the information he possessed upon the subject had been given to the House in the letter he read yesterday. He certainly should not feel it his duty to ask the judge entrusted with the power of naming revising barristers why he selected one person in preference to another. The hon. gentleman had fallen into an obvious error in stating that the person to whom he referred had only recently been called to the bar, as the Act of Parliament required that the person appointed should be a barrister of three years' standing.—Mr. CRAWFORD.—I said he had only just joined the circuit.—Mr. WEST also inquired whether it was the intention of the Government to introduce a measure, in accordance with the recommendation of the select committee on the registration of voters, which would have the effect of relieving the judges travelling the Summer Circuit from the appointment of revising barristers.—Mr. BRUCE said that the subject was under the consideration of the Government. The recommendations of the select committee were alternative, and it was impossible to say whether, if the Government should propose to alter the present system of making the appointments, which of these alternative propositions they would adopt.

THE NEW PALACE OF JUSTICE.

Mr. W. WILLIAMS asked the First Commissioner of Works whether it was true that in the event of the New Palace of Justice not being erected upon the Thames Embankment site, it was in the power of the Metropolitan Railway Company to build a station in the centre of the land reclaimed from the river; and whether it was not the intention of the Government to secure to the public the whole of the land so reclaimed for the purposes of recreation.—Mr. LAYARD said that under their Act the railway company had power to build their station in the place indicated. If the new palace were to be built on the Howard-street site the railway station would be removed higher up—at Essex-street; but in any case their station would not interfere with the public recreation ground.—In answer to Mr. MONK, the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said that, as the Committee had not recommended a new site for the Palace of Justice, there would be no notices for purchase of lands. Neither had any grants of money been made by Parliament, and therefore he did not think that Government would take any steps respecting the new buildings during the recess.

INEQUALITY OF ASSIZE SENTENCES.

Mr. BRUCE wished to say a few words in regard to a question put to him on Friday last by the hon. member for Yorke (Mr. J. Lowther), in the absence of the hon. baronet (Sir G. Jenkinson), as to the inequality of sentences passed by the judges during the present assizes. The notice only appeared in the paper that morning, and, having had no opportunity of communicating with the learned judges, he could give no other than a vague and general answer. He had since received communications from two of the learned judges, and it was for the interest of public justice that the substance of these communications should be made known. One was from Mr. Justice Keating, who sentenced a man named W. Rapson Oates—a herbalist, who was charged at the Bodmin Assizes with obtaining 2l. 5s. under false pretences—to five years' penal servitude, although the jury recommended the prisoner to mercy. Mr. Justice Keating stated:—"It is quite true that the sentence was as stated, and the recommendation by the jury given. But when it appeared that the prisoner had previously been convicted twice in 1868, once for obtaining money under false pretences, four months' hard labour, and once for larceny, with nine months' hard labour, besides having been in gaol under convictions as a vagrant and for assault, one month each, in 1865 and 1866, the jury stated they wished to withdraw their recommendation, which, they said, they never would have made if they had known the facts. I may add, that after getting the 2l. 5s. from the poor prosecutrix, he endeavoured the following day to obtain a pound under the same false pretence that he was the second son of the head warder of the gaol at Bodmin, who was known to her, and on whose account she advanced the money. I considered that the public had a right to be protected against a very clever and expert swindler and thief, and so passed the sentence complained of." (Hear, hear.) The other sentence was passed by Mr. Justice Mellor. The hon. member said of it that it was the case of "a man named Simmons, convicted for feloniously killing his wife at Redhill. Details very revolting and brutal. Guilty, but recommended to mercy; not concurred in by the judge; sentence, five years' penal servitude." The learned judge wrote:—"In the case of Simmons, charged with the manslaughter of his wife, I heard no evidence of any kick or act of violence done by the prisoner other than that of the pushing which caused the fall. It is true the doctor stated that injuries such as he found might have been occasioned by the prisoner knocking down his wife and then kicking her; but, in answer to a question put by me, he stated that on the post mortem examination he found no marks or bruises which might not have been caused by her falling downstairs. The daughter of the prisoner stated that she saw him pushing her mother out at the door, but did not see her fall. In answer to questions from me, she said that there was a landing-place outside the door of the chamber, the size of which she pointed out to the jury by referring to a partition in the court. The jury were of opinion that the prisoner had no intention to push the deceased downstairs, and recommended him to mercy. I delayed to pass sentence because I did not feel sure that I rightly understood the reasons upon which the recommendation was based. Upon considering the evidence of the daughter, it appeared to me that it might afford a reasonable foundation for the recommendation, and I accordingly passed the mitigated sentence of five years' penal servitude." The next case showed that the hon. baronet who put the notice on the paper was not acquainted with the facts. His words were:—"Case 2, same court, a man named Fyfield, convicted for feloniously cutting and wounding his wife with intent to murder her; details very bad; guilty; a bad case of unlawfully wounding; sentence, 18 months' imprisonment." The judge wrote:—"With reference to Fyfield's case the question assumes that he was 'convicted of feloniously cutting and wounding his wife with intent to murder her,' whereas he was acquitted of the felony and of the intent to murder, and of the intent to do grievous bodily harm, and convicted of the misdemeanor of unlawfully wounding only. I passed upon him the sentence 18 months' imprisonment with hard labour." Of the third case, where it was alleged that a man who severely beat another with his fists was sentenced to 15 years' penal servitude, the judge said:—"In Gore's case the indictment charged him with feloniously doing grievous bodily harm with intent to do grievous bodily harm. It appeared that under the pretence of buying a collar the prisoner went into the shop of the prosecutor, struck him behind the ear, and beat him with 'his fists' until he became insensible, remaining in that condition for many hours; spitting of blood followed, accompanied by other symptoms of so grave a character that the surgeon expressed a strong opinion that he will never recover, and will most probably speedily die as the result of the violence of the prisoner. He fainted as he left the court. The avowed motive of the prisoner was revenge against the unfortunate prosecutor for having given evidence against him on a trial for assaulting the police. Two considerations influenced me in the sentence which I passed—in the first place, the grave and dangerous character of the violence inflicted; in the second place, the necessity of throwing such protection around witnesses" (Hear, hear.) "who may hereafter be compelled to give evidence as a severe sentence was calculated to afford. My practice is to make a great distinction in the punishment of crimes of violence committed deliberately and with malice aforethought" (Hear, hear.) "and crimes of violence committed without premeditation and without malice aforethought. I endeavoured to apply this distinction in the sentences referred to; whether I succeeded or not I leave to the judgment of others." (Hear, hear.)

PUBLIC PROSECUTOR.

Sir D. WEDDERBURN gave notice that next session he would move for a select committee to inquire into the working of the system of public prosecutor in Scotland, with a view to its amendment, and to the establishment of similar institutions in other parts of the United Kingdom.

THE HIGHWAYS ACT.

Viscount SIDMOUTH asked whether the Government intended to introduce a Bill next session for an amendment of the Highways Act.—The Earl of Morley replied that the Government were desirous of dealing with the question, and that it was possible a Bill would be introduced next session.

THE REVISION OF THE STATUTE LAW.

Mr. HADFIELD asked the Secretary to the Treasury whether Lord Cairns' letter on the revision of the statute law, and the report thereon, would be laid before the House during the present session; and, if not, what was the cause of the delay, and whether it might be expected before the next session, and when.—Mr. AYTON said the letter of Lord Cairns would be laid on the table. The report was only received four or five days ago, and it was not of a conclusive character and it would be necessary that further inquiry should take place before the Government could decide upon the course to be taken. He had no objection to print the papers as far as they had gone.

THE COMPOUND HOUSEHOLDER.

Mr. HARCOURT gave notice that, early next session, he would move a resolution to the effect that it was expedient to repeal so much of the Reform Act as made the right of voting for members of Parliament dependent upon the payment of rates. (Hear, hear.)

LICENCES OF CABS AND OMNIBUSES.

Mr. GOURLEY, on the part of Mr. Eykyn, asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he would, before fixing the sum to be paid by the owners of omnibuses and cabs for the new police regulation licences, consider the arrangements existing in provincial towns, and so adapt the charges that the burden of local taxation may not fall heavier on the owners of public vehicles in the metropolis than in other places, the Secretary of State being empowered by the present Metropolitan Act to fix two guineas as the licence on each public carriage, which in other places is only ten shillings per annum.—Mr. BRUCE said the charges of licensing had hitherto amounted to 13,000l. a year. It had been stated by the Chancellor of the Exchequer that the expenses of the management of vehicles of public conveyance would be defrayed out of the taxes raised on these Inquiry would be made into the rates paid in provincial towns, but he could not say that the London rates would be reduced to the same point.

ELECTION LAW.

LYNN ELECTION PETITION.—The costs of the respondent to the Lynn election petition, the Hon. R. Bourke, M.P., which will have to be paid by the petitioners, have been taxed at 107l. About 200l. was struck off.

FEMALE FRANCHISE.—In the Act of Parliament just printed to shorten the term of residence required as a qualification for the municipal franchise, it is enacted that in the statutes on the subject "whenever words occur which import the masculine gender the same shall be held to include females for all purposes connected with and having reference to the right to vote in the election of councillors, auditors, and assessors." One year's occupation is to entitle persons to the municipal franchise.

THE TAUNTON AND NOTTINGHAM ELECTION PETITIONS.—Two applications have been made, in the Taunton election petition and the late Nottingham election petition, with regard to the deposit by the petitioner for costs. Mr. Rickards (Wyatt and Hoakin) attended in both cases for the sitting members, Mr. H. James and Mr. Seely. In the Taunton case a recognisance had been entered into, and in the Nottingham petition 1000l. had been deposited. Mr. Baron Bramwell said the Act required proof that all witnesses for the petitioners had been paid. A clerk from Wilkins and Blyth referred to a newspaper report that Mr. Justice Willes had made an order for the repayment subject to an affidavit being filed. Mr. Baron Bramwell preferred Mr. Justice Willes dealing with the matter from his experience in election petitions. With respect to the Nottingham case it was stated that an affidavit would be filed that all the witnesses had been paid, and the summons was adjourned.

WORKING MEN IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.—At a meeting of working men, held at the Vestry-hall, Chelsea, Mr. Moy Thomas in the chair, Sir Charles Dilke, after speaking upon the subject of registration, which the meeting had been called to consider, went on to say that he had received communications from certain bodies in London, stating that there was a strong feeling abroad in reference to the presence of working men in the House of Commons, that they would be the powerless delegates of those upon whom they might depend for their incomes. He had considered the matter, and his proposal was that such members should, upon taking their seats at the commencement of each new Parliament, make a declaration similar to that now made by Ministers as the condition of receiving a pension, and affirm that they could not duly perform the duties required by them as members of Parliament without receiving the salary allowed by the Act proposed to members of the House of Commons making this declaration. He thought that a Bill to this effect would be supported by those on both sides of the House who objected to general payment of members.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

HUSBAND AND WIFE — SEPARATION — RECOHABITATION.—By a marriage settlement certain stock belonging to the wife was assigned to trustees upon trust to pay out of the income thereof 50l. a year to the husband for his life, and the residue of the income to the wife for her separate use; there were certain trusts to the issue of the marriage, and in default of issue all the property was to be reassigned to the wife in the event of her predeceasing her husband, but if the husband survived the wife, he was to have one-half of the income for life, and the wife was to have power to appoint the whole of the capital by will, and in default of appointment, one-half of the whole property was to go to the husband, and the other half to the wife's next of kin. Certain shares, also belonging to the wife, were not included in the settlement, but were placed in the name of the husband. Shortly after the marriage the husband and wife separated, and a deed of separation was then executed, whereby the husband transferred the shares to a trustee for the wife for her separate use, and covenanted not to molest her, the trustee covenanting to indemnify the husband against his wife's debts during the separation. It was also provided that the trusts of the settlement should still subsist, notwithstanding the deed of separation. Subsequently the husband and wife renewed their cohabitation and afterwards discontinued it, and again renewed it at various times. Ultimately, the trustee refused to continue the payments under the separation-deed, without the direction of the court, and thereupon the wife instituted a suit to enforce the trusts of the deed, and, so far as might be necessary, those of the settlement: Held, that inasmuch as the effect of the re-cohabitation was to render the husband liable for the wife's debts, the chief consideration for the deed had failed, and the husband was entitled to the shares assigned under it; but with respect to the stock it was still subject to the trusts of the marriage settlement: (O'Malley v. Blease, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 899. V.C.S.)

LEGACY TO EXECUTOR.—EVIDENCE OF ACTING AS EXECUTOR.—A testator gave "unto his executors thereafter named 200 guineas for their trouble in the execution of the trusts of that his will in addition to any other legacy he might have given them." He appointed his brothers B. and W. his executors. The testator died in 1859, and B. predeceased him. W. left England for New South Wales in 1861, and resided there till his death in 1862. In 1854 W. had executed a general power of attorney, authorising his brother A. to act as his attorney in all matters. In 1860 A. was appointed administrator with the will annexed of the testator's estate, and shortly after this he received a power of attorney from W., dated prior to the letters of administration, authorising A. to procure letters of administration to be granted to him, but nevertheless for W.'s use and benefit, until W. should apply for and obtain probate to be granted to himself; but in consequence of the previous grant of administration A. made no further application for probate on behalf of W. W. died in 1862. A. filed a bill to administer the testator's estate, whereby he stated that W. had accepted and acted in execution of the trusts of the will by the plaintiff as his attorney: Held, that the legacy must be paid to W.'s representatives, the statements in the bill being conclusive as to the fact that W. had accepted the trusts and acted as executor: (Lewis v. Mathews, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 905. V.C. M.)

COPYRIGHT—PIRACY—MEASURE OF DAMAGES—EVIDENCE.—The legitimate and the piratical use of an author's work considered. There is no monopoly in a theory nor in the speculations and illustrations by which an author may have supported a theory promulgated by him; but no one will be permitted, with or without acknowledgment, to take a material and substantial portion of his work, of his arguments, his illustrations, and his authorities, for the purpose of improving a rival publication. The measure of damages in questions of piracy stated. The effect of the evidence by interested parties in the subject matter of a suit considered: (Pike v. Nicholas, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S., 906. V.C. J.)

WESTERN CIRCUIT—BODMIN.

MOREHEAD v. SOBEY.

Lopes, Q.C. and Arundell Rogers were counsel for the plaintiff.

Cole, Q.C. for the defendant.

This was an action against an attorney for negligence in a conveyance of some titles.

The great defence was that there was no retainer.

The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff for 169l. 19s. 3d., with leave to move on the point of a retainer.

THE WORK OF THE SESSION.—During the past session 288 Bills were passed; of these, 126 were public Bills, but include a few of a hybrid character, and the remaining 162 were private Bills.

THE LONG VACATION.—On Tuesday the chief clerks at the Chancery chambers concluded their sittings. The long vacation has commenced, and terminates on the 28th Oct. Vice-Chancellor James is the vacation judge, and his offices will be opened on the days appointed.

CHANCERY DIVIDENDS.—A rector writes to the Times: "Pray allow me one word. I am a poor incumbent; part of my income consists of a dividend on the purchase-money of a portion of the glebe sold to a railway company, and vested in the names of the rector and accountant-general of the Court of Chancery. I gave a power of attorney to a banker, who told me after a time that my account was not worth keeping, and he could not any longer take the trouble to receive the dividend. He did not offer to return the 1l. 5s. 6d. which the power cost. I then went to the accountant-general's office in Chancery-lane, got a solicitor to identify me (another fee), made oath that I was myself, got my warrant for payment signed and re-signed, and at last received the money from the Bank of England. This process has to be repeated half-yearly, with the exception of the solicitor, to receive 4l. 8s. 8d."

SINGULAR BREACH OF PROMISE CASE.—DAMAGES 2000l.—At the Croydon Assizes, before the Lord Chief Baron, the case of Morony v. Lee was tried. The plaintiff was a young lady belonging to a family of high respectability in the county of Clare, in Ireland. The defendant is an officer in the 13th Light Infantry. The acquaintance between them commenced at Gibraltar, where the defendant was stationed with his regiment, and in Jan. 1863, the defendant made an offer of marriage to the plaintiff, which was approved by the lady's mother, and after her return to Ireland the defendant paid a visit to her family. After this he wrote in affectionate terms to the plaintiff, but on going to visit his father at Boulogne the latter threatened him that if he carried out his engagement he would stop his allowance of 120l. a year and disinherit him. The defendant upon this wrote to the plaintiff, coolly breaking off the engagement, and the latter replied that she had sufficient means in addition to his pay to enable them to live in comfort. He, however, declined to fulfil his engagement, and for this the action was brought at the instance of the lady's relatives, she herself it was hinted, being unwilling to bring the case before the public. The jury awarded 2000l. damages.

THE BENCH AND THE BAR.

DEATH OF LORD JUSTICE SELWYN.

Lord Justice Selwyn died on Wednesday morning, at his residence, at Richmond. He had been a long time seriously ill, and had undergone a formidable operation, from which it was hoped, however, that he had recovered. The late Lord Justice (Sir Charles Jasper Selwyn) was the youngest son of the late Mr. William Selwyn, Q. C., of Richmond, and was born in 1813. He was consequently fifty-six years of age. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's-inn in 1840, received silk in 1856, was Solicitor-General in 1867, and was appointed one of the Lords Justices of Appeal in 1868.

The contemporary comments of the press are generally interesting on these occasions.

The Times remarks that his death will affect the whole Bar, and especially the Equity Bar, from the most senior to the most junior members, with the sentiment of a personal bereavement. No one was as counsel more sympathetic, and no judge has ever shown himself more considerate or more patient. Some natural apprehension was felt at his original appointment to the Court of Appeal, which appeared to imply a carelessness in party leaders of any but party claims to judicial office; but it must in fairness be admitted that whatever the sometimes rather hypercritical judgment of the Bar, the other branch of the Profession, which scrutinises conclusions rather than the reasons for them, has exhibited no discontent at what was in itself something of an experiment. Perhaps, in fact, clear common sense, without conspicuous legal genius, is more likely to arrive at sound conclusions in an appellate court than in a court of first instance. A really brilliant advocate is a more exceptional being than a satisfactory judge; more of the creative faculty is necessary to make him; and for the same reason an appellate judge has in some respects an easier task in criticising the propositions and arguments of the judge below than that judge had in constructing them. But, on the other hand, a mistake goes further, and has much more dangerous consequences, when made by the higher tribunal. Even the mere authority of an appeal court is infinitely greater than that of a court of first instance, as a single day's attendance in court and observation of the varying degrees of respect accorded to the precedents cited would teach any intelligent layman. It has been given to but few Judges of first instance besides Sir William Grant to be accepted as framers of the science of law—a science which must be always in a state of development, on pain of being else always in a state of stagnation, which, with it is retrogression. From this point of view, the importance of filling up, not merely respectably, but in the best possible way, the vacancy in the Appeal Court in Chancery is obvious. The Times suggests Lord Cairns or Sir Roundell Palmer, though it doubts whether either of them would accept the post. The country has perhaps the greatest claim on the services of Lord Cairns.

The Telegraph remarks that the late Lord Justice was a singularly successful rather than a brilliant man. If, however, he did not acquire the reputation of a profound lawyer, he was highly esteemed at the Bar, and he will be deeply regretted.

ASSIZE INTELLIGENCE.

NORFOLK CIRCUIT.

Norwich, Aug. 6.—The commissions were opened here yesterday afternoon. The business on the civil side is very light, there being only 5 causes. (1 marked for a special jury). On the Crown side there are 30 prisoners. There is a charge of murder by poison, and there are charges of poisoning with intent to murder, manslaughter, rape, burglary, perjury, concealment of birth, horse stealing, and larceny.

MIDLAND CIRCUIT.

Leeds, Aug. 5.—The cause list is very light, there being only 44 causes, of which 14 are special juries. Since the assizes have been held in this town there have been an average of 60 to 70 causes. The calendar is also very light, there being only 76 prisoners, or 60 cases. There is 1 case of child murder, and 6 of manslaughter, 11 of housebreaking and burglary, and 11 of robbery with violence.

WESTERN CIRCUIT.

Wells, Aug. 6.—The learned judges opened the commission for holding the assizes for the county of Somerset in this city yesterday afternoon. Their Lordships afterwards attended Divine service in the cathedral. This morning the judges took their seats at ten o'clock; Mr. Justice Keating presiding in the Crown court, and Mr. Justice Lush sitting at Nisi Prius. The business is light, there being only 30 prisoners and 9 causes, 4 of which are marked to be tried by special juries.

OXFORD CIRCUIT.

Gloucester, Aug. 10.—The learned judges opened the commissions here yesterday, and attended Divine service at the cathedral. The cause list contains 18 entries, of which 4 only are marked for special juries. There are 24 prisoners for trial.

The two revising barristerships vacant on the Northern Circuit have been bestowed by Mr. Justice Hannen, the senior judge, on Mr. Walter Trevelyan and Mr. James Shiel.

DOWNING-STREET, Aug. 5.—The Queen has been pleased to appoint David P. Chalmers, Esq., to be magistrate for the Gold Coast Settlement on the Western Coast of Africa, and assessor to the native chiefs within the protected territories near or adjacent to the said settlement.

WHITEHALL, Aug. 4.—The Queen has been pleased to appoint the Right Hon. George William Baron Lyttelton, K.C.M.G.; Arthur Hobhouse, Esq., one of Her Majesty's Counsel; and the Rev. Hugh George Robinson, M.A., to be Commissioners for the purposes of "The Endowed Schools Act, 1869." The Queen has also been pleased to appoint Henry John Roby, Esq., M.A., to be secretary to the said commissioners.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.—At a Session of Council, held on the 7th inst., Mr. George Grote, President of the College, in the chair, the following appointments were made:—Mr. Sheldon Amos, M.A., of the Inner Temple, to be Professor of Jurisprudence; Mr. William Alexander Hunter, M.A., of the Middle Temple, to be Professor of Roman Law; Mr. J. W. Willis Bund, M.A., LL.B., of Lincoln's Inn, to be Professor of Constitutional Law and History; Professor J. E. Cairnes, M.A., and Professor T. E. Cliffe Leslie, LL.B., to be Examiners for the Ricardo Scholarship in Political Economy.

THE LORD ADVOCATE.—Some wicked wag has been perpetrating the joke on some of our Scottish contemporaries that Mr. Moncreiff, the Lord Advocate, is about to be appointed Governor of the colony of Northern Australia. We need not say there is no such colony, though we believe it is in contemplation to found one on the newly-discovered lands to the north of that great island continent. But if it were established to-morrow the salary would not be such as to tempt the Lord Advocate. It is possible the report may have taken its rise from the known disposition of Mr. Gladstone to provide for the learned lord in some situation worthy of his talents and services. Through the unlucky accidents of official life he has missed the two great prizes in his own profession, the Lord Justice-Generalship and the Lord Justice-Clerkship, both of which were filled up by his contemporaries or juniors when he was out of office, and there is no other legal office in Scotland worth his acceptance. But he has earned rank and ease; and, besides, he stops the way for other men. Mr. Young, the Solicitor-General, it is said, grows impatient of the shade in which he is cast by his chief. Altogether, it is most desirable that Mr. Moncreiff should be promoted, but not to the embry colony of Northern Australia.—London Scotsman.

MR. GIFFARD, Q.C., AND THE CORPORATION OF CARDIFF.—At the last meeting of the Cardiff Town Council, the Mayor drew attention to the expenses incurred by him at the late election, and mentioned that the town clerk had applied to the agents of Mr. Giffard and Colonel Stuart for the repayment of those expenses. Colonel Stuart's agent only took objection to one item in the charge made for the service of the police, but, with this exception, he offered to give a cheque for the remainder. Mr. Giffard's agent, however, disputed items amounting altogether to 84l. 15s. 9d. The corporation expenses incurred at the late election amounted to 324l. 7s. 6d., and Mr. Giffard's proportion was 162l. 3s. 9d. There were, however, some books supplied to each candidate value about 12l., respecting which there was no dispute. This made Colonel Stuart's account 174l. 13s. 9d., and Mr. Mathews had tendered his cheque for 175l. Mr. Giffard's agent, on the contrary, objected to claims made for the erection of booths, which he said were too numerous, but which had been ordered for the sake of preventing any excessive crowd at any one point. The returning officers' salaries cost the corporation 39l. 12s. Mr. Giffard's agent only allowed 18l. There were several other items disputed, reducing his account to 77l. 7s., leaving the corporation to pay 84l. 15s. 9d. Some very strong remarks were made respecting this dispute on the part of the agents, but the town clerk admitted that one barrister had given it as his opinion that their charges could not be sustained, while another had said they could. They were, however, charges usually made to candidates at these elections. After some suggestions to write to Mr. Giffard himself, it was resolved that the town clerk wait on the agent again for a settlement of the claim.

HIGHWAYS—CATTLE STRAYING THEREON—WHAT IS A HIGHWAY.—Sect. 25 of the Highway Act 1864, inflicts a penalty on cattle straying on or lying about any highway, "except on any part of any highway as pass over any common or waste or unenclosed ground." A highway having strips of greensward along its sides, on which a right exists of pasturing cattle, is not a highway passing over "any common, waste, or unenclosed ground" within the section, and the owner of cattle who has a right to pasture them is subject to the penalty if he permits them to stray upon the highway. What is a highway is a question of fact for the justices: (Freestone v. Caswell, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 918. Q. B.)

NUISANCES REMOVAL—CONSTRUCTION OF SEWERS—NOTICE—COMPENSATION.—The defendants, as commissioners under their Local Improvements Act 1846, are empowered, on giving twenty-eight days' public notice, to construct drains through the inclosed lands of private owners who, being aggrieved, have power, under the Act, to object and appeal. By the 3rd sect. of the Nuisances Removal Act 1855, the defendants, as such commissioners, are the local authority, and as such have power, under sect. 22 of the same Act, and sect. 67 of the General Highway Act, and without giving any notice, to construct drains through inclosed private land adjoining a highway, in order to remove an existing nuisance. A watercourse at Bury having, by being used as a sewer, become a public nuisance, which it was impossible to remove without constructing a new sewer, the defendants, as such improvement commissioners, without giving any notice, constructed a new sewer across inclosed land of the plaintiff adjoining a highway, and where no sewer had previously existed, and not in the line of the original watercourse, it being admitted that the course adopted by them was the most inexpensive and convenient one for the purpose. Held, by the Court of Exchequer Chamber, reversing the decision of the majority of the court below: First, that the words "instead thereof" in sect. 22 of the Nuisances Removal Act 1855, import a power to make a new sewer whenever that is the proper course in order to cure a nuisance. Secondly, that, construing that section with sect. 67 of the General Highway Act, and the necessity for making a new sewer being ascertained as a matter of fact, the commissioners have a discretion in what direction such new sewer shall be made; and exercising such discretion honestly, without misconduct or negligence, they are not liable to have it overruled in a court of law. Thirdly, that, in the absence of any proof of the contrary, credit ought to be given to them, as public officers who have prima facie acted within the limits of their jurisdiction, for having done so with honesty and discretion. Fourthly, that the defendants had power to act under either the local Act or the General Act at their option, and that the making of the sewer in the way adopted by them was within their power under the General Act. Fifthly, that the compensation clause in the Act secures compensation for all damage caused to the owner or occupier by the making of such a sewer through his land: (Earl of Derby v. The Bury Improvement Commissioners, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 927. Ex. Ch.)

WANDSWORTH POLICE COURT.

Wednesday, Aug. 11.

(Before Mr. DAYMAN.)

Query whether the justices have power to grant transfers—The New Beerhouse Act.

The 9th clause of the new Act was again brought under the notice of Mr. Dayman as to the transfer of licences.

Mr. DAYMAN said the question was whether the magistrates of police courts, which were petty sessions, had the power, but the Police Act seemed to exclude them. It gave one magistrate power to do any act directed to be done by more than one justice, but it provided that none of the magistrates should be competent to sit as a justice of the peace, either alone or with other justices, in anything which was to be done at a special or petty sessions of all the justices acting in the division. Many of the magistrates thought they had the power, but he had looked a good deal into the matter, and, strictly speaking, he thought the Police Act excluded them.

A Supervisor of Excise, who was present, said the magistrates had power to grant protection in the same way as under the Public-house Act.

Mr. DAYMAN said the new Beerhouse Act did not give them that power.

The supervisor mentioned that he had construed the power of the magistrates in that way, for he thought it would be hard upon beer-shop-keepers to be deprived from selling for two or three months, as he could not grant the licence until the certificate of transfer had been obtained.

Mr. DAYMAN said it was an omission in the Act, but probably it arose from the Legislature wishing to give the local justices a discretionary power of granting a transfer. There had been a great deal of discussion of late about the conduct of beerhouses, and it was thought desirable that they should be more under the immediate control of the justices. When he came to look more closely into the Act, he doubted whether they really had the power of granting transfers.

PROFITABLE CONVICT LABOUR.—In the course of last year about fifty convicts were transferred from the Straits Settlements to Labuan, to be employed on public works and in other ways. A portion of them were allotted to the Oriental Coal Company, lessees from the Crown of the coal mines in the island of Labuan, to be employed in loading coals on board ships. They are stated to have worked diligently and willingly, and to have earned three or four times as much as their cost to the public.

DOG LICENCES.—At the Kingston borough petty sessions, the Excise authorities obtained convictions in eighteen cases against persons for keeping dogs without getting a licence in proper time. Most of the defendants had taken out licences after the visit of the Inland Revenue officers, and in nearly every case the charge was for keeping an "unlicensed" dog in May last. The fines were, as a rule, 1l. 5s. with costs.

RECENT POLICE COURT SCENES.—It is not without reason that our police magistrates have been out of spirits lately. The usual absence of jocularity on the bench to which we lately adverted is fully accounted for by the imminent risk to life and limb now incurred by the magistrates when sitting on the bench which in days of yore was wont to vibrate with the laughter excited by their condescending jests. It was but the other day that Mr. D'Eyncourt had to fly for his life from the magisterial chair in Marlborough-street, on the memorable occasion of the battle of the boys. Recently, Mr. Paget, at the police court in Thames-street, was nearly demolished by four Irishmen whom he had sentenced to imprisonment for assaulting and nearly murdering "a female relative." The moment the sentence was pronounced the interesting captives set up a loud yell and abused the magistrate in "the most offensive language ever heard." It must have been horribly offensive, for we should have thought it almost impossible to improve upon the language which it is our privilege to hear almost hourly in the streets of London from some of the lower classes when they are in good spirits, or happen to differ slightly from each other in an argument. The prisoners then threatened the magistrate, and made a sacrilegious effort to reach the bench. They had not counted on the gallantry of the officials of the court, who showed by their conduct that they are not only prepared to laugh at the worthy magistrate's jokes, but also to die for him if necessary. Two ushers, two warrant officers, the gaoler, and others threw themselves between the ruffians and their prey. A deadly struggle then commenced, and the account states that "the magistrate was really in considerable danger." But for the nerve displayed by Mr. Paget and his defenders, we might have witnessed the painful spectacle of a magistrate driven from the bench and chased through the streets by four Irishmen, who, having half murdered a relation, were not likely to show much mercy to one not endeared to them by ties of blood, and who had moreover just sentenced them to imprisonment. Fortunately help was at hand. At this moment nine police constables of the K Division appeared on the scene, and eventually, after a violent struggle, kicking, and plunging, the misguided men were forced into a cell, and ultimately conveyed in the prison van (or "Black Maria," as it is playfully called in rough society) to the House of Correction. We cannot help thinking that it would be advisable, in case of accidents arising from turbulence in our police courts, to have a trapdoor with machinery beneath the bench, which would enable our worthy magistrates, when they have delivered a sentence, to descend rapidly, like demons in a pantomime, out of harm's way, leaving the prisoners at the bar to digest their observations without the power of assaulting them. Prisoners should be allowed every latitude, but on no account should they be permitted to remonstrate with the magistrate by pummelling him on the bench.—Pall-Mall Gazette.

LANDLORD AND TENANT—LEASE—FORFEITURE.—B. procuring from C. a lease of a shop and premises, purchased certain tenant's fixtures from D., the outgoing tenant, whose lease contained a proviso that if he should execute an assignment for the benefit of creditors, the lessor should have power to re-enter and repossess. B. executed such an assignment of his property to E., and the lessor gave notice of forfeiture, and took formal possession. C. proceeded to sell the fixtures; but on a motion for an injunction it was held that the tenant's fixtures could not be removed after the lease had been thus forfeited: (Pugh v. Arton, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 865. V.C.M.)

RENEWABLE LEASEHOLDS—WILL—PURCHASE OF REVERSION.—A testatrix by her will gave all her real and personal estate (including a leasehold estate at M., specifically named in the will) to trustees upon trust to pay the rents and income thereof to her son P. H. for life, with remainders over. And she directed her trustees, if they should think proper, but not otherwise, at the usual times to procure renewals of the leases of her leasehold premises, and for that purpose she empowered them to raise the sums required for such renewals out of the trust funds, or the rents of the leaseholds, or by mortgage, &c. The leasehold estate at M. was held under a twenty-one years' lease from the Dean and Chapter of Bristol, renewable every seven years. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners, in whom the reversion afterwards became vested, refused to renew the lease, and the trustees, purporting to act under the powers conferred by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 124, ss. 20 and 39, entered into an agreement with the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, whereby the trustees were to surrender a certain portion of the leasehold property to the commissioners, who were, in exchange, to convey the reversion of the residue to the trustees upon the trusts of the will. On a summons by the trustees to obtain the sanction of the court to this agreement: Held, that this was not a transaction which the trustees could carry into effect without the consent of the tenant for life (whose income would thereby be considerably diminished), for it was a case for an exercise of discretion: (Hayward v. Pile, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 896. M. R.)

WILL—MEANING OF "ALL MY OTHER PROPERTY."—B. devised certain real estate specifically, and then devised and bequeathed "all his other property whatsoever and wheresoever" to C. D. (without any words of limitation) on trust, to continue the same in the investments on which it should be standing at the time of his decease, or at their discretion to call in the same and invest it in certain securities, and to apply the income thereof in manner therein mentioned in favour of his wife and daughters. This was held to include real estate to which B. became entitled after the date of his will: (Lloyd v. Lloyd, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 898. M. R.)

RAILWAY COMPANY—DEED FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS.—By a deed the rolling stock of a railway company was vested in trustees in trust to "pay to the creditors of the said company the several sums now payable to or receivable by them respectively, pari passu, and without any preference or priority whatever." Held, that debenture holders, whose debentures were not payable until after the date of the deed were not included in it. By the same deed it was provided that "no creditor holding security and claiming to take the benefit of the trusts aforesaid, should be entitled to any payment in respect of his debt without accounting for the value of his security according to the practice of the Court of Chancery in the administration of the estate of deceased persons." Held, that such creditors were entitled to prove for the full amount of their claims without deducting the value of their securities: (Waterlow v. Sharp, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 903. V.C.S.)

a new liquidator, Mr. Hart, had been appointed, and the present application to Mr. Church, the Chief Clerk, was to fix the amount of the security to be given. An official account had been opened at the Bank of England, and payments were to be made there. The Chief Clerk fixed the security to be given by Mr. Hart at 5000l.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

CARRIERS BY SEA—WHARFINGER—LOSS OF GOODS—SPECIAL CONDITIONS—PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.—In Oct. 1866, K. and Co., merchants, London, sent certain goods to the plaintiffs, who were merchants in Dublin, and it was agreed between said parties that the said goods should be forwarded to the plaintiff by steamship from London to Dublin. On the 6th March 1866, K. and Co. sent the said goods by their own carter and on their own carts (according to their usual course of business) to H. and Co., wharfingers, London, for the purpose of having some placed on board the ship of the defendants, who were carriers by sea. H. and Co., having received the goods, gave a receipt therefor to said carter, on the back of which receipt were indorsed special conditions amongst others that the defendants would not be responsible for any loss or damage arising from the negligence of their own officers and crew in the journey from London to Dublin, and this was the usual form of receipt given by the said wharfingers to K. and Co. The ship sailed, and the goods were lost admittedly through the negligence of the officers and crew. The plaintiff, to whom the goods were sent, had paid K. and Co. for same, and knew nothing whatever of the conditions of the receipts. In an action to recover damages for the loss, Monahan, C. J., before whom the case was tried, left the following question to the jury, "whether K. and Co., at the time of the delivery of the goods to said H. and Co., from the fact of the receipt then given, and the giving of previous receipts in the same form, were aware that the defendants received the goods only on the condition mentioned in the receipt," whereupon the jury found that there was not sufficient evidence that K. and Co. had knowledge of the special conditions on the back of the receipt. His Lordship then directed a verdict for the plaintiff, with liberty to the defendants to move to have a verdict entered for them, &c.: Held, that the true question to have left to the jury would have been, "whether the said receipt containing the conditions on which alone were the goods consigned to the plaintiffs were to be carried by the defendants was delivered to the plaintiffs or to their agents at the time the goods were by their agent placed on the wharf of the wharfingers," and that it was not necessary to explain to plaintiff's agent the conditions embodied in the said receipt: Held, also, affirming the judgment of the court below, that the verdict should be entered for the defendants; that they being carriers by sea the condition was valid; that K. and Co. being the agents of the plaintiff in the making of said contract, the plaintiff was bound thereby: Held, also, that plaintiff, by bringing his action against the defendant, had thereby adopted the contract, as between K. and Co. and defendant. Semble, plaintiff should have declined to pay K. and Co. for the goods, on the ground that the delivery by them of the goods to the defendants (on the special conditions) was not a delivery to him. Note, that the plaintiffs in this matter were mere nominal plaintiffs, inasmuch as they, on the loss of the goods, applied to and were paid by the insurance company, who, though not the ostensible, were the real plaintiffs in the action: (Alexander v. Mulcolmon, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 930. Ex. Ch. Ir.)

UNDER 23 & 24 VICT. c. 127, s. 9.

The elementary works, in addition to book-keeping (mercantile), selected for the intermediate examination of persons under articles of clerkship executed after the 1st Jan. 1861, for the year 1870, are—

Chitty on Contracts, chaps. 1 and 3, with the exception in chap. 3 of sect. 1, relating to contracts respecting real property. Any edition published in or after 1850.

Williams on the Principles of the Law of Real Property. 7th or 8th edita.

J. W. Smith's Manual of Equity Jurisprudence. 7th, 8th, or 9th edita.

The examiners deal with the subject of mercantile book-keeping generally, and do not in their questions confine themselves to any particular system. Candidates are not examined in the method of book-keeping by double entry.

Candidates are required by the judges' orders to give to the Incorporated Law Society one calendar month's notice* before the commencement of the Term in which they desire to be examined. Candidates are also required to leave their articles of clerkship and assignments (if any), duly stamped and registered, seven clear days before the commencement of such Term, together with answers to the questions as to due service and conduct up to that time.

Candidates may be examined either in the Term in which one half of their term of service will expire, or in one of the two next Terms before, or one of the two Terms next after, one half of the term of service under their articles.

The examinations are held in the hall of the Incorporated Law Society, Chancery-lane, London in Hilary, Easter, Trinity, and Michaelmas Terms Law Society's Hall, Chancery-lane, London. July, 1869.

SOUTHWARK COUNTY COURT.

Wednesday, June 30.

(Before C. S. WHITMORE, Esq., Q.C., Judge.)
POWELL v. THE LONDON AND SOUTH-WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Season ticket—Not available by special train.

The plaintiff was the holder of a season ticket between Waterloo and Epsom, issued subject to the following agreement, which was signed by the plaintiff, viz., "It is understood and agreed by me that this ticket is taken subject to all the company's present and future rules and regulations." Another condition stipulated that the company was to be at liberty "to alter, reduce, or vary the trains without liability to the holder of the ticket." Previous to the Epsom summer race week the company gave public notice that between the hours of 11.15 a.m. and 7 p.m. on the Derby and Oak days the ordinary trains to and from Waterloo and Epsom would be suspended, but that special trains would run at frequent intervals. The plaintiff desiring to go to Epsom by a special train leaving Waterloo between ten and eleven o'clock on the Derby morning, proposed to avail himself of his season ticket, and contended that it enabled him to travel by any train he found leaving the station, whether a special or an ordinary one, and as the railway officials refused to allow him to do so, he took a separate ticket, and now brought his action to recover the amount he had paid for it.

Crombie for the defendants.

His HONOUR, in giving judgment for the defendants, held that the suspension of the ordinary Epsom trains during certain hours of the Derby Day was a reasonable "variation" contemplated by the conditions under which the season tickets were issued, and that a season ticket holder has no right to travel during such hours by a special train put on for the races without paying the fare fixed for the journey.

SUNDERLAND COUNTY COURT.

(Before H. STAPLETON, Esq., Judge.)

DICKINSON v. BELL.

Worry to sheep by dogs—Tribunal—Practice.

His Honour gave judgment in this case, in which the plaintiff, a butcher at Hylton Ferry, claimed 5l. damages from the defendant, a beer-house-keeper in the same village, for damage done to plaintiff's sheep by defendant's dog, which it was alleged, had worried two sheep outright, and caused a ewe to drop a dead lamb. Plaintiff rested his case upon Mr. Fenwick's Act, making the owner of a dog liable for injuries done without his knowledge, and also at common law, on the ground that the defendant did know his dog was accustomed to chase and bite sheep. The defendant took the objection that, under Mr. Fenwick's Act, the remedy was confined to the magistrates, where the damage claimed did not exceed 5l., and that the County Court had no jurisdiction.

His HONOUR gave judgment for the plaintiff for the amount claimed, with costs. He found, in the first place, that at common law the plaintiff was entitled to recover 1l. as that part of the damage sustained after the defendant had had express notice of his dog's mischievous propensities; so that, in any event, his judgment must have been for the plaintiff to that amount. Then with respect to the 4l. which he found to be the amount of damage done before the defendant had notice, he was obliged to consider whether, in a case under 5l., the plaintiff's remedy was confined to the magistrates. The Act referred to was a short one, and he should have expected to have found that if the Legislature had intended to prevent a man resorting, if he chose, to the ordinary courts of the country, express words would have been inserted to that effect. He had, therefore, come to the conclusion, though not without some hesitation, that it was optional for the plaintiff either to go to the magistrates or bring an action in the County Court, having found the rule clearly laid down that express words were always required to bar a man from coming to any ordinary court with a grievance.

Robson was for plaintiff in the case.

BLACKBURN COUNTY COURT.

(Before W. A. HULTON, Esq., Judge.)

Monday, Aug. 9.

FLITCHER v. KAY.

Action to recover money paid to a solicitor for costs under protest.

A borrowed money from B. upon a deposit of deeds and memorandum, the latter being silent as to costs. B., solicitor, insisted upon payment of costs:

Held, that he was entitled to do so.

Baldwin for plaintiff.

Deane for defendant.

His HONOUR delivered the following judgment:—In this case the principal facts were not disputed. It appeared that in 1863 the plaintiff borrowed from Mr. Mercer 200l.; and as a security deposited with him a mortgage from Mr. Dewhurst, by a memorandum in writing agreed to transfer the mortgage to Mr. Mercer on request. In March last, Mr. Kay was instructed by Mr. Mercer's executors to call in the mortgage. He accordingly applied directly to Mr. Dewhurst, and the money was paid in by that gentleman with interest; the payments being made to Mr. Kay's solicitor to the mortgagees. The defendant made out his bill of costs amounting to 3l. 4s. 3d., for that business against his clients the mortgagees, and, on the final settlement, he declined to deliver up the mortgage until the bill was paid with principal and interest still remaining unpaid. The money was paid under protest as to the bill of costs, and this action was brought to recover the sum so paid. It was proved at the hearing that the work was done, and that the charges were reasonable, but Mr. Baldwin, for the plaintiff, strongly insisted that the charges were not payable. He cannot accede to the objection. It must be borne in mind that the action is not for the money paid, but for the mortgage. Mr. Dewhurst, and that, whatever might be the case as between the plaintiff and Mr. Dewhurst, the question before me is between a mortgagee and an immediate mortgagee. Now I think, clear, notwithstanding a doubtful statement, the contrary in Pulling's Law of Attorneys, that the general rule entitles a mortgagee to his costs when the debt is paid off, and the property reconveyed; King v. Smith, 6 Hare, 475; Costs on Mortgage, 422, and that the principle of the rule is that the owner is seeking to deliver his estate from an incumbrance, he himself brought upon it, and therefore must indemnify the person having the pledge who is not to be put to expense on account of it: (2 Powell on Mortgage, 993.) Mr. Baldwin admitted that the expenses of a reconveyance of a mortgage fall on the mortgagor; but he insisted that the expenses, consequent on the repayment of the money advanced, could not be charged against the mortgagor in case of a mortgage by deposit of deeds. I can see no reason for the distinction. The costs objected to have been incurred substantially as for a conveyance. The principle on which the rule in the one case depends applies equally to the other. It was proved in the clearest manner at the hearing that the practice in this district was that the mortgagee should be paid such charges on redemption. And I think that the custom is legal (see Tuckley v. Thompson, 2 L. J. 565), and grounded in good sense. That it acts as a boon to mortgagors is unquestionable; for, if the objection was valid, mortgage by deposit of deeds would become of rare occurrence. The cases cited at the hearing do not affect the question before me. Wakefield v. Nelson, 6 Q. B. 276, and Fraser v. Pendlebury, 31 L. J. 1, C. P. only affirm the general rule as to the costs of a reconveyance of a mortgage. And the first cited case, and that of Holts v. Claridge, 4 Tann. 807, merely decide that a mortgagee can only give the same lien as against the mortgagor that he himself possesses. This rule might have been applicable had the question been raised between Mr. Dewhurst and his mortgagee, the present plaintiff; but has no bearing on the present case. The verdict must be entered for the defendant.

Deane applied for the costs of the defendant's witnesses.

His HONOUR.—They will not charge anything, will they?

Deane.—They will expect to be paid. They were subpoenaed. Mr. Ainsworth was very unwilling to come till we subpoenaed him.

His HONOUR.—I will allow the costs of the subpoenas and the costs of two witnesses if they are applied for.

Deane.—Will you allow anything for the defendant, Mr. Kay?

His HONOUR.—Mr. Kay will not ask for them?

Mr. Kay.—I do. I was taken away from my business.

His HONOUR made no order on this point.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

PROVEABLE DEBT—"CONTRACT OR PROMISE"
—BANKRUPTCY ACT 1861, s. 153.—Sect. 153 of the Bankruptcy Act 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 134), which provides for the assessment of damages in cases where a bankrupt at the time of adjudication is liable "by reason of any contract or promise to a demand in the nature of damages which have not been and cannot be otherwise liquidated or ascertained," applies only to cases of express contracts, and not to contracts implied by law from the relation in which parties stand to each other. The goods of the plaintiff, who was sub-tenant to the defendant of one of the rooms of a warehouse, were distrained for rent owing by the defendant to his landlord. The plaintiff paid to the landlord a certain sum for the release of his goods, and the defendant subsequently to the payment became bankrupt on his own petition, and obtained his order of discharge. The plaintiff, not having proved under the bankruptcy, or taken any steps under sect. 153, brought an action against the defendant for the damages sustained, owing to the distraint of his goods: Held, that the claim of the plaintiff was not one provable under sect. 153, and therefore that the defendant's order of discharge was not a bar to the action: (Johnson v. Skafte, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 909. Q. B.)

EXETER BANKRUPTCY COURT.

(Before Mr. Commissioner ANDREWS.)

Re JOHN WOTTON WILLING.

How to deal with trustees under deeds.

This was an application to His Honour relative to a trust-deed executed by the insolvent several years ago.

Fryer for Messrs. Francis and Baker, of Newton Abbot.

Bishop, of Torquay, appeared for creditors.

It seemed that after the deed of assignment was made the assignor was possessed of a mail cart and a horse, and they were seized by a creditor named Henry Nicholas Carey under a judgment for 21l. 12s., with 3l. 19s. costs. It was perfectly clear that after the deed of assignment all the property vested in the assignee, and this execution-creditor, therefore, would have no right whatever to seize the horse and cart. It was the duty of the trustee under the deed to have seen that Mr. Carey did not get the benefit of his execution against the estate of the assignor. The deed was registered before the execution was issued from the County Court.

Fryer, in answer to His Honour, said the creditors did not dispute the validity of the deed. It was made in the old form. There had been 300l.

paid into court by Mr. Carter, solicitor, Torquay. He said 288l. 7s. was the amount he ought to be paid in as he said he had a set-off for his bill and costs, which, however, had not yet been rendered. The creditors whom he represented thought that as Mr. Carter, or rather the trustee and Mr. Carter together, had had possession of the money for five years and did not feel disposed to invest it, they ought to be charged interest upon the amount, the same as if there had been a creditors' assignee appointed under the Bankruptcy Act.

His HONOUR said the money could not have been paid into the hands of the Accountant-General.

Fryer replied that it should have been paid in somewhere so that it might have been getting interest.

His HONOUR said he did not think he had any power about it.

Fryer said the trustee under the deed being in insolvent circumstances, if the money should get back into his hands it would be a question whether the creditors would get a shilling. At present the money was in the hands of the official assignee, and the creditors were anxious, as far as his Honour's power would allow, that he would order it to be distributed amongst the creditors by the assignee.

His HONOUR said he did not think he had any power to do that. He did not see how the trustee was to get the money out of the hands of the court, having consented to pay it in. Its remaining in the hands of the court could do the creditors no good; but his difficulty was how to deal with it—it was a very awkward question. It seemed to him the other day that Mr. Carter had some object in contending that the case must be treated not altogether as if it were a bankruptcy, and that the trustee should be relieved of any trouble or responsibility about it. But he (the commissioner) did not think that could be so. It was very true that the words were very strong all the way through the clause, as to the court having the same power over the trustee, and over the debtors and creditors, under the deed as he had in bankruptcy; but the end of the clause said that he should determine all questions arising out of the deed according to the law and practice of bankruptcy, so far as they might be applicable. That showed that the two were still distinct and separate. That showed very clearly that he might make those orders as if the estate were administered in bankruptcy, but it also showed clearly to his mind that the estate must still be administered under the trust-deed.

Fryer said it appeared that the trustee was in insolvent circumstances—had the court the power to appoint another?

His HONOUR thought not.

Fryer reminded his Honour that he had made an order for him to hand certain moneys over to the official assignee.

His HONOUR replied that he did that by consent.

Fryer said his Honour had power to remove an assignee in bankruptcy.

His HONOUR replied that he could do that on petition of the creditors, but he did not see why he should do it here, because there was another clause in the Act, which, if he could do it, the creditors themselves could do it. Therefore he certainly should throw it on them. Now there was an application that Mr. Carrick, the official assignee, should distribute these funds. Supposing he did not wish to take on himself that responsibility? In the next place Mr. Fryer wished him to appoint a new trustee. He did not think he had any power to do that, but if he had power to do it under sect. 124, one-fourth in value of the creditors must petition the court, and he could appoint a day for the hearing.

LIVERPOOL BANKRUPTCY COURT.

Thursday, July 29.

(Before Mr. Commissioner THRING.)

Re JONES, GARDOM, AND CO.

Disputed adjudication—Act of bankruptcy.

The fact of a debtor, confessedly insolvent, and in treaty with his creditors for the liquidation of his debts, having absented himself from his office, not necessarily an act of bankruptcy.

This was a disputed adjudication of bankruptcy. The petition for adjudication was filed by Gannock, Bibby, and Co., creditors for 300l. against Jones, Gardom, and Co., rope manufacturers, and the act of bankruptcy upon which the adjudication rested was the fact of the alleged bankrupts having absented themselves from their place of business.

Gill, on behalf of Jones, disputed the sufficiency of this act of bankruptcy, and

R. J. Jones, for the petitioning creditor, appeared in support of its validity.

As is the practice in such cases, Jones was required to re-prove his case vis à vis. He thereupon called the petitioning creditor and the witness who originally deposed to the act of bankruptcy, and their evidence, summarised and divested of extraneous matter, was as follows:—Jones, Gardom, and Co. carried on business as rope manufacturers in Lodge-lane, having an office in Bath-street. They suspended payment on the 25th June last, and had a meeting of their creditors subsequently, at which they attended, but came to no arrangement as to the liquidation of their debts. They afterwards stopped their business at the ropewalk, but kept open the office and entered into negotiations with their creditors with respect to their affairs. About this period the petitioning creditors took steps to enforce their claim, and instructed their attorney to issue a writ and also serve a summons in bankruptcy. The process server engaged, whose evidence was principally relied upon, in proof of the act of bankruptcy, stated that neither at the office nor the ropewalk had he been able to meet with the bankrupt, but had succeeded in serving Jones at a neighbouring office. He was informed by the employés of the bankrupts that only on one or two occasions had they been at the office during the previous week, and that the bankrupt Gardom was believed to have gone to Manchester.

Gill cross-examined these witnesses, and afterwards called the alleged bankrupts, who deposed that they had been about as usual, but had not attended at their office with the same punctuality as when their business was being carried on, that they had closed their place of business, namely, the ropewalk, and discharged the men at the express wish of their creditors; that on the day the process-server called Gardom was at Manchester, for the purpose of seeing the Agricultural Show, but his whereabouts was no secret, nor was there any intention on the part of either of them to absent themselves for the purpose of defeating or delaying their creditors. The bankrupts admitted that they were insolvent and unable to carry on business.

His HONOUR, after hearing the arguments of the respective solicitors, said he was of opinion that no act of bankruptcy had been proved. Unquestionably there was abundant proof of insolvency, but the law required something more. The observations of Lord Chancellor Westbury, in Re Horton, 32 L. J. 41, Bank., were so applicable to the present case that he could not better express his views than by reading what his Lordship had said. Speaking of a bankrupt who had disputed the adjudication under similar circumstances, he observed "that it was with regret he was compelled to reverse the decision of a learned commissioner, as the person before him was entirely and confessedly insolvent, and it was impossible not to conclude that at a time coeval with the adjudication he was insolvent. The adjudication was most desirable for the creditors, and if the bankrupt had been honestly desirous of a distribution of his property amongst them, he, the Lord Chancellor did not see why he should have been a party to dispute that adjudication. It amounted to something absurd and ridiculous that a man who had confessed that for some time previously he was abundantly (if such an expression might be used), at least grossly, insolvent, should appeal to that court to annul the adjudication; admitting that he was in such a condition as that the only proper proceeding was an adjudication. He was compelled, however, by the state of the law, to consider whether there had been that which the Act of Parliament rendered still requisite, namely, an act of bankruptcy." Now, in the case before the court it was clear that the debtors being hopelessly insolvent ought not to have resisted the proceedings that had been taken for the equal distribution of their property, but having done so they were entitled to insist upon the strictest proof of the requisites to the adjudication. The absention from business, relied upon as the act of bankruptcy, must be shown to be with the intention to defeat or delay creditors, but no such intention could be here inferred. Their business having been stopped, at the instance of creditors, it was not imperative, although their office was open, that they should be in daily attendance. They had attended the meeting of their creditors and were apparently desirous of arranging their affairs. Had the petitioning creditors been opposed to the delay, and wished the estate wound-up in bankruptcy, they might have proceeded by a trader debtor summons, and thus have obtained an act of bankruptcy. He was of opinion that they had mistaken their course of proceeding, and had failed to establish any act of bankruptcy sufficient to support the adjudication. The petition for adjudication of bankruptcy would therefore be dismissed and the adjudication thereunder annulled.

Jones said that as the application was only with respect to one of the debtors, he assumed the adjudication against the other would stand.

His HONOUR said it was true that one party might be dismissed from the proceedings without the validity of the adjudication against the other being affected, yet where it had been shown there was no valid act of bankruptcy proved against either it would be unadvisable to allow the joint adjudication to stand, and therefore in this case the adjudication would be annulled as to both the debtors.

Gill applied for costs, and submitted that they ought to follow the result of his application.

His HONOUR said he was decidedly of opinion there should be no costs, and on being pressed by Mr. Gill to lay down some principle with regard to such allowances, declined, and said that each case must stand on its own merits, and he should reserve to himself the right to exercise his discretion in each case as to awarding costs.

CORRESPONDENCE OF THE PROFESSION.

[NOTE.—This department of the LAW TIMES being open to free discussion on all professional topics, the Editor is not responsible for any opinions or statements contained in it.]

FRAUDULENT MORTGAGOR.—A fraudulent mortgagor has been this day committed to take her trial at the borough quarter sessions under the following circumstances: The mortgaged premises consisted of two cottages, built upon a piece of waste land, and devised to the prisoner by the will of a relative. No title-deeds existed. Having borrowed money on mortgage of this property to an amount exceeding its real value, the prisoner subsequently executed a quasi first mortgage to the prosecutor, to whom and to whose solicitor she persistently denied the existence of any previous incumbrance. The advertisement of the cottages for sale under the true first mortgage revealed the fraud, and criminal proceedings were taken. This is not the first time that this species of fraud has been brought to my notice during the four years I have devoted to the study of the law. About three years since it was discovered that a rogue had executed three or four "first mortgages" of the same cottage and premises, for full value in each instance. Then, as in the present case, the cottage was built on waste land; then, as in the present case, a copy of a will was deposited with each mortgagee. Surely though there is at present no safeguard against frauds of this class, a very simple and efficacious one might be speedily supplied, by the establishment of an office for the compulsory registration of mortgage deeds in all cases in which no title-deeds are handed over to the mortgagee. This registry would, of course, include all second mortgages, which would thereby be rendered a far more safe and certain security than they are at present. Hoping that you may consider this letter worthy of insertion, as the subject is one of interest and importance.

FINAL EXAMINATION.—Mr. Wilkinson, of Liverpool, was good enough last week to answer at length an important question in regard to the final examination of the Incorporated Law Society. Can he, or any other of your readers, state what would be a good course of reading on real property law for the second LL.B. examination of the University of London? To an extent the course runs pari passu with that for the final, but not wholly. The requirements, under the new regulations, are of a practical character, and such a knowledge of real property law as may be obtained from Mr. Joshua Williams's Introduction is evidently insufficient.

CONDITIONS OF SALE.—Lately I attended the sale by public auction of a freehold estate under conditions of sale, and which among others, was "That the highest bidder should be the purchaser, and if dispute should arise between two or more bidders, the estate should be reoffered at the last undisputed bidding." There was also condition bidding for one by the vendor. At the sale there were three bidders, and the reserved bidding by the purchaser was made. The highest bidder was called into another room by the vendor's solicitor, and in a few minutes afterwards he called for the lowest bidder and his solicitor, which was immediately objected to by the second bidder as an irregular preference, and this was all done in the presence of the auctioneer and the parties of the sale. A sale was concluded by private contract with the lowest bidder and his solicitor, the highest bidder having attended and bid as the lowest bidder's agent. Notwithstanding the second bidder's loudly-expressed claim of preference, nothing has since been communicated or explained to him, although of the same Profession as the vendor's solicitor. I leave it to you and your readers for remarks on such conduct.

A READER.

A STRANGE SENTENCE.—The short article which appeared in the LAW TIMES of last week headed "A Strange Sentence," begins with the remark, "We have had too much experience of he injustice with which critics who were not present at the trial find fault with the sentences of the judges." Will you allow me to say that the criticism contained in that article affords another instance of this injustice. Your criticism is founded on this short statement of the facts of the case, "A gamekeeper had chased two poachers; one of them turned, deliberately took aim at him with a gun he carried, fired, and, when his victim fell, went up to him and discharged the other barrel into his head, killing him instantly." Every one who, like myself, was present at the trial, knows that this version of the facts as given in evidence is incorrect. The true version of the case is as follows: A gamekeeper and gardener had chased two poachers a distance of two miles, being about a mile and three-quarters beyond the boundary of the land. At this time the keeper being, according to his own evidence about 260 yards behind the gardener, and out of sight of him, heard what he described as a "crack," followed by an exclamation of the gardener's. He ran on another 160 yards, and then saw the deceased, who was on the other side of a hedge, distant about 100 yards from the keeper, running back past a gate in the hedge, and at the same moment he saw one of the poachers fire from a short distance, and saw the deceased fall. The poachers then made off. Great stress was laid by the judge on the fact that there were marks of a struggle at the spot described near the gate. The deceased carried a life-preserver and a loaded stick. Two gunshot wounds were found in his body, and there was no evidence except the above as to how, or when, or by which of the poachers the first wound was inflicted. Whatever may have been the opinion in court as to the lightness of the sentence, which I confess took me very much by surprise, still I am sure you will admit that it is unfair to allow an inaccurate statement of the facts, which has been made the basis of hostile criticism, to remain uncontradicted.

HENRY F. POOLEY.
Devereux Chambers, Temple. Aug. 7.

EFFECT OF A RETAINER.—I beg to submit the following statement of facts, with a view to discussion in your columns upon the question, What is the precise legitimate effect of a retainer? A., himself a barrister, having occasion to bring an action, consulted with his solicitor immediately on the issue of the writ, as to what leading counsel should be retained. Two were suggested, and that both might be retained without necessarily giving a brief to more than one, the contention being that a retaining fee secures only the right to claim the services of the counsel receiving it if required, and that it is not necessary to decide before trial whether a brief shall follow the retainer or not, unless a retainer being offered to the same counsel by the other side, the fact be notified to the prior claimant, who must then make his election, either to relinquish his right, or to be bound in honour to deliver a brief on the trial. B. and C. were retained accordingly, but before trial it was decided, for reasons which need not be referred to, to brief B. only with a junior. It has never been alleged that C. was offered a retainer by the other side. Having appointed a consultation with B., the solicitor, on arrival thereof, was met by C.'s clerk, complaining that C. had not received a brief, to which it was insisted that he was entitled from the mere fact of having been retained. The right was disputed; during the discussion outside, C. obtained an interview with B. within; and immediately afterwards B.'s clerk intimated that no consultation could be had with B. until C. was satisfied. Under this compulsion a brief and fees, including consultation fee, was delivered to C., and the consultation fixed for the following morning. C. did not attend this consultation, and B. then advised, as he was doubtless prepared to do the previous day, that the question at issue in the action should be settled by arbitration, which was acceded to, so that the services of neither B. nor C. were further required. Upon this state of facts the questions arise:—1. Is it necessary to give a brief because a retainer has been given, whether services be required or not, and whether a brief has been refused for the other side or not? 2. Or is the effect of a retainer, as contended above, limited to a right to claim services if required; so that in case a brief be offered by the other side, the first retaining party may elect to secure such services, when of course a brief must follow? 3. Is a counsel who has been paid his fees in advance justified in declining his services until another, who may rightly or wrongly consider himself ill-treated, is satisfied? If not, is C. justified in receiving fees forced into his pocket by the wrongful act of B., set in motion by himself? 4. When briefs with fees have been delivered on behalf of a member of the Profession, and the case goes off without trial, is it honourable to retain the fees so paid without service? A.

P.S.—A copy of the above statement has been submitted to C., who, in acknowledging its receipt has taken no exception to its accuracy.

A PUBLIC PROSECUTOR.—The scheme which you extract from the Pall Mall in the last LAW TIMES, seems at once simple, easy, and practically efficient. The power to employ local solicitors should be one exercised in rotation, and all the solicitors of reputation, and possibly of a certain standing, should be placed on the Public Prosecutors' local lists. It would be very unfair and dangerous to the scheme to let any individual solicitors monopolise the business, and possibly the selection might be narrowed and rendered easier by (1) fixing a minimum standing; (2), the voluntary withdrawal from the lists of such men as do not care for criminal business, and the clerks to the justices. Of course crimes might be divided into two classes (1), those to which the public prosecutor should be bound (the evidence being sufficient) to take action; (2), those as to which he should not be so bound, but might institute a prosecution under special circumstances, as a rule, however, leaving the matter to private persons.

COUNTY COURTS—DELAY.—My own experience allows me to confirm "Clifford's" remarks. Where a court is held only once in two months, one often sighs for the efficacy of the former process, the writ and judgment in default. It is a pity the powers of the 2nd section of the County Courts Act 1867 are not applied to all actions of contract and extended to all besides wholesale traders, the minimum of 20l. by the 28th section County Courts Act 1856 being removed. No hardship could ensue where there was a defence, and where no defence the registrar should be given a power to order judgment to be signed for instalments, with appeal to judge.

THE WINE AND BEERHOUSE ACT 1869.—Sect. 7 defines the form of notice to be given to obtain a certificate under this Act. Sect. 8 then goes on to enact that "all the provisions of the said Act of the ninth year of the reign of King George the Fourth as to the terms upon which, and the manner in which, and the persons by whom grants of licences are to be made by the justices at the said general annual licensing meeting, and as to appeal from any act of any justice shall, so far as may be, have effect with regard to grants of certificates under this Act, subject, &c." I should be much obliged if some of the numerous readers of this valuable paper would give their opinion as to the effect of the above extracted portion of the said 8th section, whether it is necessary that the form of notice under "The Wine and Beerhouse Act 1869" should comprise as well the provisions of the said Act of the 9 Geo. 4, in respect to the form of the notice to be given under that Act, as also the provisions of sect. 7, of the Wine and Beerhouse Act 1869; or whether, if a notice complying simply with the provisions of sect. 7 of the latter Act would be sufficient? I should also like their opinion as to the meaning and effect of the words "shall, so far as may be," mentioned in the said 8th section, and whether the 8th section applies only to "grants of certificates under this Act," and not to the form of notice?

66. INTESTATE.—A person dies a widower and intestate and possessed of six leasehold houses. He leaves a son and a daughter, the latter of whom is married. The son takes out letters of administration, and subsequently enters into a written agreement with his sister and her husband, whereby it is agreed that he shall possess three of the houses and she the other three, and they have accordingly been in possession ever since. I should be obliged by one of your numerous readers informing me whether an assignment to his sister of the three houses ought to be executed by the administrator in order to perfect title, and if so, where to find a precedent.

Answers.

(Q. 64.) COPYHOLDS—SALE OF.—B. may exercise her power of appointment in fee, and give a good title to a purchaser, for she has, by the devise of A., a life estate and a general power of appointment. It is clear, therefore, that she has only to surrender her life interest (in which her husband will join), and exercise her power of appointment to the use of the purchaser, who will, after payment of the fines, be admitted to the fee. The husband joins because he has acquired an interest in the life estate of the wife, but it is not necessary that he should have been admitted, as he takes jure alieno. Vide Sm. Comp., 3rd edit., p. 86, et seq.

W. P.

—B. with the concurrence of her husband can make a title to the fee: as to the life estate by virtue of her ownership, as to the remainder by virtue of the power. The lord is bound to admit at once to the fee. The pre-existing partial ownerships will become consolidated in the person of the purchaser, and the lord will have no right to treat them any longer as subsisting separately. In the analogous case of a conveyance by several tenants in common to a purchaser of the entirety, it is settled that only a single fine is payable. Garland v. Jekyll, 2 Bing. 273; Holloway v. Berkeley, 6 Barn. & Cres. 2.

(Q. 63.) TRESPASS TO A MARE.—In my opinion no action will lie against the owner of the entire horse in the case put, if the fence, separating the fields, belonged to the owner of the mare, and who ought to have seen that it was sufficient for the safety of his property. If a man may keep a bull, &c., in a field, it is most probable that he may keep an entire horse, with ordinary fence protection.

—No action will lie. How can turning out an entire horse to pasture be in itself an actionable wrong? The owner of the horse but of the mare is liable for its trespass on the neighbour's field. It is the duty of the landowner to keep his own cattle in his own close. In the absence of special agreement or prescription, he is not obliged to fence against his neighbour's cattle.

(Q. 62.) BANKRUPTCY—SALARY IN LIEU OF NOTICE.—P's claim is for damages for a dismissal without notice. The master cannot in respect of such claim be held to have been indebted to him at the filing of the petition, in respect of salary within sect. 168 of the Bankruptcy Law Consolidation Act 1849, on which section any preferential claim must be founded. If the two months' wages were stipulated damages in lieu of notice, P's claim would be provable. If the contract only was that two months' notice should be given, the damages must for the purpose of proof be assessed under sect. 153 of the Bankruptcy Act 1861. P. must remember that bankruptcy per se does not dissolve a contract of hiring and service, Thomas v. Williams, 1 Ad. & El. 685. Bankruptcy coupled with the fact that no service was or could be rendered, would probably be evidence of a rescission of the contract, so far as future wages and services were concerned. Whether a termination of service under such circumstances can be deemed a dismissal entitling P. to damages under the contract may fairly be doubted.

ference. And greater still will be the effect upon the Bar. Local courts will require local Bars. It may be, that the central court of each department will be presided over by a Judge from London, and attended by a Bar fresh from the Temple; but there will be nothing in the nature of a circuit, by which the same Bar will be enabled to attend three or four departmental courts. So in the metropolis. The local courts will have their own Bars. The appeal courts will be attended by counsel, who will make it their exclusive business, and properly so, for their sole work will be argument, for which the lucid and logical mind will be in demand, and not the very different faculties required in an advocate.

This ultimate organisation, to which we are certainly tending, and which, indeed, is even now in progress, should be kept steadily in view by young barristers, and they should prepare for it by resolving as soon as possible what course they will adopt should the exigency arrive. The men who earliest establish themselves in good local centres will secure the cream of the new business when it comes. If they determine to devote themselves to advocacy, let them educate accordingly. If they contemplate practice in the appeal courts, they cannot too soon enter upon the course of hard study which will be essential to success before a tribunal that will entertain questions of law in all its branches and in every form.

THE NEW BANKRUPTCY ACT.

THE main features of the new law are the abolition of the present Courts of Bankruptcy, the establishment of a new London Court of Bankruptcy, presided over by a Chief Judge, the transfer of the business of the district courts to the County Courts, and the abrogation of the powers of debtors to make themselves bankrupts. An important provision is also introduced which we take to ourselves the credit of having suggested, namely, the legalising of solicitors being appointed to the office of trustees in bankruptcy with liberty to contract for a certain sum by way of per centage or otherwise to discharge all the professional and other business necessary in the administration of estates. This wholesome change in the law will much reduce the costs of liquidation, and the creditors will be themselves alone to blame if they allow their debtor's estate to be mulcted of the enormous charges of the accountants. Deeds of assignment and composition are no longer necessary, but a resolution of creditors assenting to the debtor's proposed arrangement of his affairs, duly registered in the various courts, having jurisdiction, where the debtor resides or carries on business, is to be conclusive evidence of the debtor's release from his liabilities. This facility for arrangements with creditors, will not, however, be open to the abuses of the present system, for a debtor cannot, as now, under the threat of bankruptcy, force his creditors to accept any composition he may offer. A petition in bankruptcy will be the prerogative of the creditor and not of the debtor; and, therefore, a fair composition may always be insisted upon, or otherwise, the alternative of bankruptcy may be held in terrorem over the debtor. In bankruptcy the debtor will be bound to pay 10s. in the pound, unless his creditors by a resolution declare that the insolvency has arisen from unavoidable misfortune, and that they are desirous their debtor should be discharged. A wide net has been spread to take in all possible cases of fraud upon creditors, and the court of quarter sessions will have jurisdiction for the trial of such offences. On the whole, we think the result of the operation of the new law may be looked to hopefully as it is founded upon the right principle—the protection of the interests of creditors.

SCARCITY OF PRISONERS.

THE public is very apt to congratulate itself upon a decrease of crime, when the truth is that the only appreciable fact is a decrease of the number of prisoners. And the decrease in the number of prisoners is owing to reluctance to incur the expense of prosecution. This is illustrated very forcibly by a letter which we append:—

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "LAW TIMES."

Sir,—I read a few days since the charge of one of our judges, in which he speaks of the few prisoners there were for trial. If the question was asked, How is this? I should answer—the smallness of the sum which a prosecutor and his witnesses are allowed for attendance, &c. I was one of several professional gentlemen who gave evidence (not professional), in a case not long since, and was allowed 3s. 6d. per day for five days. I then made up my mind to avoid a repetition. This morning I discovered a servant of mine had been stealing several things, and if I were to let the police know, I should subject my wife and myself to the annoyance of being out three or four days, a drilling in the witness box, and get 3s. 6d. a day each for it, which would be adding loss to loss; therefore I have told the girl to be off about her business, and to steal no more. I have since learned that she has been guilty of this before she came to my service, but why she was not prosecuted was not told me; she was sent off as I have sent her off, and perhaps she will get the opportunity to do the like at three or four places before she will get one to prosecute, and even then it will be her first offence, and she will get off with two months; and the prosecutor will most likely come to the same determination as I have, if he has another of the sort, viz., start her off and give her good advice.

THE FIRST LOSS IS BEST.

SOCIAL SCIENCE CONGRESS.

THE following are the special questions to be discussed at the forthcoming Social Science Congress to be held at Bristol from the 29th Sept. to the 6th Oct. next.

Municipal Law Section.

1. What ought to be the legal and constitutional relations between England and the colonies?
2. What is the most expedient mode of introducing into England a system of public prosecution?
3. What limits ought to be placed by law to charitable endowments?

Reformatory Section.

1. Can infanticide be diminished by legislative enactment?
2. What have been the results of the industrial and reformatory Acts of 1866?

Education Department.

1. Is an unsectarian scheme of education inconsistent with religious teaching?
2. How may the State best promote the education of the destitute and neglected portion of the population?
3. In what way can the Endowed Schools Bill be worked so as to bring the educational endowments within the reach of all?

Health Department.

1. Can Government beneficially interfere to limit the spread of infectious diseases?
2. What Legislative measures might be proposed to deal with uncontrollable drunkenness?
3. Should the Contagious Diseases Act be extended to the civil population?

Economy and Trade Department.

1. Is it desirable that State aid should be given to emigration, and, if so, in what form?
2. In what respects may the administration of the poor law be improved?
6. How may the condition of the agricultural labourer be improved?

Voluntary papers on other subjects in connection with the departments will be taken.

LAND LAW REFORM.

As in the Irish Church question the fight was in fact for the English Church, so, in the agitation so vigorously commenced against the Land Laws in Ireland, the blow is really levelled against the Land Laws in England. Whatever changes are made in Ireland will certainly, and in no long time, be attempted here; and therefore a subject apparently remote has a direct and profound interest for the English lawyer and statesman. The Bill for the abolition of Primogeniture, which commanded a majority in the House of Commons last session, is but the beginning of the fray; or, rather, it was only a pilot balloon, sent up to see how the wind was setting.

To promote this agitation a society has been formed avowedly to indoctrinate the public mind with certain peculiar views of land law reform maintained by its members. This association counts among its promoters Mr. FAWCETT, Mr. MILL, Mr. BRIGHT, and other advanced Liberals, whose avowed object is to bring about a division of land and a peasant proprietary. They start with the bold proposition that the land is the common property of all the people of a country; that individuals can have no right of ownership, but only a modified right to control to a limited extent its occupancy, and, in the form of rent, to take a limited share of the profits—even these rights being State-made, for the prevention of disputes, and which therefore the State may resume at any time if it should be deemed for the common good that it should do so, and, as a further consequence, that it may impose what conditions it pleases upon the enjoyment and exercise of those rights.

Holding this doctrine, the association will begin by advocating its adoption in Ireland. They claim for the Irish tenant "fixity of tenure," which means that the landlord shall have no power to remove his tenant except for nonpayment of rent, and that the rent shall not be raised except at certain long intervals, and then only by independent valuation, and not by contract of the parties.

Payment to an outgoing tenant for unexhausted improvements is put forward by some honest optimists and by many dishonest agitators as the demand of the Irish yeoman. If this were all, the question would have been settled long ago. All Governments and parties have repeatedly affirmed the justice of this demand, and by both parties measures have been submitted to Parliament having this for their object. They have not succeeded, because they had the secret hostility of the large party in Ireland who had used "compensation" for their cry, when they intended fixity of tenure; who had shouted for reform designing a revolution. These persons were, of course, dissatisfied that they had been taken at their word. They could not openly oppose a measure for which they had been shouting; but they offered a tacit resistance, sufficient to extinguish a scheme which enlisted no enthusiasm. The failure of both parties in turn was conspicuous. The Irish cared nothing for what they were willing to give, and they were not willing to give what the Irish wanted.

And what is it they want? Under this plausible title of Land Law Reform, what are they seeking? It is necessary to know, that it may be known also if any practicable scheme is likely to accomplish its design and tranquillise the people.

There is, indeed, no doubt at all about it. Every person conversant with Ireland and the Irish is aware that, among the tenantry, there is a firm faith that the land is theirs of right; that it was obtained by the English conquerors by force; that the title by which it is held is a bad title, with the taint of robbery in its origin, which no time can erase, and for which there is no Statute of Limitations. Of the land thus wrested from the Irish people they believe that they may rightfully repossess themselves whenever the opportunity offers. They thirst for nationality and independence, as did the Italians and Hungarians, and seeing how England sympathised with those people, they call upon England to practise at home the doctrine she preached and applauded abroad.

This is the condition of mind with the great multitude of the Irish people, and especially with the peasantry; and in legislating for them it must be kept ever in view, or there will be unbounded disappointment. Concessions that fall short of this will be accepted only as new stand points for further demands; they will receive no gratitude, and they will not curb agitation. The great difficulty of the question is—that compromise is impossible. It is, indeed, probable that the more is given, if all is not given, the greater will be the discontent and wrath.

If Ireland only were affected by this question, there might be less difficulty in disposing of it. But it affects England quite as much, and must be considered with some reference to its results upon property in England. The newspapers talk glibly about legislating for Ireland according to Irish views—a maxim by-the-by, the very reverse of those formerly falling from the same lips—but such partial legislation is now-a-days impracticable. The tendency is more and more to assimilation, and any new land law formally adopted in Ireland would soon be adopted also in England and in Scotland. If Irish tenants are to be indulged with "fixity of tenure," English tenants would not be content without the same boon. Confiscate the property of landowners on the other side of the Channel, and the same process could not be long resisted here.

But then comes the question, What can be done? Things cannot remain as they are; that is clear. It is equally clear that no practicable reforms will satisfy the multitude of the discontented. But there are desirable improvements, which will content moderate men, and at least detach some of the best from the hostile camp. Besides, in a contest it is always desirable to have right on one's side, and to satisfy justice, even though it may not content the discontented. It is to the consideration of what reforms in the law are both desirable and practicable, that we propose to invite the attention of the lawyers.

THE NEW LAWS OF THE SESSION.

XVI.—TRADES UNIONS.

(32 & 33 Vict. c. 61.)

This is a short Act to protect the funds of Trades Unions against an imaginary danger. Forgetful that Russell Gurney's Act of last session removed the difficulty that had previously obstructed prosecution for embezzlement of the funds of Trades Unions, an ignorant complaint was made that these societies were practically outlawed, and this statute was passed accordingly. It provides that an association of persons having rules, agreements, or practices among themselves as to the terms of employment shall not, by reason only that those rules are in restraint of trade, or that such association is partly for objects other than the objects mentioned in the Friendly Societies Acts be deemed "for the punishment of frauds and impositions" to be a society established for a purpose that is illegal, or not to be a friendly society within the meaning of sect. 44 of the said Act. It will be observed that this is expressly limited to the punishment of frauds and impositions, and therefore does not extend to the recovery of subscriptions from defaulting members and the enforcement of fines, which was the object really sought.

This Act is to continue in force for one year only.

XVII.—ABOLITION OF IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.

(32 & 33 Vict. c. 62.)

This is a very important Act, the working of which will profoundly affect the trading community, whether for evil or for good remains for proof.

It does not come into operation until the 1st Jan. 1870.

It contains provisions for the better punishment of fraudulent debtors.

The first part abolishes imprisonment for "making default in payment of a sum of money," except in the following cases:—

1. Default in payment of a penalty, or sum in the nature of a penalty other than a penalty in default of any contract.
2. Default in payment of any sum recoverable summarily before justices of the peace.
3. Default by a trustee or person acting as such ordered as such to pay any sum by a court of equity.
4. Default by an attorney or solicitor in payment of costs when ordered to pay costs for misconduct as such, or in payment of a sum of money when ordered to pay the same in his character as an officer of the court.
5. Default in payment for the benefit of creditors of any portion of a salary or income ordered by a court in bankruptcy.
6. Default in payment of sums in respect of the payment of which orders are authorised by the Act to be made.

But it is provided that no person shall be imprisoned under these exceptions for a longer period than a year.

But, subject to these provisions, any court may commit to prison for not longer than six weeks, or until payment of the sum due, any person making default in payment of a debt, or instalment of a debt, in pursuance of an order of court.

But such power must be exercised only by a Judge or his deputy, and by order made in open court, and showing the grounds on which it is made.

In a Superior Court, when the judgment does not exceed 50*l*.

On a judgment in the County Court it is to be exercised only by the Judge or his deputy.

But such jurisdiction is to be exercised only where it is proved to the satisfaction of the court that the person making default either has or has had since the date of the order or judgment the means to pay the sum in respect of which he has made default, and has refused or neglected, or refuses or neglects, to pay the same.

The jurisdiction may be exercised by a Judge sitting in chambers.

The court may order the debt to be paid by instalments, and from time to time vary such order.

This section is to be deemed to be substituted for sects. 98 and 99 of the County Courts Act 1846.

Imprisonment under this section is not to operate as a satisfaction or extinguishment of the debt, or deprive the plaintiff of the right to take out execution against the goods of the defendant.

On payment of the debt the defendant is to be discharged: (sect 5.)

Sect. 6 empowers the arrest of defendants in actions where 50*l*. and upwards is claimed, on evidence to the satisfaction of a Judge of the Superior Courts that he is about to quit England, and that his absence will materially prejudice the prosecution of the action.

Persons in custody for debt at the commencement of this statute who would not have been liable to imprisonment under it are to be discharged.

Nothing in this Act is to affect the right or power of arrest under the Bankruptcy Act 1869.

The second part is devoted to the punishment of fraudulent debtors.

Sect. 11 enacts that any person adjudged bankrupt, or whose affairs are liquidated by arrangement under the Bankruptcy Act 1869, shall in the following cases be guilty of a misdemeanor, and liable to be imprisoned for two years with or without hard labour:

1. For not making a true discovery of his estate and effects.
2. For not delivering up all his real and personal property to the trustee.
3. For not delivering up to the trustee all books, documents, papers, and writings, relating to his property or affairs, unless the jury are satisfied he had no intent to defraud.
4. For concealing property to the value of 10*l*., or any debt due to or from him.
5. For fraudulently removing any part of his property of the value of 10*l*.
6. For making any material omission in any statement relating to his affairs, with intent to defraud.
7. Knowing that a false debt has been proved, omitting for one month to inform the trustee.
8. Preventing the production of any book, document, paper, or writing, relating to his property or affairs.
9. Concealing, destroying, mutilating, or falsifying, any such book or document.
10. Making any false entry in any such book or document.
11. Fraudulently parting with, altering, or making any omission in any such book or document.
12. Attempting to account for any part of his property by fictitious losses or expenses.
13. By false representation or other fraud within four months from the presentation of the petition obtaining any property on credit, and not paid for the same.
14. Within four months next before the presentation of the petition, being a trader, shall have obtained, under the false pretence of carrying on business and dealing in the ordinary way of his trade, any property on credit, and has not paid for the same.
15. Within four months next before the presentation of the petition, if he, being a trader, pawns, pledges, or disposes of otherwise than in the ordinary way of his trade, any property which he has obtained on credit, and has not paid for.
16. If guilty of any false representation or other fraud for the purpose of obtaining the consent of his creditors, or any of them, to any agreement with reference to his affairs, or his bankruptcy or liquidation.

A bankrupt, within four months before the presentation of the petition, absconding from England and taking with him, or attempting to do so, property to the amount of 20*l*. which ought to be divided among his creditors, is to be guilty of felony and punishable with two years' imprisonment.

A person guilty of the following offences:

1. If on incurring any debt or liability he has obtained credit under false pretences, or by means of any other fraud.
2. If, with intent to defraud any creditor he has made any gift, delivery, transfer of, or charge upon, any property.
3. If, with the like intent, he has reserved any part of his property within two months before the date of any unsatisfied judgments or order for payment of money.

Shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to imprisonment for one year.

Making any false claim or statement of account untrue in any material particular is to be a misdemeanor, subject to one year's imprisonment: (s. 14.)

A debtor arranging or compounding is to remain liable for the balance of any debts incurred or increased, or for which he has obtained forbearance by any fraud, provided the defrauded creditor has not assented to the arrangement other than by proving his debt and accepting dividends: (s. 15.)

If the trustee reports to the court that in his opinion a bankrupt has been guilty of any of these offences, the court may order a prosecution, the expenses of which are to be allowed, as are the expenses of other prosecutions: (s. 16, 17.)

Every misdemeanor is to be prosecuted under the Vexatious Indictments Act. It is to suffice for the indictment to set forth the substance of the offence charged. Quarter sessions are to have jurisdiction in respect of offences under this Act. Mayors becoming bankrupt or arranging with creditors are to be disqualified; so likewise are justices of the peace; and punishments are to be cumulative.

Part III. makes some further provisions with respect to warrants of attorney, cognovits, and orders of judgment.

Warrants of attorney and cognovits are to be executed in the presence of an attorney on behalf of the person; if not filed within twenty-one days they are to be void. So likewise with Judges' orders.

Nothing in the Act is to affect the motion of foreign attachment of any competent court, or the proceedings in relation thereto. It is to be cited as "The Debtors' Act 1869."

THE STATISTICS OF CIVIL JUSTICE.

(From the Times.)

THE statistics of civil justice for 1868 tell more favourably for the interests of society than those of criminal justice. The appeals to the House of Lords and Judicial Committee have increased. The pockets of suitors have doubtless suffered in proportion, but colonial law gains in consolidation and steadiness by occasional reference back to the fountain head of an English judicature, and the principles of law generally may profit from enunciation by the House of Lords. The increase of ecclesiastical suits is intelligible enough, though of very uncertain advantage. That the number of adjudications in the Court of Bankruptcy has also risen during the same period would be a fact simply to be deplored, were it not accompanied by the information that the amount of assets realised has grown in a still higher rate, being as much as 40 per cent. over the proportion in the preceding year. Still, when it is considered that even now a dividend has been announced in but 1714 cases as against 6480 in which there was none, the faint improvement manifested is not such as to induce regret for the downfall of a system which had become a mockery of law. On the other hand, the report states that 332 fewer suits were instituted in the Court of Chancery during 1868 than in 1867. It is to be feared that the diminution may have resulted rather from the want of means to blow bubbles for the court to burst than from any mitigation of the litigious temperament. But, at least, some compulsory inactivity of that tribunal can hardly be thought to aggravate the ills of the recent commercial depression. In the business of the Superior Courts of Common Law, however, a falling off is shown to have occurred during 1868, which constitutes a somewhat remarkable phenomenon. The number of writs of summons issued appears to have been 82,876—a sufficiently ponderous total, were it not that this is a decrease of over 44,000, 34 per cent., as compared with 1867. In litigation generally, the proportion of proceedings is so enormous in which there can be no serious question on which side the right is that any cause which diminishes their number is so far a public benefit. Even out of this diminished number of proceedings the records show that in 65 per cent. no step towards a defence was taken. It would be charitable, therefore, and might not be altogether unreasonable, to surmise that the difference between the number in this as compared with the previous year might be accounted for by a very slight acceleration in the mental process by which parties to a dispute discover at some stage or other that they have no case. The 34,000 plaints entered in the County Courts in excess of the number entered in 1867 may, however, have had more to do with the change. The County Court jurisdiction seems, indeed, the judicial serpent destined to swallow up all the rest. The mind can scarcely grasp the idea of a list of processes amounting in a single year to 975,373, and swelling continually; but there is no need for the present to be alarmed at the apparent tendency of these courts to monopolise litigation about trifling amounts. Their exposition of law may not be very scientific; but the statistics as to the proportion of real to unsubstantial defences set up before them show that there is a sort of business in which despatch is the main requisite. The report reveals that in more than 96 per cent. of the plaints judgment was given for the plaintiff. If it is remembered that but for this rough-and-ready procedure these myriads of plaintiffs must have had to choose between acquiescing in a wrong and engaging in the ruinous mazes of special pleading, the increasing resort to the County Courts, and the restriction of the work of the Superior Courts to questions involving large amounts or great principles, may be hailed as a sign of growing common sense in the community.

CLERKS OF ASSIZE.

REPORT "OF COMMITTEE APPOINTED BY THE TREASURY TO INQUIRE INTO DUTIES AND SALARY OF CLERK OF ASSIZE."

IN compliance with the directions contained in the Treasury minute of 25th May 1868, we have instituted an inquiry into the duties and salaries of clerks of assize and their officers, in order to ascertain whether such duties were of a nature requiring professional training, whether, having regard to the work to be performed, the existing salaries and allowances are not too high, and whether it might not be possible hereafter to abolish some of these offices and consolidate their duties.

The clerks of assize have both civil and criminal duties to perform on circuit. In their civil capacity they act as associates in the Nisi Prius Court, and they discharge the functions of clerks of the Crown in the criminal court.

Prior to the year 1856 the clerks of assize were entirely remunerated by fees, out of which they paid the stipends of such assistant officers as they found it necessary to employ, and all the expenses of their offices. The Nisi Prius Officers' Act, however, which was passed in 1852, empowered the Treasury, with the assent of the three chief judges, to fix salaries to be received by clerks of assize in lieu of all fees and emoluments taken by them for their duties as associates, and on each vacancy in any office to revise the salary so fixed, and the Criminal Justice Act, which passed in 1855, abolished all fees payable to clerks of assize for the performance of their duties as clerks of the Crown, and extended the provisions of the Act of 1852 to the payment of these officers by salaries for their duties in the criminal courts, and for all other duties appertaining to the office. The last-named Act also empowered the Treasury to fix the salary to be allowed to any subordinate officer employed by a clerk of assize.

Acting upon the powers thus conferred, the Lords of the Treasury, by two minutes, dated in 1856, prescribed, with the sanction of the three chief judges, the remuneration to be thenceforth received by the clerks of assize and their subordinate officers.

These minutes proceeded upon the principle that the Western, Oxford, Home, Midland, and Northern Circuits might be placed in the same category as regarded their importance, and that the Norfolk held an intermediate position between the five circuits above mentioned and the two Welsh circuits.

It was at first proposed that the clerks of assize on the five principal circuits should receive salaries of 800*l.* a year, but eventually the remuneration was fixed at 1000*l.* a year to cover all expenses incidental to the office, except travelling and subsistence on circuit, for which a sum of 2*l.* 2*s.* per night was sanctioned. The subordinate officers for these five circuits were respectively designated, clerk of indictments, clerk of arraigns, associate, circuit bailiff; and for the three first of such officers salaries were fixed of 300*l.* per annum, rising by 20*l.* annually to 400*l.*, with 1*l.* 10*s.* per night when absent on circuit; for the bailiff, a salary of 100*l.* with 10*s.* a night on circuit.

Permission was also given to the clerk of assize to select one of the three officers first named to act as his deputy, and to the person so selected an additional salary of 100*l.* per annum was assigned.

No salary was at that time fixed for the clerk of assize on the Norfolk Circuit, who was an officer far advanced in years and of long standing, but he was permitted to retain the commuted allowance which he had received for some years under the provisions of the Act of 1 Will. 4, c. 58, and during his continuance in office to employ a deputy clerk of the Crown, acting also as clerk of arraigns, with 300*l.* per annum, rising by 20*l.* to 400*l.*; a clerk of indictments and an associate, with 200*l.* per annum respectively, advancing by the same rate of increment to 300*l.*; and a circuit bailiff at 100*l.*

These officers received the same subsistence allowance as on the other circuits.

For the clerks of assize on the North Wales and South Wales Circuits salaries of 500*l.* per annum each were settled, with a travelling and subsistence allowance of 2*l.* 2*s.* per night; and they were allowed the services of a principal assistant officer, with 300*l.* a year, and a second officer with 150*l.*, the latter salaries covering the expense of locomotion and subsistence.

As the fees received by the clerks of assize in civil causes were not abolished by the Nisi Prius Act, they continued to receive these fees, and to account for them, pro tanto of their salaries, until the passing of 23 Vict. c. 45, since which period these fees, in common with all the fees of the Superior Courts, have been collected in stamps.

The only material alteration which has since taken place in the amounts above stated has reference to the Norfolk and Midland Circuits. The death of the late Mr. Edgell, in 1863, rendered it necessary to fix a salary for the clerk of assize on the Norfolk Circuit, and the Act of 26 & 27 Vict. c. 122, which was passed at about the same period, gave power to Her Majesty in Council to alter the circuits, by withdrawing counties from any one circuit, and annexing them to another; and it empowered the Board of Treasury, with the sanction of the chief judges, to make such changes in the amount of the salaries of the clerks of assize as might appear to be required in consequence of the alteration of their circuits. Accordingly the Northern Circuit was altered by the withdrawal from it of the county of York, which was annexed to the Midland, while the counties of Leicester, Rutland, and Northampton were detached from the Midland and added to the Norfolk Circuit. The Treasury did not see fit at that time to make any alteration in the emoluments of the clerk of assize on the Northern Circuit, who has held that office for a very considerable period, and who, under an arrangement made in 1851 by the then Board of Treasury, is in receipt, in addition to his salary, of an annual allowance of 1050*l.* for special services in connection with the taxation of costs on his circuit, by which he has been the means of saving a large amount to the public. Having waited, however, for two years to test the effects of the change, the Lords of the Treasury, by a minute in 1856, sanctioned an addition of 100*l.* per annum to the salary of the present clerk of assize on the Midland Circuit, in consideration of the increased trouble and expense which he had incurred by the annexation of Yorkshire to his circuit. At the same time the salary of the clerk of assize on the Norfolk Circuit was fixed at 900*l.* per annum, and he was allowed, as on the other circuit, the services of three officers, acting in the same capacities, and receiving 200*l.* each, rising by 20*l.* a year to 300*l.* The only other modification which has been made in the arrangement of 1856, consists in the concession of the two officers on each of the Welsh Circuits of the same rate of travelling and subsistence allowance as is enjoyed by the officers on the other circuits.

In order to form an opinion of the nature of the duties transacted by the clerks of assize, we requested the attendance of some of them, and also of some of their officers at the Treasury, for the purpose of answering such queries as we might consider it desirable to put. We did not think it necessary to request the attendance of every clerk of assize, inasmuch as the duties to be discharged are so far similar that a recapitulation of them on one circuit would enable an opinion to be formed of the character of the business on all, due regard being had to the differing extent of the civil and criminal business on different circuits.

The following is a summary of the information with which we were furnished as to the duties discharged by clerks of assize and their subordinates previous to and during the several circuits:—

On being furnished by the gaolers of the several county and borough gaols in his circuit with returns of the prisoners for trial, the clerk of assize attends the judges who are going his circuit, submits the returns to them, and also such information as he can obtain as to the extent of civil business at the several assize towns, in order that the judges may fix the days for opening the commission in each place.

The next step is, to give notice to the Crown Office of the days fixed, in order that the commissions may be drawn up, to prepare the assize precepts to be issued to the sheriffs commanding them to summon jurors, &c., to get them signed and sealed, and then to serve them. It may also be necessary to communicate with the sheriffs as to the number of special juries required.

Before leaving for his circuit, the clerk of assize obtains and takes charge of the commissions, which he reads in open court at each assize town. On circuit he receives all the depositions in cases for trial; and from these, as well as from instructions which may be given to him, it is his duty to prepare all the indictments, except in some prosecutions undertaken by the Government, in which the indictments may be prepared by the solicitor of the department prosecuting. If subpoenas are required for witnesses who have not been bound over, or if any information is wanted by attorneys or others on points of practice, reference would be made to the clerk of assize. When the trial commences, the clerk of assize, or one of his officers, attends in the criminal court during the entire sitting, to call the jury, arraign the prisoners, take recognizances, record all the proceedings and judgments, and to draw up and issue the orders or sentences of court for penal servitude, &c. As each trial concludes, it is the duty of the clerk of assize to tax the costs of the prosecutor and witnesses, and now, under the recent statute, the costs also of the witnesses for the defence, and to draw up the orders of court upon the treasurer of the jurisdiction for the costs allowed. At the termination of the business in the Crown Court, the clerk of assize, in communication with the gaoler, is required to draw up the calendars containing the names and offences of the prisoners, their sentences, &c., to be signed by the judge, and a copy of which is required by law to be sent to the Home Office. It is likewise his duty to prepare all lists of forfeited recognizances and fines imposed for the judge's signature, to estreat the fines, &c., make out the estreat roll and writs to be served on the sheriffs, in order that they may levy the forfeitures, to serve them, and to send duplicates of the roll to the Treasury. Under the last Jury Act, it would also be the province of the clerk of assize to correspond with jurors who have been fined, require them to forward affidavits of the cause of their non-attendance, and submit the same to the judge for his directions.

In the civil or Nisi Prius Court, the clerk of the assize is required to receive, examine, and enter all records for trial; to attend the court during the entire sittings, receive and cancel the stamps by which the fees are now paid, record all the proceedings, and to draw up all orders of reference, certificates, and postea, or judgments of the court, all matters of considerable legal technicality, and to deliver the latter to the parties interested, when called upon to do so. He has also to enforce the fines which may be imposed on jurors for non-attendance. It is a part of his duty to see that all documents tendered in evidence, and liable to stamp duty, are duly stamped. He may also be called upon to sit as arbitrator, if required.

In addition to his duties on circuit, it is necessary that the clerk of assize should have an office generally in London, at which all the records of the circuit are kept, and he is required, on application at any time, to deliver the postea, to draw up and sign certificates of conviction (under a heavy penalty if incorrect), and to furnish copies of depositions and other proceedings, if required. He may be called upon to make returns to all writs of certiorari from the Queen's Bench, and to make up all records in cases of error, and in addition to the criminal returns of each assize, the clerk of assize has to send to the Home Office an annual return of all civil business transacted on circuit.

From what has been before stated, it will be apparent that the whole of the administrative business of the criminal and Nisi Prius courts of circuit is vested in the clerk of assize. He is responsible for putting the entire machinery in motion, and for its correct working at every stage. He may personally perform any part of the duties of his office which he sees fit to undertake, and either attend as associate in the civil court, sit as clerk of arraigns in the Crown court, or devote his time to the taxation of costs.

The duties of his officers are primarily those designated by their names; thus the preparation of the indictments devolves on the clerk of indictments, and the clerk of arraigns and associate attend respectively in the criminal and civil courts to conduct the business thereof. Practically, however, the labours of the officers are by no means confined to the duties strictly appertaining to their offices. The time allotted to the business at each assize town is rarely more than is sufficient for its proper discharge, and occasionally not sufficient, and the united exertions of the clerk of assize and his officers are required to enable them to keep pace with the cases as they are disposed of by the court. Directly the grand jury have found true bills on the indictments laid before them, the trials commence; and as each trial terminates it is highly desirable that the costs should be at once taxed, and the prosecutor and witnesses be paid their expenses, because each day that they are detained at the assize town adds to the cost of the trial, and to the charge upon the public funds, which ultimately bear the expenses of criminal prosecutions. We were assured, moreover, that this taxation requires some delicacy, and the exercise of a good deal of discretion, because, although the actual expenses are measured by a fixed scale, the charges for professional labour are necessarily dependent on the nature and circumstances of each case, and require to be carefully watched.

It is also by no means uncommon to have two, and even more, courts sitting at the same time for the trial of criminal cases. So soon as the civil business, which on the majority of circuits is light in comparison with the criminal, has been brought to a conclusion, the Nisi Prius judge will proceed to try prisoners, in which case the associate may be called upon to act as clerk of arraigns in his court.

It is also not unusual for one of the leading barristers named in the commission to assist the judge in the trial of criminal cases in another court, and for each court that may be opened the clerk of assize must provide an officer. We were assured by all the gentlemen who attended before us, and we see no reason to doubt their testimony, that, during the continuance of the assizes, it is absolutely necessary for the clerk of the assize and all his officers to be in constant attendance to keep down the work, and prevent its getting into arrears.

For these reasons we are of opinion that, although the circuits do not, on an average, occupy more than from three to four months every year, and although at other times the attendance of one officer at the office in London is sufficient to meet all requirements, it is not desirable to reduce the number of the officers subordinate to the clerk of assize, or to consolidate their offices. It might, indeed, be considered that, as the active demand on the time of these officers does not extend over more than a third of the year, it would be a preferable course for the clerk of the assize to engage such assistance as he might require for the actual duration of each circuit, rather than to keep up a staff for whom no sufficient employment can be found during the remaining two-thirds. Looking, however, to the high importance of having trained and practised men for the discharge of these duties, not only with a view to the interests of justice, but to the saving of public money in the quick taxation and settlement of costs, and as men so qualified could hardly be obtained on any other than a permanent footing, we are not disposed to recommend the adoption of any such provisional arrangement.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

INFRINGEMENT OF PATENT—EQUITY PRACTICE—ANSWERS—COSTS.—In a suit for infringement of a patent, the defendant, having put in a sufficient answer, filed a concise statement, with interrogatories, several of which went to show that the plaintiff's was not an original invention, and interrogated them as to specifications of other patents of earlier date than their alleged invention, and as to the minute details of such inventions, and of their own. The plaintiffs, after admitting the existence of the specifications referred to, alleged merely that they contained nothing whatever which was in anticipation of their own discoveries, and submitted that they were not bound to make any further answer. On the defendant excepting, it was held, overruling the decision of James, V.C., that the plaintiffs must answer more fully as to all matters of fact, and that the details referred to in the interrogatories were not the less matters of fact because the defendant had alluded to the specifications or other written documents, setting them forth. Nor were they relieved from the necessity of answering fully, because the discovery sought related exclusively to the plaintiff's case against the defendant in this suit, for in such a suit it is the very case of the defendant that the patent which is sought to be protected is itself invalid. The case of a defendant who has filed a concise statement with interrogatories as to the answer thereto, distinguished from the case of an answer by the defendant to the plaintiff's bill. But it was held, agreeing with his Honour, that the defendant was not entitled to call on the plaintiffs to state particulars as to the alleged legal proceedings in foreign countries with respect to their patent, nor to have set forth in full in the answer a correspondence which had passed between themselves and the inventor under whom the defendant claimed. And the original bill having fully stated the infringements of which the plaintiffs complained, it was held, that the adoption by the answer of those statements was a sufficient answer to an interrogatory calling for full and descriptive particulars of such alleged infringements. An exception bad in part is not, therefore, bad in the whole: (Hoffman v. Postill, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 893. Ch.)

PLAINTIFFS' DOCUMENTS—PRODUCTION OF—SOLICITOR AND CLIENT—CORRESPONDENCE—PRIVILEGE.—The plaintiffs claimed to be transferees of a mortgage from the defendants, who were originally the mortgagees. The defendants by their answer denied the transfer, or its validity, and required the usual affidavit of documents from the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs admitted documents, but claimed to withhold them, on the ground as to some that they related to their own title exclusively, and not to that of the defendants: Held, that in such circumstances it was the case of the defendants to show that the plaintiffs had no title, and that they were entitled to the production. But correspondence between a client and his solicitor was held to be privileged from production, not merely where it related to the subject-matter of dispute then in existence, but as being correspondence between client and solicitor, or acting in the course of his business as solicitor: (Boyd v. Petrie, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 934. Ch.)

JUDGMENT-CREDITOR OF MORTGAGOR—EXECUTION NOT ISSUED—27 & 28 VICT. c. 112.—Certain judgment-creditors of a mortgagor, who had not issued execution, were made defendants to a suit for foreclosure: Held, that if the judgment-creditors should issue execution, and the returns to the writs should be made before the expiration of the six months allowed for redemption, they would be entitled to redeem, but not otherwise: (Mildred v. Austin, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 939. M. R.)

PRACTICE—PARTITION ACT 1868 (31 & 32 VICT. c. 40).—A bill was filed for the partition of an estate under the Partition Act 1868. The parties afterwards desired that part of the property should be partitioned, and the rest sold: Held that this could be done under the Partition Act 1868. Decree accordingly for partition of part of the estate, and for sale of the rest: (Roebuck v. Chadebet, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 940. M. R.)

COMMENTS ON A SUIT IN A LOCAL JOURNAL.—Where a newspaper article, having relation to a pending suit, was, in the opinion of the court, calculated to create prejudice against the plaintiff, and to cast opprobrium upon his solicitor, an order for committal of the publisher was made, but not, however, to be enforced for three weeks, in order to afford an opportunity for the publication of an apology: (Robson v. Dodd, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 941. V.C.M.)

JUDGMENT RECOVERED—LEX FORI.—A plea of judgment in favour of the defendant recovered in the court of a foreign country on the Statute of Limitations of that country, is not an answer to an action brought here for the same cause of action. In the case of an attorney's bill of costs for the conduct of a suit in an inferior court and also on appeal, the Statute of Limitations does not begin to run until the termination of the suit in the appellate court. The plaintiffs, attorneys in partnership in the Isle of Man, were employed by the defendant in March 1858 to conduct a suit in the Ecclesiastical Court of that island, in which suit he was a party. The Ecclesiastical Court pronounced judgment in favour of the defendant in April 1861, but the case was brought on appeal to the appellate court of the island by the other parties to the suit in Sept. 1861, and the litigation proceeded there till April 1865, when the judgment of the appellate court was pronounced. The partnership of the plaintiffs had been dissolved in Oct. 1862, from which time one of them only had the conduct of the suit. An action was brought in the Deemsters Court of the Isle of Man to recover the amount of the plaintiff's bill of costs up to the time of the dissolution of partnership, and the Manx Statute of Limitations (three years) having been pleaded, judgment was given for the defendant on that ground. An action afterwards being brought in this country for the same cause of action: Held, that a plea of the judgment recovered in the Isle of Man court was not a bar to the action, such judgment not being one on the merits of the case: Held, also, that the employment of the plaintiffs was a continuous one, and that the Statute of Limitations did not begin to run against their claim until after the termination of the suit in the court of appeal: (Harris and another v. Quine, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 947. Q. B.)

A MONSTER BILL.—The Bill for consolidating and amending the Acts relating to merchant shipping and navigation has been issued. It extends over 300 folio pages, and comprises 733 clauses and 35 pages of schedules.

ACTS OF PARLIAMENT.—The number of public Acts passed in the recent session was 117 against 130 in the preceding year. In the session just ended the local statutes numbered 182, and in the last year 159.

THE TICHBORNE CASE.—Vice-Chancellor James held a court, at the Black Horse inn, Shere, near Guildford, at which Mr. Richard Sydenham, the printer and publisher of the Poole Pilot, appeared to show cause why he should not be committed for a contempt of court, in publishing in his newspaper an article vindicating in strong terms the claims of the alleged Sir Roger Doughty Tichborne (a party to a suit pending in the court) to the Tichborne title and estates. Mr. Chapman Barber appeared for the present infant possessor of the estates, Sir Henry Alfred Tichborne, and having read the article from the respondent's newspaper, applied that he should be committed for contempt. Dr. Tristram appeared for Mr. Sydenham, and put in an affidavit expressing the deep regret of the respondent at having published the article. The learned counsel said that the strong remarks against the present claimant which had appeared in other newspapers had led his client to believe that he had a right to comment on the case. The Vice-Chancellor said that a gross contempt of court had been committed, and at first he was strongly inclined to send the respondent to prison. The public press had been cautioned by previous proceedings in the court in this very case, that it had no right to comment upon or interfere with a pending suit. As the respondent had expressed his regret he would order him to pay the costs of the application; but in all future cases the full punitive power vested in the court would be exercised.

FATAL ACCIDENT TO A SOLICITOR.—The coroner for Southampton held an inquest of the body of Mr. Bunyan Maskey, a solicitor, a large practice for many years in that town, registrar of marriages for the district, and well known throughout the county of Hants. It appears that about a fortnight ago the deceased, who was very fond of riding, went on horseback to see a client living at Freemantle, about two miles from Southampton. On his way home he called at the house of a friend, and remained there a short time the horse, which was rather fresh, being near while turned into an adjoining meadow. Deceased appeared to be in his usual good health and spirits, and on his departure his friends followed him to the door to wish him good bye. He remounted, but had ridden not more than a dozen strides when he was seen to fall forward, an slipping down by the horse's neck, he fell head to the ground head foremost. He was picked up insensible and bleeding, and was conveyed to his home in a cab in charge of a medical man. It was found he had suffered a severe concussion of the spine, the whole of the lower portion of his body being paralysed. He regained his senses, but after lingering in great pain for many days he died from the injuries received in the fall. It is supposed the accident arose from deceased being suddenly seized with one of the fits of giddiness in the head to which he was subject. He was lately a member of the corporation of Southampton, and was sixty-nine years of age. A verdict of accidental death was returned.

THE LAW COURTS' SITE.—The Master of the Rolls was among those who were examined before the Commons' Select Committee, which has just been considering the question of a site for the new courts. Lord Romilly being asked by the chairman which of the two proposed sites he considered most convenient, rather startled the querist by proposing to say a few words on the question whether we want any site at all. His Lordship proceeded to state that in his opinion we need take a completely unnecessary and wasteful expenditure of money in building new courts at all present. He does not believe that new courts are wanted, and he is convinced that we do not know what courts will be required. We have got from the Judicature Commission a report which they propose a complete alteration in the system of judicature and appeal; and it will be singular inconvenience if, after we have built a new courts, we find that we have got some which are not wanted, and others which are not suited for the purpose required; in short, that so much money has been thrown away. He maintains that we ought not to build any new courts until we have ascertained what changes in the judicature are required. A great alteration in the law impending, which will require a corresponding alteration in the courts. As to the concentration of courts, he allows that this will be an advantage to solicitors in large practice by enabling them to keep one or two fewer clerks; but he does not believe it will be any advantage to the general public. In the crowding and bustle that must arise strangers will not know where to find the court they want; and to the suitors it will not cause a saving of a penny per cent. in costs.

"THE CHIEF CLERK."—Readers of the new paper reports of the proceedings in the law court are often puzzled to understand the functions of a personage who usually plays an important part in them—the chief clerk. The nature of that officer's functions is fully explained in the evidence given before the Scottish Law Courts Commission by Mr. George Hume, one of the taxing masters in Chancery. Mr. Hume said:—The Masters in Chancery Abolition Bill (15 & 16 Vict. c. 80), which established the system of conducting business in the chambers of the equity judges, enacts that each judge shall have the sole power to order what matters and things shall be investigated by and before his chief clerks, either with or without his direction, during their progress, and what by himself. The business of the judge's chambers is conducted under the immediate control and direction of the judge; and the great safeguard of the system is the ready access to the judge, on the part both of the chief clerk and of the suitor, whenever necessary. The judge personally hears and decides all questions which he may direct to be brought before him, or which are adjourned to him by the chief clerk for his consideration; and for that purpose the judge sits in chambers once or twice in every week during the sittings of the court, from three or half-past three o'clock in the afternoon until five or six o'clock, as may be required, as well as at other times on any urgent occasion. Where the parties desire to have the assistance of counsel on each side, cases adjourned by the chief clerk are usually heard by the judge in open court during the ordinary sittings of the court. The judge is also at all times accessible to the chief clerk for advice and assistance in any proceedings pending in chambers; and in all cases any party interested in the proceedings has the right to have any question brought formally before the judge, for his personal opinion or decision. The chief clerks must by statute have the qualification of ten years' practice as solicitors immediately preceding their appointment. They are, therefore, from their practical knowledge and experience, fully competent to discharge the important duties of their office. It is obvious that every inquiry, account, investigation of a pedigree, allowance of debts, &c., requires the exercise of what may be called "judicial discretion;" and even decisions upon application for time to answer may be called "judicial." These cases necessarily involve mixed questions of law and fact, and the principle upon which the business in chambers is conducted is that the chief clerk investigates all these matters; and then, if a question either of law or fact arises, which the chief clerk for his own guidance considers proper, or any of the parties desire, to refer to the judge, this is done as a matter of course, not in the nature of appeal or review, but for the decision of the judge himself in lieu of that of his chief clerk. In such cases the question may be adjourned for the judge in chambers or in court, or be reserved by the chief clerk's certificate for the decision of the court on hearing the cause on further consideration, according to the nature of the question and the convenience and wishes of the parties; and in these cases it is the duty of the chief clerk to see that all the evidence is complete, and the question ripe for the court or judge. The whole principle is that the chief clerk should transact such business as from the nature and importance of the question involved may safely be entrusted to a solicitor of experience; and that whenever during the proceedings a question of any kind arises which ought to be disposed of by the judge, this may be done in a ready and inexpensive manner. Counsel are not heard before the chief clerks in proceedings in chambers.

THE BENCH AND THE BAR.

ASSIZE INTELLIGENCE.

NORTHERN CIRCUIT.

Liverpool, Aug. 13.—The commission was opened here yesterday afternoon, and their Lordships commenced the business of the assize this morning. The list looks a very heavy one, there being 108 entries of causes, 51 of which are special juries, but it may be that it will turn out more or less a "rotten" one. The calendar is unusually light, there being 42 cases only, comprising 58 prisoners, none of which promise to be of remarkable importance.

Mr. James Fallon, barrister-at-law, has been appointed recorder of Tewkesbury.

STIPENDIARY MAGISTRATE FOR MANCHESTER.—Sir William Mantle has received the appointment of stipendiary magistrate for the Manchester division, rendered vacant by the death of Mr. H. L. Trafford.

REVISING BARRISTERSHIPS.—The Lord Chief Baron has appointed Mr. G. Francis and Mr. J. Phillips additional revising barristers for Kent, and Mr. R. Williams (son of Mr. Justice Williams) additional revising barrister for Surrey.

The Lord Chancellor has offered the rectory of St. Mary, Stafford, vacant by the elevation of the Right Rev. Dr. Cowie to the Bishopric of Auckland, to the Hon. Adelbert Anson, M.A., of Christ Church, Oxford, vicar of St. Michael's, Handsworth, near Birmingham, a brother of the Earl of Lichfield, but he has declined it. The Lord Chancellor had previously offered it to the Rev. F. J. Wood, M.A., curate of St. Peter's, Leeds, a nephew of his Lordship, who also declined it.

MAGISTRATE AND PARISH LAWYER.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

POOR LAW—IRREMOVABILITY OF PAUPER—UNION.—By the combined effect of 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 109, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 55, s. 12, and 28 & 29 Vict. c. 74, s. 8, a pauper is irremovable who resides one year in "any number of parishes . . . incorporated for the relief or maintenance of the poor under any local Act." By a local Act of Parliament the parish of Pool was incorporated with certain other parishes and townships in one united district, to be called the "Montgomery and Pool United District;" the guardians of the united district to hold the house of industry which had been established by former local Acts, and to elect directors who should have the governance and control of the house of industry and the poor to be received therein; but each parish or other place within the united district was to have the separate care of the poor belonging to it, or who should be sent or received into the house of industry from it, and was to maintain or provide for them at the separate expense of such parish or place either in the house of industry or elsewhere, and might send its poor to the house of industry and take them out again at its discretion. Certain paupers who had resided for more than a year in the united district, but for less than that period in the particular division to which they had last removed, were by an order of justices directed to be removed from that division to the place of their last legal settlement. On appeal from the justices' order: Held, that the "Montgomery and Pool United District" was a union within the meaning of the above Acts of Parliament, and therefore that the paupers having resided for more than a year in the united district, were irremovable: (Guardians of the Poor of Machynlleth v. The Churchwardens, &c., of Pool, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 951. Q.B.)

A MAGISTRATE FINED 5*l.* FOR ILLEGAL FISHING.—Mr. Tomkyns Dew, of Whitney Court, a magistrate for the county of Hereford, and late high sheriff for the same, has been fined 5*l.* by his brother magistrates for using a fixed engine, called a "stopping net," in fishing for salmon in the river Wye, along the banks of which river Mr. Dew is a considerable landholder. Mr. Gwillim, of Hereford, conducted the prosecution at the instance of the Wye Fishery Board. The information was laid under the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 109, s. 11, which enacts, that "no fixed engine of any description shall be placed or used for catching salmon in any inland or tidal waters; but the section shall not affect any ancient right or mode of fishing lawfully exercised at the time of the passing of the Act by any person by virtue of any grant, charter, or immemorial usage." By the interpretation clause of the same statute fixed engines include putchers, and by sect. 29 of the 28 & 29 Vict. c. 121, the term fixed engine applies to "any net fixed to the soil, or made stationary in any other way." Mr. Justice Lush ruled accordingly in the recent case, Holford v. George, 3 L. Rep. 639. The court having inflicted a fine of 5*l.* upon the defendant, Mr. Dew gave notice of appeal.

EMBEZZLEMENT BY A PARTNER.—The first case of alleged embezzlement by a partner has just been tried at the Leeds Circuit Court under the statute of last year, resulting in a verdict of not guilty, the point of difficulty having been whether the facts alleged constituted embezzlement, or only proved a lax mode of keeping accounts. It was stated that after the partnership had gone on for some time the partners, Wanstall and Willis, quarrelled, and one of them, Willis, took possession of the books, and handed them to an accountant. The day after this the cash book was handed to the prisoner Wanstall to enter any payments he might have received, and he entered a great number, which had been omitted during a period of eighteen months, amounting to 145*l.*, which sum, however, he claimed by an entry on the credit side that he was entitled to draw. The indictment charged three small sums not in the list thus handed in. The special case for the defence was strong, but it is easy to see from the above how difficult it will often be to establish a charge of embezzlement against partners. It is only natural that they should do strong things against each other merely to protect themselves and without any intention to defraud; and it may be doubted whether the facts stated, if proved, would have constituted a case. If the attempt had been to show that there was no pretence for the claim of 145*l.* at all, it would have been more plausible; but obviously the omission of one or two of the payments might be an oversight.

MR. JUSTICE HANNEN AND THE NEW BEERHOUSE ACT.—In his charge to the grand jury at the Liverpool assizes, Mr. Justice Hannen alluded to the new Beerhouse Act, some portions of which he said, he regarded as full of good promise. He considered the old beerhouse regulations as most ineffective, as the great facilities afforded for the acquisition of a beerhouse licence rendered almost nugatory the requirements that the applicants for licences should be persons of good character. In fact, so easy was it found to obtain testimonials as to character, that there was no security as to the bona fides of the applicants. He was, however, happy to say that under the new Act there was no stereotyped form in which a man could obtain a certificate of good character, and it would in future be the duty of the magistrates to ascertain, by careful inquiry, if the applicant's character was really good. In addition to this, the power now vested in the magistrates of depriving a man, under certain circumstances, of the right to keep a beerhouse; would doubtless be productive of the best results. For instance, the magistrates have now the power to deprive a person of his or her licence if the house became disorderly or frequented by thieves, prostitutes, or other bad characters. Although it was not made a specific ground for depriving a man of his licence that he should habitually supply persons already drunk with more drink, yet when the question arose whether or not the house was disorderly, the man who was proved to have repeatedly supplied persons already drunk with more drink would afford the most cogent evidence that his house was disorderly, inasmuch as nothing so much tended to disorder as such a practice. Another excellent provision of the new Act was, that not only should a person who kept his house open after the proper hour be liable to a fine, but that those persons who were found there should also be liable. His Lordship in conclusion said that they must not be disappointed if the good results of recent legislation were neither immediate nor even speedy. It would be a work of time to change the habits of the people, and it was his opinion that no great change could be hoped for until not only the facilities but the inclination for drinking were greatly decreased. To produce such good effects they must look for a great spread of education amongst the masses, whose tastes and amusements it would be wise to simultaneously enlarge and improve.

HANGING.—Whatever grounds may be urged for retaining or abolishing capital punishment, there is one question connected with the subject which hardly receives the attention it deserves. Assuming that it is necessary to put an end to the earthly career of a certain class of criminals, that object is fully gained by the quickest and most merciful means; we are agreed that life should be extinguished without torture, and it is equally objectionable to kick the condemned man from time into eternity, so to speak. Now our own way of killing a criminal is by throttling him. Is this process unnecessarily painful or not? The general opinion of the community is that a criminal who is hanged suffers little if any pain; that dislocation of the neck is ensured, and that thereupon sensation is at an end almost immediately. We find that the unhappy man was "launched into eternity," and as the launch was all over before respectable people were down to breakfast, we trouble ourselves little on the subject; and, indeed, it is by no means a pleasant matter for contemplation. Yet if we made inquiry at Newgate we should find that of the many criminals executed at that prison during the last twenty years, perhaps only two or three have had their necks dislocated. The others have died of sheer strangulation. There is, therefore, good reason for believing that hanging is an unequal punishment. No doubt all executions seem alike, but that is because, since one miserable wretch a few years ago got his feet on to the scaffold after the drop had fallen, an ingenious and elaborate adjustment of leather straps was devised to prevent such ghastly accidents in future. If those whose duty has compelled them to stand near the gallows on the occasion of many executions told us truthfully what really happens, we believe they would give the following account. When the drop falls the culprit struggles violently for about three-quarters of a minute; his head then droops on one side, he becomes motionless, and at this moment the reporters say he is "launched into eternity." Reporters are, however, liable to error, and never more so than on these terrible occasions, when the account of the closing scene is generally written beforehand. Though the man is motionless, the end is not yet; the culprit, reviving from his faint, returns again to time from eternity, and the violent heaving of his chest shows the fearful nature of a second struggle, which would be evident to all but for the happy thought of the straps. This second agony varies in duration very much according to the manner in which the executioner has exercised his skill; but its average duration is about two minutes, measured by our time. We believe this to be a fair account of what takes place at most executions. The details, of course, vary according to the dexterity of the hangman. People would be horrified at the suggestion, but there can be no doubt that few officials more require a certificate from the Civil Service Commissioners than the executioner. The slightest error in adjusting the noose, any miscalculation in the length of the drop, may make the suffering tenfold greater in one case than in another. The truth is, we apprehend, that hanging, even when skillfully performed, is but a barbarous mode of putting an end to life, and unskillfully performed there is reason to fear that it becomes positive torture; and, moreover, the mere difference in the weight of the culprits renders it at all times an unequal punishment. Heavy murderers escape much of the pain we inflict on lighter villains. Now that executions are no longer conducted in public, and the faults in our system, if faults there be, may remain concealed within the prison walls for an indefinite time, might it not be advisable to consider whether our mode of execution is really the best one possible? Might not this very method be rendered almost painless by one of the many agents known to modern medicine? Suppose that dreadful white cap were at the last moment drenched with chloroform, for instance?—Pall-Mall Gazette.

REAL PROPERTY LAWYER AND CONVEYANCER.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

DOWER.—D. devised his freehold and personal estate in trust to permit his wife and five children to receive the rents and profits, subject to the payment of debts. After the date of the will real estate was conveyed to him, without any declaration against dower. The widow was held to be excluded from dower by the 9th, but not by the 4th section of the Dower Act: (Rowland v. Cuthbertson, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 938. M. R.)

MORTGAGE—FORECLOSURE—REDEMPTION.—Judgment-creditors of a mortgagor who had not issued execution, were made defendants to a foreclosure suit. It was held that, if they should issue execution and the return to the writs should be made before the expiration of the six months allowed for redemption, they would be entitled to redeem, but not otherwise: (Mildred v. Austin, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 939. M. R.)

MORTGAGE—POLICY OF ASSURANCE—PREMIUMS.—The mortgagee of a policy of assurance gives C. an equitable charge on it. B. paid the premiums down to his death, and his administrator to 1868, when the life dropped, and the policy became due. B.'s administrators were held to be entitled in priority over C., in respect of the moneys he had expended out of B.'s estate in payment of premiums he had paid on the policy, but not in respect of premiums paid by B. in his lifetime: (Norris v. The Caledonian Insurance Company, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 939. M. R.)

PARTITION ACT.—A bill was filed under this Act for a partition. The parties afterwards desired that part of the property should be partitioned, and the rest sold. The court was of opinion that this might be done, and made order accordingly: (Roebuck v. Chadebet, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 940. M. R.)

WILL.—B. gave to his wife all his household furniture "and property of every description" that he might be possessed of at the time of his death, and also moneys in his possession, or that might be due to him. Realty was held not to be included in this gift: (Ex parte Yates, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 940. V. C. S.)

ANTE-NUPTIAL SETTLEMENT—VOID AGAINST CREDITORS.—When an action for debt was pending against him, B. assigned all his property in trust for his intended wife for life with remainder to his son absolutely. The marriage took place immediately afterwards. B. had previously cohabited with her, and they had lived alone in the same house for many years. The settlement was held to be fraudulent, and the wife to be a party to the fraud, and that it was void as against the creditors: (Bulmer v. Hunter, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 942. V. C. M.)

THE LAND LAWS.—A correspondent of the Scotsman states that some advanced Liberal members of the House of Commons are endeavouring to form a society, the objects of which will be to discuss, and thoroughly develop the land question in all its phases. It will seek to test and enlighten public opinion on all points which come fairly within its programme, and it is thought that even before next session sufficient progress will be made to give the Government great encouragement in any courageous policy upon which they may resolve, and also to indicate to them how far they may go in the direction which the necessities of the Irish case will suggest. The organisation, it is added, is not yet ripe for publicity, but the preliminary meetings have been attended by such members as Mr. Mill, Mr. Jacob Bright, Sir H. Hoare, Mr. Fawcett, Sir C. W. Dilke, &c., and they will have associated with them several colleagues of the artisan order. The result is likely to be made known very soon if the effort to form a society receives encouragement.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

WINDING-UP—ASSURANCE COMPANY—INCORPORATION—CREDITORS.—A mutual marine insurance association had been formed in Feb. 1862. The rules of the association provided that the members should severally (not jointly or in partnership), and each in proportion to the amount of his own insurance, insure the ships of the said members for a year certain, and so on from year to year, unless notice to the contrary should be given. That this and the other rules should form part of and be read with the policy. The affairs of the association were to be managed by a committee, and all moneys kept at a banker's in their names. All sums to be paid by the association to members who should sustain losses, were to be ascertained and settled by the committee, and payment thereof prescribed in a particular manner. In cases of loss the owner of the ship was to remain a member of the association for a period of six months. In case of sale of a ship his liability was to cease from the date of the transfer. The mode of doing business was as follows:—A person desirous of insuring his ship and becoming a member, sent a written application to that effect to the secretary. Upon the application being accepted, he became a member, and executed a power of attorney, empowering the secretary to recover and receive from all persons liable to pay or contribute all sums which were or should become due to the executing parties. The association was never incorporated or registered. An order to wind it up had been pronounced in July 1865, and a call was proposed to be made by the official liquidator, on a list of contributors settled in chambers: Held, on the summons being adjourned into court—1. That the propriety of granting the winding-up order could not now be called in question. 2. That such order did not vary or alter the relative rights of the parties under their contract. 3. That the liability of each member extended only to the payment of such proportions as the rules and regulations prescribed of the various losses occurring during the period of the existence of his policy. 4. That payment to the secretary as prescribed by the rules discharged a member so paying to the extent of the payment. 5. That outside creditors were not creditors of the association, but must look to the individual members who gave the orders to them for satisfaction. 6. That the costs of the winding-up were to be borne by both payers and receivers, under the rules of the association, pro rata, according to the respective amounts of payments or receipts: (The London Marine Insurance Corporation, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 943. V. C. James.)

SALE OF SHARES—CUSTOM OF STOCK EXCHANGE.—A. sold a certain number of shares in a joint-stock company to B., and C. purchased of B. a similar number of shares in the same company. These purchases were made subject to the regulations of the Stock Exchange. Upon the name day B. gave to A. the name of C. as the ultimate purchaser of the shares which he had brought from A. A. executed a transfer of the shares to C., and delivered the transfer and share certificates to him. C. retained the transfer and certificates, but did not execute the former. Calls having been subsequently made on the shares, A. brought an action against C. for an indemnity in respect thereof. The declaration in the action alleged a contract between A. and C. that, in consideration that A. would sell to C. the shares, and would execute and deliver a transfer of them to C., C. would accept and execute such transfer, and pay for the shares, and indemnify A. against subsequent liabilities in respect thereof: Held, upon a traverse of this contract:—Per Kelly, C. B., and Pigott, B. that the contract was proved, and the plaintiff could recover; Per Channell and Cleasby, BB., the plaintiff could not recover, inasmuch as there was no such contract as that alleged between A. and C.: (Davis v. Haycock, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 954. Ex.)

An application was made to the vacation judge in Chancery for the appointment of a provisional liquidator of the Albert Life Office, whose outstanding policies amount to between 3,000,000. and 4,000,000. It is understood (the Times says) that in order to avoid the consequences that would inevitably result from a sudden and unqualified liquidation—bad in all cases, but absolutely ruinous in assurance matters—a scheme will be submitted to the policy holders, through which, by their consenting to sacrifice some moderate proportion of their policies, the company may be reconstructed on a basis that will leave no doubt thenceforth of its stability.

MARITIME LAW.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

FREIGHT—APPORTIONMENT—CONSIDERATION—RESCISSION OF CONTRACT—EVIDENCE.—The plaintiffs shipped goods on board the defendants' ship, to be carried and conveyed, as stated by the bill of lading, "via Colon (Aspinwall) and Panama to San Francisco; that is to say, by arrangement between the West India and Pacific Steamship Company (Limited), the Panama Railroad Company, and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, to be carried to Colon (Aspinwall) by packets of the said West Indian Pacific Steamship Company, from Colon (Aspinwall) to Panama by the Panama Railroad Company, and thence to the port of destination by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company . . . freight and prime to be considered as earned, ship lost or not lost; the freight being 14l. 5s. per ton, payable in Liverpool. The whole freight at the aforesaid rate was paid to the defendants' agent at Liverpool, and the bill of lading was signed by him "for the service from London to Colon (Aspinwall)," and by the agent of the two other companies "for the service from Colon (Aspinwall) to San Francisco." The arrangement entered into between the companies for the division of the freight was set forth in the special case, being 3l. 5s. to the defendants, 4l. per ton to the Panama Railway Company, and 7l. per ton to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. The ship having sailed from Liverpool, was lost, with all her cargo, before reaching Colon (Aspinwall), and the defendants, after receiving notice of the loss, paid over to the two other companies their proportion of the freight which had been paid by the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs having brought an action against the defendants for the recovery of the proportion of freight paid over to the two other companies, viz., for the carriage of the goods from Colon (Aspinwall) to San Francisco: Held, that the bill of lading, though in form one instrument, contained three separate contracts, and that the freight which had been paid in one entire sum was apportionable between the three companies; that for that purpose the court might look at the agreement between the three companies which accompanied the case; that the goods having been lost on the first stage of the journey, without default of the plaintiffs, they were entitled to recover back, as upon a failure of consideration, the amount of freight paid over by the defendants to the two other companies, and that the defendants were properly made the defendants in the action: (Greeves v. The West India and Pacific Steamship Company, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 952. Q. B.)

ADMIRALTY COURT—APPEAL PRACTICE—APPEAL FROM COUNTY COURT.—Sect. 31 of the County Courts Admiralty Act enacts that "no appeal shall be allowed unless the amount decreed or ordered to be due exceeds the sum of 50l." This restriction was held to apply only to appeals by defendants: (The Doctor Van Thunen Tellow, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 960. Adm. Court.)

BANKRUPTCY LAW.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

SHARES IN JOINT-STOCK COMPANY—FORFEITURE.—By the deed of settlement of a joint-stock banking company, registered under the Act 7 Geo. 4, c. 96, it was proved that every proprietor of shares in the company should on demand by the board of directors pay any debt owing from him to the company (except calls on shares for which a distinct provision was made), and that the share or shares of every proprietor who should omit so to do should be liable to be forfeited to the company for the benefit of the other proprietors thereof; and that every proprietor whose share or shares should be so forfeited should be thereupon considered as expelled from the company; but that the forfeiture should not discharge the debt due from him to the company. A. was the proprietor of seventy-one shares in the company, with whom he also kept a banking account. In Dec. 1867 his account was overdrawn to the extent of 8000*l.*, this sum being partly secured by an equitable deposit of some deeds with the company. On the 25th Nov. the company served him with notice to pay the balance due on or before the 2nd Dec. On the 28th Nov. he filed a declaration of insolvency, and on the 29th Nov. he was adjudicated a bankrupt on the petition of the company. The debt not having been paid, the directors on the 3rd Dec. passed a resolution of forfeiture of A.'s shares to the company. The company realised their mortgage security, and then sought to prove against A.'s estate for the balance remaining due to them, which was 6284*l.* The commissioner held that the company could only prove for the balance, after deducting the value of the forfeited shares, and directed the value of them to be ascertained. On appeal, held that the company were entitled to prove for the whole balance of 6284*l.* The order made was that the company claiming the shares as absolute owners, and not asserting any lien upon them the proof was to be admitted without prejudice to any right of the assignees to question the forfeiture: (Ex parte Rippon, re Andrew, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 936. Ch.)

CORRESPONDENCE OF THE PROFESSION.

(Note.—This department of the LAW TIMES being open to free discussion on all professional topics, the Editor is not responsible for any opinions or statements contained in it.)

COUNTY COURT—COSTS.—I shall be obliged by any of your numerous correspondents giving me their opinion on the following points: First, Can the registrar of a County Court legally allow, on taxation of costs as between party and party, the fees for letter before action; instructions to sue; attendance and entering of pleadings, including particulars and copies, such particulars being signed by the attorney, when the person entering the pleadings is not an attorney in the action, and when he, in fact, did not enter the pleadings or sign the particulars accompanying the summons: (vide Schedule of Costs and Rules Regulating the Practice of the County Courts.) Secondly, Can the registrar, on taxation of costs, allow any witnesses' attendance on trial other than those allowed by the judge? I ask these questions because the registrar of a County Court, against the protest of myself as the attorney for a defendant, has allowed the costs of letter, &c., where a person who entered the pleadings was not the attorney conducting the cause; as also where the registrar allowed costs for witnesses' attendance, &c., other than those allowed by the judge on trial (although protested against by myself), the registrar alleging, as his authority, that after the court broke up (and therefore behind the back of myself) he had a conversation with the judge, who directed him to allow the costs of attendance of certain witnesses previously refused.

A PRACTITIONER IN THE COUNTY COURTS.

KAIN'S SYSTEM OF SOLICITORS' BOOK-KEEPING.—I much admire this system, but should like to have some explanation of the principal's account in the private ledger, for a business sole (Triple Column System, 8th edit., p. 54), which I cannot understand. Is this account intended to answer to the cash account in the private ledger for a partnership, and thus show from time to time the balance of cash in hand? If so, how is it that the cash paid into the bank for working capital (50*l.*), is entered in the account? The amount of cash received for the first month is entered 282*l.* 15*s.* 6*d.*, and the amount paid 264*l.* 5*s.*, how can the "balance underdrawn of 31*l.* 9*s.* 6*d.*" represent the cash in hand? The cash in hand must be 18*l.* 10*s.* 6*d.* and I therefore should like to know what this sum of 31*l.* 9*s.* 6*d.* "balance underdrawn," is intended to represent.

FINAL EXAMINATION.—In reply to "Students," I beg to say that he will find "A course of Reading for the Final Examination of the Incorporated Law Society," by Dr. A. K. Rolit, an invaluable guide in his preparation. I and others of my friends have derived from it not only excellent advice as to the books to read, but also most valuable hints as to the manner of reading generally. I know several gentlemen who have gained prizes, and have attributed their success in a great measure to the information contained in this pamphlet, which may be had, I believe, at the office of the LAW TIMES. E. L. P. Bristol, Aug. 10, 1869.

THE BANKRUPTCY ACTS—NEW RULES.—I observe that new rules are to be framed by the Lord Chancellor and chief judge for regulating the practice. I trust a clean sweep will be made, and that the whole of the existing General Orders and County Court rules will be rescinded, and that the new code of orders and rules will be the only ones to which reference will be required to be made, and that you, Mr. Editor, will keep your eye upon this point. J. E.

INVASION.—Annexed I send copy of a circular letter going the rounds of this neighbourhood. I need scarcely state that it, though bearing the same printed address as this letter, does not in any way emanate from me, or anyone connected with my office, and I shall feel obliged by your giving publicity to this and the annexed copy letter in your next impression. LAW—GREAT SAVING OF TIME AND EXPENSE.

A solicitor, well read in the principles of conveyancing and having a collection of the most approved precedents and drafts settled by counsel, draws mortgages for the profession at one-fourth the usual charge; and, having proper assistance, can fulfil instructions for any ordinary draft by return of post.

Practical suggestions submitted (if desired) without fee.

Names of clients need not be exposed. Full address required, with instructions, which should particularly mention such matters as mortgage being or not being in possession, number of persons on each part, &c.

Fees by post-office order, on receipt of draft, payable by return of post, receipt of which will be acknowledged; or, if desired, arrangements for quarterly payments can be entered into.

The salary of an experienced conveyancing clerk may thus be saved, and dispatch insured; and it is hoped only a cursory revision of drafts will be necessary.

Please address first communication—A. B. G., post-office, Hull. 17, Parliament-street, Hull.

EFFECT OF A RETAINER.—I beg to suggest that the questions raised by A., should be referred to the committee of the Saw Grinders' Union, at Sheffield.

Queries.

67. ADULTERY.—A man marries and has children by his wife. He enlists and goes abroad. His wife hears that he is dead, and marries again in twelve years thereafter. Ten years after that she discovers that he is alive and cohabiting with another woman. An action is brought against him for the maintenance of his wife. He pleads her adultery by way of defence. Can such a plea avail, she bona fide believing, and having good reason to believe, that her husband was dead when she contracted the second marriage, and ceasing to cohabit with her second (quasi) husband when she found her bona fide husband was still alive? Cases analogous to or bearing on the point are desired. CONJUX.

68. WITNESS IN COUNTY COURT—COSTS.—Oblige me by your opinion as to whether an attorney can charge for a witness in a County Court case, although he did not put him in the box, consequently plaintiff could not cross-examine him. A similar case was brought before one of the judges some years ago, and the expenses were disallowed because the witness was not of any use; the judge ruling that before a witness's expenses can be allowed he must be examined and cross-examined, if thought necessary, by one or both parties; otherwise, the judge said, a bill of costs may be run up to any amount at the caprice of the attorney having charge of the case. I believe there has been no alteration of late years. A SUFFERER.

69. COUNTY COURT—FRIENDLY SOCIETY.—Can proceedings be taken in the County Court against A. B., the treasurer of an unenrolled friendly society, on his note of hand made payable to the trustees for the time being of the friendly society, for money in his hands at the time the note of hand was given; and by whom should the proceedings be taken—the present trustees or the trustees at the time the note was given? The amount is under 50*l.* W. E.

70. MORTGAGE—FORECLOSURE.—A. executes a mortgage of property to B., in consideration of 183*l.* paid by B. for A., but subject to a proviso for redemption on payment of 200*l.* Can B. foreclose for the 200*l.*, or can A. redeem the property on paying the 183*l.*? ALFRED WALLETT DEACON.

71. JUDGMENT-DEBTOR IN THE COUNTY COURT.—Can a judgment-debtor, against whom an order of commitment has been made by a County Court judge, and who subsequently makes a deed of composition which is registered, be taken under the previous order, or is he protected from arrest by the registrar's certificate? I think I observed a recent decision that his arrest was justifiable, but cannot find it. Any reference will oblige. A. C. S.

72. ARTICLED CLERKS.—For what length of time (during his articles), can a clerk be absent abroad, with leave from his principal, without forfeiting his articles of apprenticeship? B.

73. BEERHOUSE ACT—TIME FOR NOTICES.—If justices adjourn the annual licensing meeting for twenty-two days, can beersellers who have omitted to give proper notice for the annual licensing meeting give a sufficient notice for the adjourned meeting? Or must the notices acted on "at any adjournment" have been given in time for the original meeting? M. C.

74. COPYHOLDS—LEASE OF.—A., without a licence from the lord of the manor, demised and leased certain hereditaments to B., to hold unto B., his executors, administrators, and assigns, from the 29th Sept. then next for the term of three years, and at the expiration of such term of three years, for the further term of three years, and at the expiration of such further term of three years, for the further term of one year, and fully to be complete and ended if the custom or customs of the manor under which the said hereditaments are holden will admit of the same without prejudice thereto, or forfeiture thereof, but not otherwise. B. has been in possession five years. Is the lease valid, or does it work a forfeiture of the estate to the lord of the manor on account of its having been granted without a licence. U. V.

Answers.

(Q. 66.) INTESTATE.—In the case put by "X. Z.," an assignment to the sister from her brother, the administrator, will be necessary, in order to complete her title to her moiety of the leaseholds under the Statute of Distributions; for, until his assent in this manner, she can have no power over the property. The form of assignment would be very simple. It would merely recite the ownership of the deceased, his death and intestacy, the grant of letters of administration, and then the administrator, assigns, and covenants that he has not incumbered. INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.
ANNUAL REPORT OF THE COUNCIL.
The Bankruptcy Bill 1869.

The most important Bill before Parliament during the present session, so far as the administration of the law is concerned, has been the Bill to Consolidate and Amend the Laws of Bankruptcy, brought in by the Attorney-General and Solicitor-General. This Bill, the general purport of which was to abolish officialism, and to take the administration of bankrupts' estates, to a great extent, out of the control of the court, and to place it in the hands of the creditors themselves, as originally framed, was open to the most grave objections, owing no doubt in a great measure to the fact that it had evidently been drawn by a gentleman unacquainted with the practical working of bankruptcy law.

The council, at an early stage of this Bill, put themselves in communication with the Attorney-General, who received, with a readiness and attention which the council feel bound to acknowledge, all their suggestions, and the result was that before the Bill was committed, a considerable number of important amendments had been made in accordance with the views of the council, although the Bill still contained numerous provisions which appeared to be very objectionable. It was, however, not deemed necessary or desirable on this occasion to present a petition to the House on the subject, as the council had the advantage of the valuable assistance in the house of one of their number—Mr. G. B. Gregory—who ably urged their views in committee on the Bill, and was instrumental in carrying some very important amendments.

As the Bill has yet to pass through the House of Lords, the council do not consider it desirable here to enter into any details as to the provisions of the Bill in its present form, further than to state that they believe that the proposed transfer of the jurisdiction, in bankruptcy, in the provinces from the district courts to the County Courts, is a mistaken measure; but as the Government entertained very strong views upon this subject, and as those views were shared by so many members of Parliament taking an active part in commercial questions, the council were satisfied that any opposition to this part of the Bill would have been useless.

County Courts Proceedings Bill.

A Bill was introduced into the House of Commons in the early part of this Session by Mr. Norwood, Mr. Akroyd, and Mr. Mundella, to "further facilitate proceedings in the County Courts," the principal objects of the Bill being to enable plaintiffs to sue in their own districts without the necessity of obtaining leave from the registrar; to extend the operation of the Bills of Exchange Act, and the provisions as to judgment by default; also to make the consent of the plaintiff necessary to authorise the judge to extend the time for payment. But the Bill contained the vice of restricting the provision as to plaintiffs suing in their own districts to cases only of plaintiffs for goods sold "to be dealt with by defendant in the way of his trade."

The council would have taken the opportunity of this Bill being before the House to have presented a petition on the subject of the concurrent jurisdiction of the Superior Courts, had they seen any probability of such a step being attended with any useful result, but the council were satisfied that in the present state of opinion in the House of Commons on the subject of the County Courts, any such petition would not have received attention, and they therefore confined their attention to endeavouring, as far as practicable, to improve the practice of the County Courts, and to remove the evils that now exist. For this purpose they proposed to introduce into the Bill, amendments for extending its operation to all claims, and to increase the scale of costs in cases under the intended Act. With this view the council communicated with Mr. Norwood, who expressed his willingness to adopt the views of the council; but on the 28th May the order for resuming the adjourned debate was discharged, and the Bill withdrawn; the House expressing an unwillingness to entertain any measures affecting the procedure of the courts pending the publication of the report of the Judicial Commission.

Admiralty Jurisdiction (County Courts) Bill.

A Bill, under the title of the Admiralty Jurisdiction (County Courts) Bill, was brought into the House of Commons this Session by Mr. Norwood, Mr. Headlam, and Mr. Candlish. This Bill, although by its title it purported only to affect admiralty jurisdiction, in fact proposed to transfer from the Superior Courts to the County Courts, having admiralty jurisdiction, all claims not exceeding 300*l.*, arising on charter-parties, bills of lading, or other contracts respecting the use or hire of ships, or in respect of freight, demurrage, average, short delivery, or damage to cargo; and generally any claim "relating to any ship or the goods carried therein, except insurance."

The result of this Bill would have been to hand over to the County Courts the most important and best class of business that at present occupies the attention of the common law courts; business of a character which, at present, the County Courts are quite incapable of dealing with satisfactorily; while it would leave the time of the common law judges to be occupied only with the most inferior kind of litigation.

The council considered this measure to be open to the most serious objections, and accordingly three of their number waited on Mr. Norwood, and explained to him their objections to the Bill, in the hope that he and his colleagues might be induced to withdraw it. They did not, however, find that gentleman disposed to change his own views respecting the Bill, and the council therefore determined to present a petition against it; but any further action on the part of the council became unnecessary, as, for the same reasons as those which led to the withdrawal of the County Courts Proceedings Bill, the second reading of this Bill was adjourned, and ultimately the Bill was withdrawn.

Lectures and Classes.

In November last the lecturers and readers appointed in 1867 entered upon a second course of their lectures and classes.

The number of subscribers to the lectures was 171, and to the classes 63, being, in the aggregate, rather in excess of last year.

The names of the lecturers and readers are as follows:—Mr. T. Ll. Murray Browne, of Lincoln's Inn—Conveyancing and the Law of Real Property; Sir George Young, Bart., of Lincoln's Inn—Equity; Mr. C. H. Anderson, of the Temple—Common Law and Mercantile Law.

The Preliminary, Intermediate, and Final Examinations.

The number of candidates who have presented themselves at these examinations during the past year has been unusually large; so much so that the proposed new hall is rendered more than ever necessary, as the appropriation, not only of the existing hall, but other rooms in the society's building, is attended with the greatest inconvenience.

It is a source of much gratification to find that this branch of the Profession is so steadily advancing; and the council think that, to the establishment of an examination in general knowledge before articles of clerkship, may be ascribed the improvement in the moral tone of the candidates for admission to the ranks of the Profession, which is the best safeguard against any abuse of that confidence which so frequently places the property, and even the honour of a client, in the hands of his professional adviser.

The result of the several examinations is as follows:—

Preliminary Examination.—In July 1868, 114 candidates passed, and 32 were postponed; in October, 151 passed, and 43 were postponed; in Feb. 1869, 163 passed, and 56 were postponed; and in May last, 187 passed, and 51 were postponed.

Intermediate Examination.—In Michaelmas Term 1868, 144 candidates passed, and 9 were postponed in Hilary Term, 1869, 92 passed, and 11 were postponed; in Easter Term, 1869, 169 passed, and 16 were postponed; and in Trinity Term last, 145 passed, and 15 were postponed.

Final Examination.—In Michaelmas Term, 1868, 86 candidates passed, and 27 were postponed; in Hilary Term, 1869, 102 passed, and 11 were postponed; in Easter Term, 1869, 64 passed, and 17 were postponed; and in Trinity Term last, 149 passed, and 29 were postponed.

Prizes.—The appendix to this report contains a list of all the candidates who have obtained prizes, certificates of merit, or other honorary distinction. (a)

Usages of the Profession.

During the past year, questions relating to the following subjects have been referred to the council, upon which they have given their opinion—viz., costs under special conditions; procuration fee on a mortgage transaction; costs of perusing and obtaining execution of a deed of appointment of new trustees under special circumstances; costs of lease and counterpart; costs on surrender of old and grant of a new lease; as to receipt by relator's solicitor for costs, being a discharge to the defendants, in a suit in which the Attorney-General is informant; responsibility of parties to a lease with reference to a penalty incurred in consequence of the insufficiency of the stamp.

Matters relating to Attorneys.

The attention of the council has been directed to numerous cases affecting the character of attorneys and solicitors, some of which the council were compelled, in the interest of the public and the Profession, to bring to the notice of the court.

The names of three solicitors have been removed from the roll, and two have been suspended from practising for a time. In two other instances, rules nisi have been obtained, and they are enlarged to next term.

The council have felt it their duty to oppose three applications for restoration to the roll, two of which have been refused, and the third is adjourned for further hearing.

It has also been necessary to oppose several applications for the renewal of attorneys' certificates, which have been allowed to expire. In one case a substantial fine was imposed, in addition to the payment of all arrears of duty. In other instances, orders were made on the payment of the arrears of duty, and a small fine.

Affairs of the Society.

The members will recollect that, at a special meeting of the society, held on the 4th Feb. last, some amended plans of the alterations in and additions to the society's building were submitted for their consideration; and the council stated that, inasmuch as these plans had created a considerable addition to the estimate originally given, the sum of 16,000*l.*, which they were authorised to borrow, was then considered to be insufficient.

A resolution was accordingly passed, authorising the council to obtain an advance of a sum not exceeding 25,000*l.* for the purposes of the new works.

The council have since accepted the tender of Messrs. G. Trollope and Sons; and they are glad to be able to state that the tender fell so far short of the estimate, that it will not be necessary, at least for the present, that the society should borrow more than 15,000*l.*

The alterations and additions now in progress are, mainly, as follows:—

The opening of a large area, immediately adjoining the north side of the great hall, with a view of ventilating the entire building; an improvement which is at present very much required.

The enlargement of the present entrance in Bell Yard.

The erection of a large hall on first floor of the new building, for the purposes of the examinations.

(a) This appendix will be sent to the members very shortly.

tions, with a separate entrance, and lavatories for the use of the students. The size and position of this hall, besides providing for a very pressing want, will leave the existing hall free at all times for the use of the members, the appropriation of which, at the time of the examinations, has been the cause of great inconvenience to the members of the society.

The alterations will also embrace a variety of improvements in the premises occupied by the club, and a new set of strong rooms in the basement.

The new catalogue is now printed, and each member may obtain, without charge, a copy, on application to the librarian, who is instructed to require a receipt for it.

The council have received a communication from Mr. B. F. Watson on the subject of deficiencies in the collection of the Private Acts, in consequence of which a list has been forwarded to Mr. Watson, who has kindly offered his aid in procuring such as are wanting. A collection of these Acts is in the possession of the Earl of Lichfield, as Custos Rotulorum of the County of Stafford: Mrs. Salt, the widow of the late Wm. Salt, Esq., having presented to that county a very valuable collection of books and manuscripts, including Private Acts of Parliament.

Mr. C. H. Collette, of 23, Lincoln's-inn-fields, has been authorised by the widow of a brother of the late Mr. Mendham, to offer for the acceptance of the society a large and valuable collection of tracts and works of the Fathers on the Roman controversy, comprising about 1000 volumes. The council accepted this very handsome donation, which is, at the request of Mrs. Mendham, to be called "The Mendham Collection."

471 volumes have been added to the library by donations and purchases since the last general meeting.

Donations of books have also been received from the following gentlemen:—Messrs. Bower and Cotton; E. F. Burton, Esq.; C. M. Clode, Esq.; J. M. Davenport, Esq. (2); S. E. Donne, Esq. (3); Messrs. Few and Co.; W. Flux, Esq.; B. A. Heywood, Esq. (2); Inner Temple; W. A. Oliver, Esq.; C. Robinson, Esq., U.S.; A. Scratchley, Esq.; C. Tracey, Esq., War York; War Secretary, per Sir Henry James; Robt. Wilson, Esq.

Prints of some of the local and personal, and private Acts of Parliament passed in the session 1868 have been presented by the Parliamentary agents, and the residue have been purchased.

The Colonial Office and India Board have continued to supply prints of the Acts passed in the colonies and Indian Presidencies.

The council announce, with regret, three vacancies on their board, one occasioned by the death of Mr. Ralph Barnes, of Exeter, and two others by the retirement of Mr. Edward Leigh Pemberton and Mr. James Leman.

Mr. Ralph Barnes was one of the first members of the society, practising in the country, represented on this council; and, having regard to the high position he occupied in the Profession, and his great intellectual attainments, his loss is deeply felt.

Mr. Pemberton and Mr. Leman have both been members of the council for many years, and have taken upon themselves their full share of the duties which attach to the office, not only of a member of the council, but the more arduous one of president. Nothing but the increasing pressure of the business thrown upon the council would have induced them to accept the resignation of these two gentlemen, who both felt that their absence from the board was the cause of much inconvenience to their colleagues.

The auditor's report has been open for the inspection of the members since the 15th April last.

There are now 2232 members of the society; 1634 residing in town, and 598 in the country.

PROMOTIONS & APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Charles Wood, of Runcorn, Cheshire, has been appointed a Commissioner to administer oaths in Chancery in England, and a Commissioner to administer oaths in the Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer.

Mr. Charles Edward Challinor, of Hanley, in the county of Stafford, solicitor, has been appointed by the Lord Chancellor a Commissioner to administer Oaths in Chancery in England; and by the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, a Perpetual Commissioner for taking the Acknowledgments of Deeds by Married Women.

LEGAL NEWS.

The Esmonde will case has at last been brought to a termination. Dr. Ball summed up for the defendants, abandoning the charges of undue influence and fraud. Mr. Macdonogh replied for the plaintiffs. Judge Lawson charged the jury.

confining their attention to the question of capacity at the time of the execution of the will. The jury, after twelve minutes' consideration, found a verdict establishing the will.

FRIENDLY SOCIETIES.—A Parliamentary return which has been issued shows that 463 friendly societies in England and Wales have deposited their rules with the registrar under the Act of 1855, which provides that if a friendly society established for any purpose which is not illegal, whose rules have not been certified by the registrar, shall deposit a copy of its rules with him, all disputes shall be decided in a manner directed by such rules without appeal; the rules to be enforced in the County Court, or if they contain no directions application may be made in the first instance to the County Court; and summary proceedings may be taken before justices against any member or other person withholding or misapplying the property of the society. Of the 463 societies more than two-thirds are in four counties—namely, 137 in Lancashire, 112 in Yorkshire, 40 in Middlesex, 26 in Nottinghamshire.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.—The wills of the under-mentioned have been proved in country registries—viz., George Hall Lawrence (Liverpool), under 140,000.; Henry Stanley Robert Pearce (Winchester), 80,000.; Edmund Robinson (York), 100,000.; and Edward Lloyd (York), 50,000.—The will of the Right Hon. Frances Dowager Countess of Albemarle, of South Audley-street was administered to in Her Majesty's Court of Probate in London, on the 4th ult., and the personal sworn under 30,000. Her ladyship was twice married, first, in 1816, to Augustus Frederick Keppel, fifth Earl of Albemarle, who died without issue in 1851; secondly, in 1861 (as third wife), to Lieut.-Col. the Hon. Peregrine Cust, son of the first Baron Brownlow, and brother of John, Earl Brownlow. Her ladyship died at Lyons, on 16th May last, having executed her will 14th July 1863, with two codicils, the last dated 13th Jan. 1867. The executors and trustees appointed are her husband, the Hon. Peregrine Cust, and her brother, Mr. George John Steer. Her ladyship was the daughter of Mr. Charles Steer, of Chichester, and possessed a power of appointment, under the will of her late uncle, William Steer, over a sum of 20,000. and other property, and in execution thereof appoints to her husband a sum of 5000., and also leaves him the interest arising from the remaining sum and from the other property, for his life; and upon his decease the same is to be divided among several of her relatives who are described in her will. The residue of her property, on the decease of her husband, she bequeaths to her said brother, Mr. George John Steer, absolutely.—The will of Mr. Peter Maze, of Portland-place, was proved under 350,000. personally. It bears date Nov. 19, 1853, with two codicils, 1855 and 1863. The executors appointed are his nephew, the Rev. Maze William Gregory, M.A., Mr. Philip William Skynne Miles, and Mr. Arthur John Knapp, solicitor, both of Bristol. The testator died May 14 last, aged 63. He bequeaths to his wife an immediate legacy of 1000., and an annuity of 400l.; to his sister, Emma Gordon, a legacy of 2000. and an annuity of 2000l.; and he has left legacies to his nephews, nieces, cousins, and others. He leaves a sum of 50,000. for the younger children of his daughter and only child Charlotte Emma Blackburn Maze (the testator requiring the surname of Maze to be used by the successor of his estates, and the family arms quartered with his). His real estates he had settled upon his daughter and her issue. To his son-in-law, William Ireland Blackburne Maze, he leaves, as a token of esteem and affection, a legacy of 4500.; the residue of his real and personal estate to be applied to augmentation of his freeholds. By his will he has left a contingent interest in 35,000. to several charitable institutions, and by his last codicil he has made absolute the following bequests to charitable institutions—viz., Bristol Infirmary, 10000.; General Hospital at Bristol, 1000.; Bristol Penitentiary, 5000.; Bristol Protestant Association, 2500.; London Female Aid Society, 2500. These institutions, together with the Seamen's Hospital at Bristol, are included in the contingent bequest. All legacies are to be paid free of duty. The will of Miss Jane Morris, late of 7, Connaught-place, Hyde Park, was proved in London under 140,000. The executors appointed are Mr. Henry Rücker, of Wandsworth, and Mr. James Morris, her brother. To each she leaves a legacy of 5000. The will is dated the 17th July 1866, and testatrix died on the 6th April last, aged seventy. She has made very many liberal bequests. She has left liberal legacies to her servants; to James Davis, a blind man, at Bath, she leaves 6s. a week for his life. She appoints her brother James Morris residuary legatee. There are the following charitable bequests:—To the schools at North Malvern, Morris Mill-lane, and Barnard's-green, 5000.; the dispensary at Great Malvern, 3000.; clothing club, Great Malvern, 500.; the Horticultural Society, Great Malvern, 500.

Labo and the Lawyers.

POOR Mr. BRIERLEY is now comfortably provided for at the Hanwell Asylum. Immediately on his committal for contempt by Mr. Serjeant Cox, the deputy assistant judge, the regular steps were taken to procure his safe custody, under the provisions of the Lunatic Act, which enacts that if any prisoner in custody on any conviction, &c., "or for any other than civil process," be considered to be insane, two justices shall call to their aid two medical men, and if satisfied that such prisoner is insane, shall certify the same to the Secretary of State, who shall thereupon order that he be sent to such asylum as he may name. In this instance the directions of the statute were strictly observed; two doctors certified to Mr. Brierley's insanity, and the certificate of the justices was sent to the Home Office. There an obstacle presented itself. The Home Secretary doubted whether a prisoner in contempt was within the act, in spite of the very plain words, "any other than civil process," and refused to make the order. Thereupon Mr. Serjeant Cox had no option but to order his discharge, and mischief might have come of it but for the promptitude of the parish authorities, who performed the duty which the Home Office should have done. On receipt of the order of discharge from the Judge, the governor of the gaol was bound to deliver him as a lunatic to some person who would take charge of him. No friend offered to do this, and, as a matter of course, he was taken to the union. There he was placed in the ward devoted to insane inmates until a place could be found for him at one of the county asylums. These are all full to repletion, and the poor old gentleman might have continued for a long time in the ward to which, of necessity, he had been consigned, but for the generous exertions of Sir ALEXANDER SPEARMAN, who, as one of the visiting justices of the Hanwell Asylum, secured for him a place in that establishment, where he will have all the comforts, and even luxuries, which his case requires. It was to bring about this end that the resolute course was adopted by the Judge at the sessions, and it is only to be regretted that the same firmness had not been exercised towards him long before, as his lunacy has been unquestionable for some three years past.

THE HABITUAL CRIMINALS ACT.

This important Act, hastily passed at the very close of the Session, is now in actual operation. Let us at once state that the clause against which the LAW TIMES so often and so earnestly protested, viz., that which made penal servitude compulsory on a third conviction, has been altered, and the discretion of the Judge remains untouched. Had it become law as it passed the Lords, the consequences would have been very serious. The indiscriminate severity of the law would have defeated itself, and unjust acquittals would have marked the reluctance of juries to recognise as a fact, what their experience would have told them to be untrue, that the number of convictions is a test of the calling of the convict. It is at the professional criminal that the new law was aimed, and the test of crime being a profession is not determined by previous convictions. We still hold the opinion that the best means of attaining the purposes of the law would be to make the fact that the prisoner is a professional criminal the subject of a distinct charge, to be tried after conviction for the particular crime, precisely as if it had been a distinct accusation, admitting the prisoner as a witness to show, if he can, that he has pursued some honest calling, and the jury to find, as a substantive charge, if he is or is not a professional criminal; and, if found so to be, the sentence to be extended to a very long term of penal servitude.

The Act is very short, but it is very stringent.

It gives power to the police to apprehend without warrant any convict having a ticket-of-leave whom they may have reason to believe to be getting a livelihood by dishonest means, and to bring him before justices; and if it shall appear to them that there is just ground for such belief, his licence is to be forfeited, and he is to be committed to serve out the remainder of his term of penal servitude.

A register is to be kept in London of all persons convicted of crime in England; and, to make it complete, all gaolers and chief officers of police throughout the kingdom are to make such returns as shall from time to time be required, and supply evidence of identity.

The third part of the Act is devoted to Habitual Criminals.

On a third conviction for any of the offences described in the schedule to the Act, that is to say, any felony not punishable with death, also uttering or counterfeiting base coin, obtaining by false pretences, conspiracy to defraud, or misdemeanor under sect. 58, of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, the convict shall, in addition to his punishment, unless otherwise declared by the court, be subject to the supervision of the police for seven years, or such less time as the court shall direct, exclusive of the time during which he is undergoing his punishment.

And the effect of being under the supervision of the police is thus defined:

He is to be guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction with imprisonment for not more than one year, if

1st. On being charged by a police officer with getting his livelihood by dishonest means, he fails to make it appear that he is not so living;

2nd. If found by any police officer in any place under such circumstances as to satisfy the magistrate that he was about to commit or aid in the commission of a crime, or waiting an opportunity to aid in such commission;

3rd. If found by any person in or upon any dwelling-house, or any building, yard, or premises, shop, warehouse, or other place of business, garden, orchard, pleasure ground, or nursery ground, without being able satisfactorily to account for being found there.

And persons charged with an offence under this section (8) may be taken into custody by any police officer without warrant, or under the third offence above defined may be taken into custody by the owner or occupier of the premises, or by any of his servants.

The 4th sect. of the Vagrant Act, which subjects any suspected person or reputed thief frequenting any street, highway, &c., with intent to commit a felony, to arrest and conviction as a rogue and a vagabond, has been nullified by difficulties as to proof of the intent to commit a felony. To remedy this, it is now enacted that, in proving such intent, it shall not be necessary to show that the person suspected was guilty of any particular act tending to show his purpose or intent, and he may be convicted if, from the circumstances of the case and from his known character, it appears to the magistrate that his intent was to commit a felony.

Every person keeping a lodging-house, beer-house, public-house, or place of public entertainment or resort, who knowingly harbours thieves or reputed thieves, or knowingly permits them to meet or assemble there, or allows the deposit of goods therein, having reasonable cause to believe them to be stolen, is to be liable to a penalty not exceeding 10*l.*, and may also be required to enter into recognisances to keep the peace for twelve months. But no person is to be imprisoned for more than three months for not finding sureties. Nor is the security required to be for more than 20*l.* His licence is to be forfeited on a first conviction, and on a second conviction he is to be disqualified for two years from receiving such a licence. Moreover, where two convictions have taken place within two years in respect of the same premises, whether the persons convicted were the same or not, the magistrate may direct that no licence be granted for such house for a time not exceeding one year.

The fourth part of the Act deals with the receivers of stolen goods.

It enacts that where any person previously convicted of any of the above described offences involving fraud and dishonesty is found in possession of stolen goods, evidence of such previous conviction shall be admissible as evidence of guilty knowledge, and in any proceedings proof may be given of his previous conviction before the evidence of the offence; but seven days' notice is to be given to the prisoner that such proof will be produced, and that he will be so presumed to have guilty knowledge, unless he proves the contrary.

And evidence may be given also that other goods stolen within twelve months were received by him for the purpose of proving guilty knowledge.

Any police officer, authorised by a chief officer of police, may enter any premises in search of stolen goods, and seize any property he may believe to have been stolen, as if he had a search warrant. Wherever any property is seized, the person on whose premises it is, unless previously charged with receiving, is to be summoned within three days before a justice to account for the possession of such property, and the justice shall make such order as to the disposal of the property as he may think fit.

The chief officer of police may authorise such search.

First, when the premises are, or within eighteen months have been, in the occupation of a person who has been convicted of receiving stolen property or of harbouring thieves.

Secondly, when the premises are at the time of search in the occupation of a person who has been convicted of any offence involving fraud or dishonesty, and punishable by penal servitude or imprisonment.

And it is not to be necessary to specify any particular property, but such authority may be given if there is reason to believe generally that such premises are being made the receptacle for stolen goods.

Part 5 empowers magistrates to punish with imprisonment for not exceeding six months an assault on any police or peace officer.

Sect. 13 gives to magistrates power to remand for offences under the Act.

The provisions of the Industrial Schools Act 1861 are to apply to all children under fourteen of women convicted for the second time when such children are under her care and control, and have no visible means of subsistence.

Any dealer in old metals, as defined in the Old Metal Dealers Act 1861, who shall personally, or by any servant or agent, purchase or bargain for lead, whether new or old, in any quantity at one time of less weight than one hundredweight, or copper in any quantity of less weight than 56*lbs.*, is to be liable to a penalty of 5*l.*

This Act is to be cited as "The Habitual Criminals Act 1869." It came into operation the 9th Aug.

REPRESENTATION OF WORKING MEN.

THE working men are vigorously prosecuting their laudable endeavours to be represented in Parliament by men of their own class. It is impossible that their wants and views can be rightly advocated by men of another class, who use them merely to subserve the purposes of their own ambition. But whence arises the difficulty in accomplishing their object? The working men are an overwhelming majority of the electors in all the metropolitan boroughs and in the great manufacturing towns, whose representation, therefore, is in their own hands, and they can return whom they please. At the next election they might easily secure thirty seats. And they ought to do so. Why should Sheffield, Birmingham, Manchester, Bradford, for instance, where three-fourths of the electors are working men, be represented by baronets, manufacturers, and merchants? Gentlemen of this class might surely look for seats elsewhere, instead of occupying the places that properly belong to the working men who compose those constituencies.

The appearance of thirty or forty intelligent mechanics in the House of Commons would be cordially welcomed by both sides. They would certainly be heard with respect on the many subjects on which they are peculiarly qualified to assist the work of legislation. The movement will have the cordial good wishes of all who prefer patriotism to party.

It has been stated that the main obstacle to the return of working men is the provision of a maintenance while performing their senatorial duties. A very small monthly subscription by their fellow workmen would supply their modest needs. But Sir C. Dilke has suggested a plan that well deserves consideration. It is that they shall be treated as are retiring ministers. On application to the Treasury, with an affidavit that they have not independent means of support, they shall be allowed a limited pension so long as they hold their seats. This would effect the object without subjecting the applicants to any humiliation.

THE NEW LAWS OF THE SESSION.

XVIII.—LAW OF EVIDENCE.

(32 & 33 Vict. c. 68.)

THE Act further extends the principle of admitting all kinds of witnesses, in the assumption that the court can better discover the truth by hearing what all persons have to say, than by excluding certain persons because of their interest in falsehood.

The parties in all cases in which adultery is the fact in issue are now admissible, so that husband, wife, and co-respondent can be examined.

So also the parties in actions for breach of promise of marriage are admissible.

Any person objecting to take an oath, or objected to as incompetent to take an oath, shall, if the judge is satisfied that the taking of such oath will have no binding effect on his conscience, make the following declaration:—

"I solemnly promise and declare that the evidence given by me to the court shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth."

And to make a false statement is to subject the party to the penalties of perjury.

It is to be cited as "The Evidence Further Amendment Act, 1869."

XIX.—VOLUNTEERS.

(32 & 33 Vict. c. 81.)

This is an Act to amend the Volunteer Act. It enacts that if any person, after demand, refuses to give up any arms, clothing, &c., the property of the public, or of any volunteer corps, or administrative regiment, issued to him as an officer or volunteer, any justice may, on reasonable grounds shown, issue a search warrant to a person named therein, who may search and seize such property, and the same penalty for detention may be inflicted as if no such seizure had been made.

The Act prescribes the manner in which the demand shall be made.

The 29th section of the Volunteer Act, as to wrongfully buying or selling of volunteer property, is extended to the pawning or receiving in pawn of such property.

The commanding officer may appear in any county or magistrate's court by any member of the staff or serjeant-major authorised by him in writing.

XX.—NEW PARISHES AND CHURCH BUILDING ACTS.

(32 & 33 Vict. c. 94.)

This Act amends the previous Acts on this subject.

It enacts that the powers of the New Parishes Acts are to apply at any time to new parishes for ecclesiastical purposes.

Where pews or sittings in any church or chapel are subject to any trust as to the grant or disposal of them, or are the private property of any estate whatsoever, the trustees may yield up their interest in the same with or without communication to the bishop of the diocese, or to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England, such surrender to be received and executed by the bishop, and thereupon all rights of ownership are to cease, and the pews are to be subject to the same law as ancient pews.

The same enactments are to apply to the surrender to the ecclesiastical commissioners of the freehold of any church or chapel; and upon such surrender all rights created by the Act for building the church are to cease.

Provision is made for the sites of churches pulled down.

The portions of a benefice held in severalty may be incorporated into one.

Provision is made for parishes where there is no church and no patron. Such a parish is to be deemed an extra-parochial place for the purposes of the Act.

A contract for the assignment of patronage under the Church Building and New Parishes Acts is not to be deemed simoniacal. Certain assignments already made are declared to be valid, and none of the penalties against simony are to attach to them.

XXI.—THE PHARMACY ACT.

(32 & 33 Vict. c. 187.)

This amends the Pharmacy Act of 1868 by enacting that nothing contained in the first fifteen sections of that Act shall affect any person who has been registered as a legally qualified medical practitioner before the passing of this Act, nor apply to any person who may hereafter be registered as a legally qualified practitioner, who shall have passed an examination in pharmacy; nor prevent any veterinary surgeon duly certificated from dispensing medicines for animals under his care.

The period for presenting certificates to the registrar is extended to 31st Dec. next.

Nothing in sect. 17 of the Act of last year is to apply to any medicine supplied by a duly qualified medical practitioner to his patients, provided it be distinctly labelled with the name and address of the seller, and the ingredients thereof entered with the name and address of the person to whom it is sold or delivered in a book to be kept by practitioners for that purpose.

THE LAND LAWS.

As we had anticipated, the land law question is not to be limited to Ireland. Already an agitation is being organised in England for the promotion of the same object in this country. A Land Law League is formed, and to its manifesto are affixed the signatures of a considerable number of gentlemen, some of whom have already appeared before the public as lecturers and orators, having for their theme the propriety of a redistribution of the land, or, as it was most tersely expressed by their very able organ, the Westminster Review, "the elimination of landlords and capitalists from the social organisation."

But the promoters of this revolution assert, and doubtless with all sincerity, that it is not their design nor desire to accomplish their end by any other than lawful means. They propose to work it out through the Legislature by changes in the law. They proclaim, in a series of distinct propositions, the nature of those changes, although they discreetly avoid anything approaching to a description of the specific laws they would substitute for the existing law. The creed is skilfully framed to enlist a variety of votaries. It allures the tenants by an intimation that they are to share, in some manner not defined, the interest in land now enjoyed by the owner exclusively. It attracts the working classes by the broad assertion that the land of a country is the inalienable property of the people of the country, and that it is their object to restore the land to its true owners, so that every working man may have a share of it if he pleases. To soothe the alarms which such a menace could not fail to kindle in the minds of all possessors of property, whatever their political creed, it is proposed to begin the process of distribution by confiscating the land of corporations, on the plea that corporations are only creatures of the State; that the State may at any time dissolve them and seize their possessions, merely making compensation for life interests: in fact, following precisely the fruitful example of the Irish Church. The Democratic spirit is enlisted by the gratification of its one absorbing passion—the desire of equality. It will undoubtedly do that for which every true Democrat pines—to pull down all above him. To the Radical politician it offers the gratification of annihilating, with the extinction of landlords and capitalists, the only remaining obstacles to the final establishment of the despotism of Democracy, to which he looks as to a millennium, though the history of the world shows it to be the most hateful, hideous, and intolerable of all tyrannies.

With a net so widely spread, the Land Law Reform League cannot fail to enlist a formidable array of followers. The practical work of agitation has been appropriately commenced on Clerkenwell-green, by a fitting colleague, Mr. BRADLAUGH, and at a time fitly chosen—Sunday morning. The form was that of a lecture. The substance of this discourse is thus reported by the newspapers:

A meeting of the working classes was held yesterday morning on Clerkenwell-green, under the auspices of the Holborn branch of the Reform League, for the purpose of hearing a lecture from Mr. C. Bradlaugh on "The Land and the People." There were about 1000 persons present, Mr. Osborne being in the chair. The lecturer said that to obtain life and happiness from the land was the right of all, and if there were any barrier in the way the attention of the people should be directed to its removal. The landowners of the country numbered but 30,000, and while in 1800 the land was taxed to the amount of 2,300,000*l.*, the rent received by the landed aristocracy being 27,500,000*l.*, in 1869 the rent received had increased to over 66,000,000*l.*, while the taxes paid had decreased to 1,750,000*l.*, in consequence of the redemption of the land tax. Referring to Mr. Mill's statement that the landed aristocracy had "grown rich while they slept," Mr. Bradlaugh said that it was not so, for the heads of families being provided for by the law of primogeniture and entail, the aristocracy had provided for the younger sons in other ways out of their country's earnings. The rights of property in land were different from those in possessions acquired by labour, and those who owned land now had no right to shut it up for pleasure when it would produce grain for the starving millions. He advocated reform in the land laws, firstly, because they had it in their power to reform them; secondly, because it was lawful; thirdly, because, whether it was lawful or not, they could do it, meaning thereby that the happiness of the nation was higher than mere legal right. A personal attack on the Prince of Wales and others followed, and the fact that England is a monarchical Government was denied, the Government being that of a landed aristocracy. He did not advocate the equal distribution of land, but he asked that the cultivator of the soil should share in the profits of his labour. A eulogium of Mr. Gladstone closed the lecture. A vote of thanks was given to the lecturer, and other speeches terminated the proceedings.

Having thus before us a tangible declaration of the designs of the new Land Law Reform Association of England, and a more carefully shrouded but not less unmistakable statement of the aspirations of the Land Law Reformers in Ireland, we shall be enabled to take each of their propositions in turn and see what there is in them that is desirable and practicable, and what must be viewed with distrust and alarm; what may be conceded, what must be resisted.

CLERKS OF ASSIZE.

We have stated that, during the continuance of the circuits, there is ample work for the clerk of assize, as well as for his officers, and we were assured that if the former did not attend himself, he must send a deputy. He has power to discharge the duties by deputy if he pleases, but this power is now very rarely exercised. Seeing, however, that the greater portion of the business of the circuit is no doubt discharged by the subordinate officers, and that the clerk of assize is under no obligation to attend personally, we took into consideration whether it was necessary for the due performance of the business to retain a highly salaried officer at the head of the establishment, or whether the duties could not be equally well performed by the engagement of an additional assistant of the same status, and receiving the same amount of pay as is now found sufficient to insure the services of competent person for the subordinate posts.

We are bound, however, to say that the opinions of those whom we consulted, not only of the clerks of assize who might naturally be opposed to any such proposition, but also of their officers, were adverse to the discontinuance of the superior office, and on full consideration, we are disposed to agree that such a change would not be desirable.

It seems necessary to have an officer in whom the superintendence and control of the whole administrative business of the assizes is vested, who shall be responsible for every department of work, to whom the public and the practitioners may look for the information required in the conduct of their cases, and to whom the judges may refer on points of practice; and these conditions appear to be best fulfilled by the retention of an officer in the position of the clerk of assize. This, however, leads us to the consideration whether for the proper discharge of the duties of that office it is, or is not, necessary that the clerk of assize, prior to his appointment, should have had a professional training. The opinions which we elicited from those who attended before us differed on this point; but the general concurrence of testimony appeared to lead to the conclusion that, even if it was not essential that a clerk of assize should have been a practising barrister or attorney before his appointment, he would be in a far better position to discharge the duties if he had possessed the advantages of a legal training than if he came quite new to the work, and had to rely upon his officers for information on every point of practice.

We are of opinion, therefore, that it would be expedient to prescribe that persons hereafter appointed to these offices should have had some degree of legal training, i.e., that he should be a barrister or certificated attorney of, say, three years' standing, or should have served prior to his appointment for a similar period in one of the subordinate offices above-mentioned on circuit, and that a Bill should be introduced in the House of Commons to effect this object.

Having thus stated it as our opinion that it will be desirable to retain the office of clerk of assize, we come to the consideration whether the remuneration now assigned to that office on the principal circuits is not more than is adequate to secure the services of competent and sufficiently trained officers. It was stated in the earlier part of this report that the circuits did not, on an average, last for more than from three to four months in a year, and probably, as a rule, they do not greatly exceed the first-named period. The clerk of assize is, therefore, not called upon to devote his entire time to the duties of his office for more than about a fourth of the year, and for the remaining nine months he is at liberty to pursue other avocations. It is true that some one must be in attendance at the office in London on every day in the year; and if the clerk of assize occupies chambers for his private business, which he also makes the circuit office, he can, if he chooses, be in constant attendance there himself, but he is under no obligation to do so, as the presence of one of his officers would be all that was necessary for the business. If a barrister, he is not precluded from private practice except on his own circuit; but as the assizes throughout England are held at the same period, it is probable that he may not often have the opportunity of holding briefs on another circuit. He can, however, take business at his own chambers, and this, we understand, is done by some clerks of assize. Again, though we have thought it our duty to recommend that some degree of professional knowledge should be required of persons hereafter appointed to these offices, it does not seem necessary that the standard of qualification should be placed at such a point as would be essential in the case of offices involving duties of a judicial character.

Having regard to these considerations, and especially advertent to the salaries paid to persons holding offices of greater importance, and upon whose time much larger demands are made than is the case with the clerks of assize; finding, moreover, as before stated, that the first proposal of the Treasury, when the settlement was made in 1856, was to fix the salary at 800*l.*, we consider that a salary of 1000*l.* per annum is more than is sufficient to secure the services of officers properly qualified to fill these posts. We have not overlooked the fact that out of his salary a clerk of assize is called upon to meet certain expenses. He has to find an office, and to defray the cost of stationery, copying, postages, &c. We understand that these expenses, as a rule, average about 100*l.* a year, though on the Midland Circuit they are higher, owing to the length of the assizes and number of the cases at York and Leeds. It was stated to us, however, that in the new courts of justice it is intended to provide offices for the clerks of assize, and if this be the case they will hereafter be relieved of the charge for the rent, which constitutes the largest portion of their expenses.

We have also reason to believe that there was no sufficient ground for assignment to the clerk of assize a higher sum per night for travelling and subsistence than to his officers. It does not appear that he is called upon to incur greater charges than they do; and they occasionally live together on circuit, and bear the expenses in equal proportions.

He is thus a gainer to the extent of about 12*s.*

a night; and this profit, we were informed, was regarded as having been intended to meet the expense of an office.

Whether this be so or not, we should recommend that the allowance should in future be the same to the clerk of assize and his officers.

We have now to recommend that the salaries of the clerks of assize on the Home, Western, Oxford, Midland, and Norfolk Circuits, should, as vacancies occur, be reduced to a sum not exceeding 800*l.* per annum. As regards the Northern Circuit, we have no hesitation in stating that if the duties of the clerk of assize remain, as at present, limited to the counties of Northumberland, Cumberland, and Westmoreland, a sum of 500*l.* per annum would, in our opinion, afford a sufficient remuneration. We do not see any reason for an alteration in the salaries of 500*l.* per annum each, now received by the clerks of assize on the two Welsh Circuits.

As the salary of the office of clerk of assize can now only be revised upon a vacancy, and with the sanction of the three chief judges, it will probably be thought fitting to notify to the chief judges the proposals herein contained for any observations they may think fit to offer before proceeding to legislate on the subject.

The foregoing proposals are based on the assumption that the circuits remain as they now are; but in the event of any addition to the number of counties now attached to a particular circuit under the powers conferred by the Act of 26 & 27 Vict. c. 122, involving a large increase of the duties of the clerk of assize, power may be reserved to the Treasury to assign such additional salary as may be reasonable and proper in consequence of such alteration.

We would further propose that the additional salary of 100*l.* a year, which the clerk of assize can now assign to one of his officers whom he may select to act as his deputy, should be discontinued on the death or resignation of the officers at present receiving these extra allowances. We are of opinion that the power thus placed in the hands of a clerk of assize to remunerate one of his officers more highly than the others, might be exercised with partiality, and that it has a tendency to diminish that responsibility which rightly belongs to his office, and to induce him to delegate to others duties properly devolving upon himself.

We would state, in conclusion, that although the County Palatine of Lancaster was not strictly embraced in the terms of the inquiry committed to us, we thought it desirable to request the attendance of the clerk of the Crown for that county, who performs duties analogous to those of a clerk of assize in the Crown Court, but who has a distinct jurisdiction from, and whose office is regulated by, a different statute from that applying to clerks of assize. The Act of 19 & 20 Vict. c. 118, extended and made applicable to this officer the powers conferred by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 126, for the payment of clerks of assize by salary in lieu of fees, and the Treasury, in the exercise of these powers, assigned to the present clerk of the Crown a salary of 989*l.* 15*s.*, being the full amount of his net yearly emoluments from fees prior to the passing of the Act. Out of this amount the clerk of the Crown continues to pay his officers, who are understood to be clerks employed in his private office, as he did before he was placed upon salary. Whenever a vacancy occurs in the office, it will be for the Treasury to re-consider the question of salary, and to decide whether a staff of officers, similar to those employed on other circuits, and paid out of public funds, should be assigned to the clerk of the Crown. If this be conceded, having regard to the fact that the duties of the clerk of the Crown are confined to the criminal court, and that he has no duties at Nisi Prius, we think that a salary less in amount than that which we have proposed for the clerks of assize, would be found sufficient for this officer.

ELECTION LAW.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

BRIbery — AGENCY — MIXED QUESTION OF LAW AND FACT — TREATING BY AGENT.—The language of sects. 2 and 3 of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 102, is sufficient to include every unfair attempt to influence by a gift or of any advantage. Under the 4th section it appears that the misconduct of the candidate in respect of treating can alone have the effect of treating; but by the 36th section the election is to be avoided whether the candidate himself or his agents be guilty of bribery, treating, or undue influence: Held, that although, reading the sections together, it would seem doubtful whether sect. 36 ought not to be limited to bribery, treating, or undue influence of a candidate, and bribery or undue influence (not treating) of his agent, it must be read literally, without reference to the difficulty arising out of the 4th section. The 4th section makes it treating where a candidate "corruptly, by himself, or by or with any other person," &c., provides refreshment, in order to be elected, or for the purpose of corrupt influence: The 23rd section says, "that the giving, or causing to be given, to any voter on the day of nomination or day of polling, on account of such voter having polled or being about to poll, any meat, drink, or entertainment by way of refreshment, or any money or ticket to enable such voter to obtain such refreshment, shall be deemed an illegal act." The 36th section enacts that any candidate guilty by himself or his agents, of bribery, treating, or undue influence, shall be incapable of being elected or sitting in Parliament for the particular place in the then Parliament: Held, that while it is clear that the 36th section does, by reference to the 4th, make corrupt treating by an agent a ground for holding the election to be void, it is equally clear that the 36th section does not so incorporate the 23rd section, that an act done by either the member or an agent, in violation of the 23rd section only, shall make that election void, unless that act also falls within the provisions of the 4th section. One G., a partisan of the respondent, gave a feast to his friends on the polling day, of which upwards of thirty voters partook. Some of those voters came to G.'s house by reason that they had heard there was eating and drinking going on there. G. was in a position to be able to give such a repast, and it did not appear that anyone went to the house before polling: Held, that this was not treating which affected the election. G. twice canvassed with the respondent, had a list of the voters in L. given him by an agent of the respondent, although obtained only by great pressure, and brought people up to the poll, but he had no canvass book: Held, that if G. had played false with respect to the L. voters, the above facts would have amounted to "evidence" of agency. It was alleged that certain voters were promised that if they came in and voted for the respondent they should have a dinner at G.'s: Held, that if that had been made out quite apart from the question of corrupt treating, there would have been a bribe within the 1st clause of the 2nd section by reason of G. offering valuable consideration to the voter in order to induce the voter to vote, or to refrain from voting, which, with reference to procuring food to be consumed in futuro would be bribery: (Eodm Election Petition, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 989. Willes, J.)

BRIDGWATER ELECTION COMMISSION.

The commissioners appointed by Her Majesty for the purpose of making inquiry into the existence of corrupt practices at the last election for the borough of Bridgwater, assembled on Monday, Aug. 23, and opened the inquiry. The commissioners are Mr. E. P. Price, Q. C., Mr. T. C. Anstey, and Mr. C. E. Coleridge.

The secretary having read Her Majesty's commission (during which everybody stood up), and the shorthand writers having been sworn,

The Chairman of the Commission, Mr. Price, Q. C., said they were assembled there under the commission of Her Majesty, which had just been read, and which had been issued in pursuance of the Act of the 32nd year of Her Majesty's reign, which directed that if the judge who tried an election petition in a borough should represent that there had been, or that he had reason to believe that there had been, corrupt practices prevalent in any such borough, such representation and report should have the same effect as a report of a committee on an election petition before the House of Commons. In consequence, therefore, of the report which had been made by the learned judge who had presided on the election petition there some months ago this commission had been issued. It would be seen by that Act that the powers and authority conferred on the commission were the same as had been conferred on similar commissions appointed under the former Act, the 15 & 16 Vict. By that Act powers were given to commissioners appointed, as he and his brother commissioners were, to inquire into the existence of such alleged corrupt practices, and their powers were not limited to an inquiry into corrupt practices prevailing at the last election only, but they were empowered to inquire, if they saw fit, into the practices that might have prevailed at any preceding election. They were empowered to summon all persons whom they might think could give any information on the matter, and they also had the power of punishing persons for contempt of court, by absenting themselves when required, or for refusing to give evidence, or to produce papers; and they had also power to call before them persons whom they thought could give any information whatever touching the matter. It might be as well to state that the learned judge who tried the petition a few months ago took occasion to animadvert on the absence of one or more persons who had been deeply implicated in corrupt practices which had actually then taken place. Now, although those persons succeeded in keeping away on that occasion, it might be as well for them to know that they would not frustrate in the same manner the object of this inquiry, because they (the commissioners) could report from time to time, and could adjourn the inquiry from time to time, so as to secure in the end the attendance of any person whom they thought it necessary that they should examine. There was one other matter which he might mention, which was that by the Act to which he had referred all persons who gave to their, the commissioners, satisfaction the best and fullest disclosure of all such matters as they were cognisant of, and were examined upon, would be entitled to receive an indemnity from all proceedings against them; but it would depend on the manner of the witness whether such certificate was granted. With these observations he proposed to adjourn the court until next day, and he hoped that throughout the inquiry, which might be a long one, proper respect to the court would be observed. If any disorderly proceedings took place, they might think it necessary to exercise the powers vested in them in regard to the persons offending. The learned commissioner then mentioned that, for the convenience of witnesses, a list of those to be examined each day would be posted on the doors of the hall. The court then adjourned.

JUDGES' CHAMBERS.

Friday, Aug. 20.

(Before CLEASBY, B.)

COLMAN v. SIR H. LACON AND WALPOLE.

The North Norfolk Election Petition.

This was an application on the part of the petitioner's solicitors, Messrs. Wyatt and Hopkins, that the 1000*l.* deposit for costs should be paid out to the respondents, the sitting members, Sir H. Lacon and Mr. Walpole.

CLEASBY, B., thought it was rather unusual that the petitioner should, as he saw by summons, ask that the money should be paid to the respondents. Rickards, who attended on the part of the petitioner, said the summons was in accordance with the Parliamentary Elections Act.

CLEASBY, B. asked for evidence as to the payment of costs.

Rickards produced an affidavit from the petitioner's solicitor in the country, that the witnesses who attended on the part of the petitioner had been paid.

His LORDSHIP could not understand that the evidence was sufficient.

Rickards said the master had taxed the costs to be paid by the petitioner to the respondents, and the application was that the money (1000*l.*), deposited in the Bank of England, should be paid to them. He did not ask for payment to the petitioner.

Brown, on the part of the sitting members, produced Master Gordon's allocatur, that the costs had been taxed at 1600*l.* and upwards.

CLEASBY, B. said the order would be on the allocatur, and the affidavit that the money be paid to the respondents or their solicitors.

Order accordingly.

BELL v. Sir W. P. GALLWEY.

The Thirsk Election.

In this case 500*l.* out of the deposit of 1000*l.* had been paid to the petitioner, and the remainder was kept until the costs of Sir W. Gallwey had been taxed.

A gentleman from the office of Messrs. Milne, for the petitioner, asked for the payment of the balance 500*l.*, and produced a receipt for 27*l.* for the costs of Sir W. Gallwey.

CLEASBY, B., supposed the seat was not contested.

It was stated that leave to withdraw the petition was granted, and the master had taxed the costs to Sir W. Gallwey at 77*l.*

His LORDSHIP required an affidavit, but on the consent given on the part of the solicitor for the sitting member an order was made for the payment of the 500*l.* as prayed by the summons.

ELECTION PETITION.—Mr. Justice Willes had before him the Taunton election petition. The court had held that the petition against Mr. H. James could not proceed, and as the petitioner had paid the costs the application was to vacate the recognisance given for 1000*l.* It was the first case under the Act, and Mr. Justice Willes made an order to cancel the recognisance.

COST OF ELECTION PETITIONS.—The vote asked for at the end of the session, in a supplementary estimate for Civil Services for the trial of election petitions, was 13,000*l.*; but the proportions for England, Scotland, and Ireland are difficult to comprehend. The sum for England and Wales, where thirty-six petitions have been tried, is 10,000*l.*; for one election petition tried in Scotland, 1000*l.*; and for Ireland, where there were eleven petition trials, 2000*l.* Law must be cheap by comparison in Ireland and very dear in Scotland, which last, perhaps, is not surprising while the government of Scotland is virtually in the hands of two lawyers of the Court of Session.

LABOUR REPRESENTATION LEAGUE.—The prospectus of the above organisation has been published. The executive consists of working men and representatives of trades societies, amongst whom are Messrs. Applegarth, Crenan, Holyoake, Howell, Odger, Potter, &c. The prospectus states that "the league will promote throughout the kingdom the registration of working men's votes, without reference to their political opinions or party bias; its aim being to organise fully the strength of the operative classes as an electoral power, so that when necessary it may be brought to bear with effect on any important political, social, or industrial question in the issue of which their interests are involved. Its principal duty will be to procure the return to Parliament of qualified working men; persons who, by character and ability, command the confidence of their class, and who are competent to deal satisfactorily with questions of general interest, as well as with those in which they are specially interested. Beyond this it will, when deemed necessary, recommend and support as candidates, from amongst other classes, such persons as have studied the great labour problem, and have proved themselves friendly to an equitable settlement of the many difficult points which it involves."

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

EQUITY—AGENT—PATENTEE.—A patentee agreed with a machine maker that the machine maker should make machines according to the patent and sell them, taking a certain sum upon each machine for himself, and paying to the patentee, as a royalty, the amount charged for the machines above that sum. Upon a bill filed by the patentee for accounts, and payment for the use of the patent: Held, that the plaintiff's remedy, if any, was by action at law. The patentee could not maintain a suit in equity for an account against the machine maker, as agent: (Moxon v. Bright, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 961. Ch.)

PRACTICE—TAKING BILL OFF THE FILE—WAST OF BONA FIDES.—A bill was filed by R., who, it appeared, was the husband of the laundress of H., formerly solicitor of a benefit building society, who were defendants; and a motion was made to take the bill off the file on the ground of want of bona fides, and that R. was evidently the creature of H.: Order made with costs: (Robson v. Dodds, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 968. V.C.M.)

NEW TRIAL—GROUNDS ON WHICH GRANTED.—The plaintiff being injured by the falling of a chain, owing to the alleged negligence of a person in the defendant's employ, brought an action against the defendant for the injuries sustained; but the person by whose alleged negligence the injury was caused was not called at the trial as a witness on behalf of either the plaintiff or defendant. The jury having, after considerable hesitation, found a verdict for the defendant; a rule nisi for a new trial was granted on an affidavit that this person's evidence was subsequently obtained and bore out the case of the plaintiff: Held, per Cockburn, C. J. and Hayes, J., that the rule for a new trial should be made absolute, as the witness not called being in the service of the defendant the plaintiff might under the circumstances of the case be excused from calling him. Per Mellor, and Lush, JJ.: That the rule for a new trial should be discharged, the fact of the absent witness being in the defendant's service not being a satisfactory explanation of his not having been called by the plaintiff: (King v. Kelk, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 974. Q. B.)

PLEADING—AWARD—ESTOPPEL—RES JUDICATA.—To a declaration for work done and materials supplied, the defendant pleaded, except as to 145l. 3s. 1d., parcel of the money claimed, that the plaintiff ought not to be admitted to allege that at the commencement of the suit any more than the said sum of 145l. 3s. 1d. was due by the defendant to the plaintiff, because that after the accruing of the causes of action in the declaration mentioned and before this suit, a dispute having arisen as to the amount due, an agreement was made to refer the question of how much was due to the award of an arbitrator, and to be bound by his award, and that the arbitrator, having heard all the evidence, awarded that the amount due from the defendant to the plaintiff in respect of the said causes of action was 145l. 3s. 1d. On a demurrer to this plea: Held, that the plea was good without any allegation of payment or tender of the amount awarded to be due, being pleaded only to the amount claimed in the declaration beyond the sum so awarded to be due: (Cummings v. Heard, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 975. Q. B.)

Proclamations of Outlawry.

Mr. Slowman, the officer, attended, and made proclamations in a number of actions for the "last time." The parties were severally called upon to surrender or they would be outlawed. No appearance was made. The following cases were "proclaimed" with the antique ceremony which has come down from Alfred the Great:—

T. E. G. Shaw, at the suit of Graham;
 H. Cook, at the suit of Webb;
 Hugh Francis Wilson, at the suit of Norman;
 John Alfred Waterhouse, at the suit of Hall;
 Horatio Simon Samuel, at the suit of Harding;
 George M. Hollings, at the suit of Garrold;
 C. Spencer, at the suit of Child;
 Thomas Allan, at the suit of Wood;
 Barrington Price, at the suit of Maple;
 Donald Edward Cameron, at the suit of Thomson;
 William Henry Ryves, at the suit of Reynolds;
 Charles Wordsworth, at the suit of Duffort;
 Richard Guinness Hill, at the suit of Andrews;
 Archibald Oliver Wood, at the suit of Smith;
 Wm. Mayor, at the suit of Reid;
 James Lamard, at the suit of Dinace;
 Henry Hawes Fox, at the suit of May.

Also the following defendants:—George Augustus Parker, Thomas Charles Gill, Stewart Paxon Marjoribanks, Henry Peter, Hope Johnston, and Lord George Osborne Townshend.

The next court was fixed for the 16th September.

"CONFIDENTIAL AND LEGAL ADVICE."—The following has been addressed to the Daily Telegraph:—"Sir,—Our attention has been called to an advertisement which has appeared in your columns headed 'Confidential and Legal Advice,' in which letters are to be addressed to C. and L. As there is no other firm of solicitors in Gray's-inn to whom those initials can apply, we beg to repudiate any connection with such advertisement or the advertiser, and must request your insertion of this letter, in the hope that the authors of the advertisement will select some other or use their own initials for the future.—Yours, &c., CREE and LAST, 13, Gray's-inn-square, London, W.C., Aug. 19."

A REPORTING MACHINE.—The Mechanics' Magazine reports that a "stenographic press" has been invented by M. Gensoul. The reporter sits at something like the keyboard of a pianoforte, and, by applying his fingers to the keys, prints the words as they drop from the lips of the speaker, syllable by syllable, on a strip of paper which rolls along underneath. When we say this we do not, of course, mean that the words are printed in letters. The keyboard appears to be divided into three parts of eight keys each. The left side, worked by the four fingers of the left hand, prints signs which represent initial consonants; the right, worked by the fingers of the right hand, prints final consonants; and the middle, acted on by the two thumbs, prints the medium vowels. We gather that something like a phonetic system of signs is employed. A few months' practice is said to enable any operator to follow the most fluent speaker with ease. We ought to say that M. Gensoul's system renders it unnecessary to transcribe the copy. Just as with the phonetic system, if legibly written, the compositor can set up the speech in common type from the printed strip furnished by the machine. As to the comparative ease of writing characters with a pen, and printing them in the way here described, we can give no opinion. What we should certainly miss, if the machine came into use in the galleries of our Houses of Parliament, would be the happy skill with which the reporters condense the speeches from their notes. We have very few speakers who could bear to be reported by a machine.

STATE PAPERS.—The documents which have been transferred to the Public Record Office by Government departments are allowed to be searched and examined by the public only down to certain periods fixed by the department from which the papers have been transmitted. These periods vary according to the nature of the papers. Sir T. Duffus Hardy, the deputy keeper of the public records, states in his report recently issued the dates to which these Government documents in the Public Record Office are open to the public by permission of the department from which they have been transferred:—The Treasury papers, to the end of the reign of Geo. III.; the Home Office papers, to the end of the reign of Geo. II.; the Foreign Office, to 1688; the Colonial Office, to the end of the reign of Geo. II., except the North American correspondence later than 1702; the War Office, to the end of the reign of Geo. III.; India Office, to 1853; Admiralty, at Whitehall, to the end of 1800; at Somerset House, a portion to 1760, from the department of the Accountant-General of the Navy; Audit Office, to the end of the reign of Geo. II. Thus modern secrets are kept.

THE BENCH AND THE BAR.

THE ANTICIPATED LEGAL CHANGES.—It is generally understood that the new Lord Justice, in the room of the late Lord Justice Selwyn, will not be appointed at present. Consequently, all speculations as to that learned judge's successor are premature. It is also again currently reported in the profession that Vice-Chancellor Sir John Stuart will resign before next Michaelmas Term.

Sir Edward Creasy, in far-off Ceylon, neither rests on the reputation of his "Fifteen Decisive Battles," nor gives up all his time to the performance of his judicial functions. He has leisure enough to enable him to write a novel, and Sir Edward has one now in progress. The subject of the story is "Greek" and "classical." The author will probably return to London about Christmas to see the work through the press.

REVISING BARRISTERS FOR THE METROPOLITAN DISTRICT.—The Lord Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench has just appointed the following gentlemen revising barristers for the metropolitan district for the present year:—Mr. James Newton Goren, of the Inner Temple, to revise the lists of voters for the county of Middlesex; Mr. Spencer Perceval, of Lincoln's Inn, to revise the lists of voters for the city of London; Mr. Francis James Bacon, of Lincoln's Inn, to revise the lists of voters for the city of Westminster, and the boroughs of Marylebone, Finsbury, and the Tower Hamlets; and Mr. Nassau John Senior, of Lincoln's Inn, to revise the lists of voters for the boroughs of Hackney and Chelsea.

In reference to the letter on "Natural Selection at the Bar," signed "Temple," which appeared in this paper on the 12th, Mr. J. A. McLeod, jun., writes:—"Your correspondent 'Temple' is not quite accurate in his figures or in his facts. I was called to the Bar in the latter part of 1863, and consequently was of about four and a half year's standing at the Bar when I was appointed about this time last year, instead of three years as stated in 'Temple's' list. Further on he writes, 'Mr. Baron Martin allotted to Mr. Francis one of the regular districts which had become vacant through the resignation of Mr. Deedes,' &c. This is not quite correct, as a portion of Mr. Deedes' work—the revision of the lists for the borough of New Shoreham—was done by me in accordance with the terms of my appointment. These are very trifling matters, but perhaps it is as well that they should be set right."—Pall-Mall Gazette.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT TO A POLICE MAGISTRATE.—On Thursday afternoon, about three o'clock, an accident happened to Mr. Maude, the sitting magistrate at the Woolwich Police-court, which might have been far more serious in its results than it was. Mr. Maude, according to his daily custom, had ridden over Blackheath and through Charlton on horseback from the Greenwich police-court, where he had a morning sitting, but just as he was in the act of turning out of Wellington-street, Woolwich, to go to the Woolwich police-court, his horse unfortunately stumbled over some rough flint stones laid down for the purpose of road repairing, and in rolling over Mr. Maude was thrown heavily upon the kerb. Several persons who saw the accident at once ran to the worthy gentleman's assistance, and did what they could for him, but it was a long time before he could rally. After some delay Mr. Maude felt himself sufficiently recovered to be removed to the court, and persisted in resuming his magisterial duties, although looking very ill and exhausted. There is no doubt the fall was a very bad one, and the shock to the system very great, but it is confidently hoped a little rest will soon restore the worthy gentleman to his usual health, which is generally very good.

JUDGES' PATRONAGE FOR JUDGES' SONS.—The following has been addressed to the Pall-Mall Gazette: "Sir,—It may be interesting to your readers to learn that Mr. Justice Hannen has practically indorsed the sentiments attributed to the Lord Chief Baron at Lewes, as to the desirability of revisorships being kept sacred for the sons of judges. The assistant revisors have just been appointed here, and Mr. Justice Hannen has displaced two gentlemen, one of eighteen years' standing, the other of seventeen, both appointed by the Chief Baron last year, to make room for two gentlemen, sons of judges—one, Mr. Bacon, of seven years' standing; the other, Mr. James Mellor, who has just attained the requisite three years, and who, moreover, has not acted as a revisor before. Of course if the revisorships are to be considered mere appendages of the judges' relatives, to the exclusion of men of standing and experience, there is an end of the matter. If, on the contrary, the best men are supposed to be selected, the present appointments (which have given great dissatisfaction on circuit) cannot for a moment be upheld. They come, besides, with very bad grace from Mr. Justice Hannen, who owes his own seat on the bench to the independence and magnanimity of the then Chancellor.

When the learned judge was a member of a certain advanced club, the present writer has more than once heard him denounce all promotion by favour or affection. Surely elevation must have somewhat shortened his memory, yet it is not so long since he was a member of—THE CENTURY. Assize Courts, Liverpool."

LORD PALMERSTON'S DIARY.—The main fact published by the Athenæum is quite true, although not to the extent which an evening contemporary would conduct sanguine readers to believe when it intimates that "Lord Palmerston's shrewd perception and genial humour were employed in this diary of his to analyse the characters of the great men with whom for threescore years he was almost in daily contact. Sir Henry Bulwer, who is said to be at work on a biography of the veteran statesman, will have materials at disposal unequalled since the days of Boswell." The diary is said to be full of interest, and distinguished by all the late Premier's finest characteristics. It commences when he was sixteen years of age, and it ends at the close of 1830, when he assumed office as Foreign Secretary. But at present no continuation of the diary has been found amongst his lordship's papers; and it has none of the attributes of a Boswellian record. It is replete with interest; modest, unaffected, and simple; without an atom of gall or ill nature, but short and condensed, as if the style had been formed after the model of the sententious brevity of Tacitus. It seems to have been originally designed in its present form chiefly to explain why he left the Tories and took office under the Whig Earl Grey; a change which, according to Lord Palmerston's chivalrous sense of honour, could only be justified by the fact that he was himself deserted by the party, when he was unseated for the University of Cambridge for voting in favour of Roman Catholic emancipation, although there had been an established compact, according to which that question was to have been an open one. The diary will explain that his long term of service as Secretary at War was not from the want of many overtures to accept higher offices. His lordship was importuned by Mr. Perceval, as Mr. Pitt's successor at Cambridge, to assume Mr. Pitt's office of Chancellor of the Exchequer. He twice declined the Governor-Generalship of India, and he was willing to have accepted, on Mr. Canning's solicitations, the Chancellorship of the Exchequer. But George IV. thought that he should find a more pliant Minister in Mr. Herries; and Mr. Canning was compelled, after a visit to Windsor, to make an awkward apology to Lord Palmerston by offering him a British peerage and the governorship of Jamaica? We understand that the story of this interview is full of the most racy humour. The viscount burst into an uncontrollable fit of laughter, which for a moment quite disconcerted Canning; until Lord Palmerston, with his ready good humour, relieved the premier by telling him that he saw that he had not the Chancellorship of the Exchequer at his disposal, but that as for himself he preferred the House of Commons to the niggers! Lord Palmerston's life spans the gulf that separates the era of Fox and Pitt from the times of Gladstone and Bright. But we fear no diary will be found to conduct Sir Henry Bulwer over the thirty-five years which separate the commencement of Earl Grey's Administration from the close of Lord Palmerston's.—Record.

MAGISTRATE AND PARISH LAWYER.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

FRIENDLY SOCIETY—JURISDICTION TO DETERMINE DISPUTES.—Sect. 5 of 21 & 22 Vict. c. 101, gives to justices of the peace jurisdiction to determine disputes arising between members or representatives of members of friendly societies established under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63, or any of the Acts thereby repealed, "where the rules of any such society shall direct disputes to be referred to justices." A dispute as to the payment of money having arisen between the representative of a member and the secretary of a friendly society, whose rules did not direct disputes to be referred to justices (there being a rule that such disputes should be finally decided by arbitrators appointed by the society), the secretary of the society was summoned before a magistrate to answer the complaint of having unlawfully refused to pay the money. The rules of the society were put in evidence, but the magistrate's attention was not called to the fact that the rules did not direct disputes to be referred to justices, and an order was made for the payment of the money. A rule nisi having been obtained for a certiorari to quash the magistrate's order on the ground of want of jurisdiction. Held, that the conduct of the appellant in not directing the magistrate's attention to the absence of any rule directing disputes to be referred to justices, disentitled him to the discretionary writ of certiorari; and the rule was discharged with costs: (Cordery v. Greaves, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 972. Q. B.)

POOR-RATE—METROPOLIS IMPROVEMENT ACTS—LANDS CLAUSES ACT—PROMOTERS.—Sect. 133 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act 1845 enacts that "if the promoters of the undertaking become possessed, by virtue of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, of any lands liable to be assessed to the poor-rate, they shall from time to time, until the works shall be completed and assessed to such poor-rate, be liable to make good the deficiency in the assessments for poor-rate, by reason of such lands having been taken or used for the purposes of the works, and such deficiency shall be computed according to the rental at which such lands, with any building thereon, were valued or rated at the time of the passing of such Act, and shall be paid on demand. The defendants, under their special Acts (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, and 26 & 27 Vict. c. 45) incorporating that section, took lands in the plaintiffs' parish, which at the time they were taken were liable to be assessed to the poor-rate, for the purpose of making a new street from Blackfriars to the Mansion House. The works authorised by the Act have not yet been completed and assessed to the poor-rate. The defendants are still in sole possession of the lands so taken, which are the sites of houses pulled down and demolished by them for the purpose of forming the said street, but have never derived any profit from the lands, and it is at present uncertain whether any or how much of the said lands would ultimately be so used as to be capable of beneficial occupation. Held, by the Court of Exchequer (Kelly, C.B. and Bramwell, Channell, and Cleasby, B.B.) approving and following the case in the Common Pleas of The Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens of the City of London v. The Churchwardens and Overseers of the parish of St. Andrew's, Holborn, 36 L. J. 95, M. C.; L. Rep. 2 C. P., 574; 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 665, without deciding whether or not sect. 133 would apply to works which, upon completion should be incapable of beneficial occupation, that it did apply to works in their present state, and that the defendants, therefore, were liable to pay the deficiency in the poor-rate assessment, caused by such taking, and that the plaintiff's action to recover the same was maintainable: (Wheeler v. The Metropolitan Board of Works, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 984. Ex.).

CRIMINAL LAW—PRACTICE—EVIDENCE—DEPOSITIONS.—If the witness gives evidence of facts of which no mention is made in his deposition as having been taken by the committing magistrate, the clerk to the magistrates may be called to prove that such facts were stated by the witness in his examination, but were not taken down by him (the clerk): R. v. Moore, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 987. Lush, J.)

MIDDLESEX SESSIONS.

Monday, Aug. 23.

The August adjourned general sessions of the peace for the county of Middlesex, were commenced this morning before Mr. Serjeant Cox (Deputy Assistant Judge), Mr. Joseph Payne (second court), Dr. Jervis, Mr. Adams Shepherd, Alderman Abbiss, &c.

The calendar contained the names of 143 prisoners for trial, which does not include about 20 others committed on Friday last. Only a small moiety of this number were indicted for misdemeanor, the remainder being charged with felony. The grand jury were sworn.

HABITUAL CRIMINALS ACT.

The Judge, addressing the grand jury, said it was not usual in that court to direct the attention of the grand jury to any changes in the law, but on the present occasion he found it to be his duty to do so. An Act had been passed, and was then in operation, which would very much affect the administration of justice, and the provisions of which could not be too widely understood. It is an Act called the "Habitual Criminals Act," for the more perfectly dealing with criminals. It provides that on a second conviction for any felony, or misdemeanor, or dishonesty, whatever may be the punishment, that in addition to any punishment awarded to the criminal by the judge, it should be deemed part of the sentence passed on him, unless otherwise declared by the court, that he was to be subject to the supervision of the police for seven years. Now the effect of that supervision was this: If, being subject to the supervision, a man was charged by a constable or police-officer with getting his livelihood by dishonest means, and he failed to make it appear to the magistrates that he was not getting his living in a dishonest way—or, secondly, if he was found by the police in any place under such circumstances as satisfied the magistrate that he was about to commit, or aid in the commission of any crime punishable on summary conviction; or that he was waiting for an opportunity to commit or aid in the commission of any such crime; or if he was found by any person in or upon any dwelling-house, building, yard, or premises, or in any shop, warehouse, counting-house, garden, orchard, &c., without being able to account to the satisfaction of the justice for his being found on such premises, the burden of the proof being thrown upon the prisoner, he was then to be subjected to imprisonment for a term not exceeding twelve months, with or without hard labour. Now these enactments would give a great hold upon the criminal population of the country. Further provision was made in this Act with respect to receivers of stolen goods. Hitherto, in these cases the burthen of proving guilty knowledge lay upon the prosecution, and the jury had no doubt seen, in the course of former cases, the exceeding difficulty which sometimes arose in respect of this proof, because it was one thing to prove a man was in possession of stolen goods, but it was another to show he had a guilty knowledge that the goods were stolen. Now the Act he referred to would partially meet this difficulty. It was provided that when any person had been previously convicted of receiving stolen goods, and should afterwards be charged with the like offence, or having them in his possession, the burthen of proof that he did not know they were stolen lay on the prisoner. In cases of previous conviction it would be enough for the prosecutor to prove the stolen goods were in possession of the prisoner, and it would be then for the prisoner to prove he did not know the goods were stolen. To enable this to be done, the course of proceeding previously observed upon these trials was reversed by the recent Act. Hitherto former convictions were concealed from the jury until after the trial, the object being to prevent the minds of the jury being prejudiced or influenced by the previous history of the prisoner. But under the new law, in the cases of receivers of stolen goods, the course would be to commence with proving former conviction, and therefore the jury would start with the knowledge in their minds that the prisoner had been previously convicted, and that knowledge would be presumptive proof that the prisoner knew the goods were stolen. It would then be for the prisoner to show that he did not know the goods in his possession were stolen. By this means the jury would be able to obtain an answer in these cases, which they could not previously come at. Further, then, this Act referred to dealings in old metals, provisions having been introduced prohibiting the purchase of lead, whether new or old, in any quantity at one time of less weight than 112lb., or of copper, old or new, in any quantity at one time of less weight than 50lb. A penalty of 5l. could be inflicted for these offences. These provisions would, he considered, have a very beneficial effect in checking dishonest dealing in old metals. He was happy to say there would be no case before them requiring particular direction from him. His Lordship then dismissed the grand jury to their duties.

POOR MR. BRIERLEY AGAIN.

In reference to Mr. Brierley, the learned Sergeant, addressing Mr. Cooper, the senior member of the Bar, who was present, said: "It is desirable that I should explain in a few words what has occurred to Mr. Brierley. He was committed upon the charge of contempt of court, with a view that, if insane, he should be properly and permanently provided for. The magistrates met and called before them physicians who certified under the Lunacy Act that he was insane. The certificate was sent to the Secretary of State, and the Lunacy Act directs that the Secretary of State, upon receipt of such a certificate, shall appoint some lunatic asylum in which the prisoner shall be confined. I do not know the precise circumstances, but I believe the Under Secretary of State entertained some doubt whether a prisoner committed for contempt was within the Act. I had then no option but to order his discharge at the close of the session. When a prisoner is not in a fit state to be discharged, it is the duty of the governor to deliver him to his friends, or if he has no friends, to some public officer. No friend of Mr. Brierley appeared to take care of him, and he was sent to the Clerkenwell Workhouse, where he was examined and declared to be lunatic. He was then placed in the lunatic ward, and although it was not very comfortable, he was properly fed and cared for. It happened that all the asylums were full, and there was reason to fear that a considerable time would elapse before he could be sent to one of them. Sir William Bodkin had suggested that something should be done by the Bar, but in the meantime one of the magistrates, Sir Alexander Sharman, had exerted himself with great pains to obtain the admission of Mr. Brierley into Hanwell. A vacancy had been made, rather than found, as a special favour, and he would now be treated in Hanwell Asylum as a first-class patient, enjoying all the comforts and many of the luxuries of life. He would be better cared for than he could possibly be by his friends, and the last days of his life would be passed with as much comfort as was consistent with his sad condition of mind. It would be infinitely better for him to remain in Hanwell than to be removed to a private asylum, and as the only effect of a subscription, to which, no doubt, many members of the Bar would be happy to subscribe, would be to cause that removal, it would not be advisable now to carry Sir Wm. Bodkin's views into effect. The Bar, no doubt, sympathised deeply with the unhappy condition of Mr. Brierley, and if his disease should not be cured they would, at all events, have the consolation of knowing that his grey hairs would go down to the grave in comfort. Mr. Cooper, who is senior and leading barrister at this court, expressed in a short speech his concurrence, on behalf of the members of the Bar, in the course which had been adopted. The subject then dropped.

THE NEW BEER ACT.

Sunday drinking—A caution.

At petty sessions held at Newnham, Gloucestershire, on Monday, before E. O. Jones, and Alfred Gould, Esqrs., Wm. Baylis and Hiram Baylis, of Plump-hill, East Dean, miners, were summoned under the 16th section of the New Beer Act, for drinking in a public-house at Plump-hill, on Sunday, the 25th ult., at a certain time when such house, by law, ought to be closed, the defendants not being servants or inmates of such house.

Whatley, of Mitcheldean, appeared for the defendants.—He said that while he approved of the wholesome provisions of the Act, he contended that there should be no conviction in this case, as the persons charged with drinking were in a shed belonging to and occupied with the house, and not in the house, and although the words "house and premises" were in the old Beer Act, the 16th section of the new Act referred to a "house" only, and it appeared to him that the Legislature intended only that persons should not keep their houses open.

The Bench, taking into consideration the remarks made by Mr. Whatley as to the defendants having unwittingly if at all committed the offence, decided not to go on with the case, but wished it to be distinctly understood that if any of the same nature of cases should be brought before them and proved they would surely convict, and said that they did not accept Mr. Whatley's interpretation of the section as to omission of the word "premises," but considered that the word "house" would include any building occupied with the curtilage.

The Court was full, and Mr. Carter, justices' clerk, read aloud, for the information of the people, the section bearing on the above case.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

CONTRIBUTORY — APPLICATION FOR SHARES WITHDRAWN BEFORE ALLOTMENT.—W. applied for 300 shares in a company which was being formed and consented to become a director of the company, an agreement having been previously entered into between him and the secretary of the company that W. should be paid 10s. per share if he would apply for 300 shares and give in his name as a director. Before any shares were allotted, W., through one of the directors, orally withdrew his application. Sixty shares were, nevertheless, allotted to him, and 300l., which he had paid as a deposit on the 300 shares, was appropriated in payment of the deposit and first call on the sixty shares. After a delay of five months, and a year and a half before the company was ordered to be wound-up, W. filed a bill to set aside the allotment: Held, first, that the agreement between W. and the secretary was null and void, and formed no consideration for W.'s agreeing to become a shareholder; secondly, that, as he had withdrawn his application before the shares were allotted, he was entitled to have his name removed from the list of contributories; thirdly, that he had not lost his right to relief by delay. The withdrawal of an application for shares may be made orally, and does not require to be in writing: (Re The Natal Investment Company (Limited), Wilson's case, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 962. M. R.)

RAILWAY — AGREEMENT FOR STATION.—A railway covenanted to use land as a "first-class station." The court granted an injunction to restrain it from allowing any ordinary or fast trains, not being mail or express, or special trains, to pass without stopping: (Hood v. The North-Eastern Railway, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 970. V.C. J.)

THE ALBERT INSURANCE COMPANY.—The following has been issued by some of the policyholders of the Albert Life Assurance Company:—"To the Shareholders, Policy Holders and Annuity-holders in the Albert Life Assurance Company.—Ladies and gentlemen,—A commercial disaster rarely equalled, but never surpassed, in the annals of assurance companies has befallen your company; at a time, too, when you were induced to believe, by the specious announcements daily issued by the executive, that your affairs were in a prosperous condition. It is useless at the present moment to refer to the causes which have produced this disaster, but we invite your attention to the rapidity with which it has been consummated. On Thursday last, the 12th instant, a private meeting of some of the shareholders was held at the company's offices, when, in the presence of your chairman and directors, the manager, Mr. Arthur Raymond Kirby, made an elaborate statement respecting the financial position of the company, and pointed out the extent of sacrifices to which you collectively and individually should submit. A legal gentleman subsequently addressed the meeting, and while deprecating the ruin as well as the delay and expense incidental to the action of the Court of Chancery in the administration of your affairs, submitted certain resolutions, which were adopted en masse, any discussion thereon being deprecated. We have been informed that a petition to wind up the company had been actually presented on the day previous to such meeting by a firm of solicitors, of which the legal gentlemen referred to is one. On Friday, the 13th inst., in the presence and with the approval of the company's solicitors, after a discussion before the chief clerk of the Vice-chancellor, which did not occupy five minutes, an order was made to appoint Messrs. Arthur Raymond Kirby and Samuel Lowell Price liquidators provisionally until the hearing of the petition on the 10th Sept. next. Notwithstanding all the revelations which have lately taken place respecting the management of joint-stock companies, it may excite observation, if not suspicion, that this hurried step was taken during the vacation immediately after the judges had left town, and when no public discussion could possibly have taken place in your interest, or for your protection. Your company, which is stated to have liabilities on policies and annuities exceeding 7,000,000l., with a premium income amounting to 300,000l. a year, is virtually remitted to the custody of its former manager. We are advised that the selection of Mr. Kirby is highly objectionable, inasmuch as his father or himself has had the chief control of the affairs of your company since its formation in the year 1838, the deed of settlement providing that, in addition to a substantial salary, the former should receive 5l. per cent. on the premium income of the company, out of which he should have amassed a colossal fortune. Apart from every other consideration, we are of opinion that the gentleman who has been to some extent instrumental in placing your company in its present disastrous condition should not be the person specially selected to manage your affairs at this momentous crisis. If you coincide in our opinions, and are prepared to co-operate in the appointment of an independent liquidator, who will devote himself solely to your interest, be good enough forthwith to signify your assent by letter, addressed as below, to the committee which is about being formed for the protection of your interests.—We remain, your obedient servants (signed by policy holders), P.S. It would be very desirable that all shareholders should attend in person at the meeting convened by the company for the 26th inst., and not entrust their proxies to any official or other person connected with the directors. London City Terminus Hotel, Cannon-street." The Insurance Record, in reference to this company, says: "It is very natural that those entirely in the dark should be ready to ask, 'Since this office, with every sign of outward prosperity about it, is shown to have been rotten at the core, and has thus suddenly collapsed, what guarantee have we that other offices, apparently sound and flourishing, are not in the same position?' Such a query is inevitable. The answer to it, fortunately, is very simple. As we have stated, this is the first great crash in the history of life assurance. There are but two instances on record in which the policy holders of a life office have been called upon to suffer loss, and these were in the case of young and small offices, in which the interests were not large. A century and a half yields only two very small failures involving loss to the policy holders! This in itself should help to sooth the fears of alarmists. But we have it in our power to go much further than this, and to state distinctly and explicitly that, with one or two exceptions only, the whole of the life offices of this country are in a thoroughly sound and solvent position." The Record adds, that the Albert, being founded in 1838, is not regulated by any of the Companies Acts, but is a sort of partnership in which the liability of the shareholders or co-partners is practically unlimited, although the shares are virtually limited to 20*l*. each, by a clause on the policies. The legality of this clause, however, is open to question, and is liable to be set aside by a court of equity. As there are but 3*l*. called up on each share, it matters little whether this limit of 20*l*. per share be set aside or not, seeing that a present liability of 17*l*. on each share, if fully called up, would cripple the resources of most of the shareholders, and leave many of them penniless."—An application was made on Monday to the chief clerk at Vice-Chancellor James's chambers, on behalf of a number of the policy-holders in the Albert Life Assurance Company, to appoint a representative of their body to attend the meetings, at various places in the country and on the Continent, which have been sanctioned by the judge. In support of the application, it was stated that the policy-holders objected to these meetings being held at the expense of the estate, and that if the meetings were held it was necessary the policy-holders should be represented, in order to protect their interests. It was further stated that the original manager of the company was the late Mr. Kirby, who became managing director, and was succeeded by his son, who now, with Mr. Price, had been appointed provisional liquidators. The provisional liquidators opposed the application, which it was, after some discussion, arranged should be adjourned for rehearing until after the summonses and petitions had been heard before the vacation judge, and the matter will probably come before the judge himself immediately after the petitions have been heard.

MARITIME LAW.

ADMIRALTY DISTRICT BILL.

The following circular relative to this Bill has been issued by the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce:

"Chamber of Commerce,
"Liverpool, 13th Aug. 1869.

"Dear Sir,—I am directed by the council to transmit herewith print of Bill for the establishment of district registries of the High Court of Admiralty in England which has been brought in by the members for this borough. The Bill was prepared by the Incorporated Law Society of Liverpool, and has been submitted for examination by this chamber, in conjunction with the Underwriters' Association. Two main objects are contemplated by the Bill, (1) the establishment of local registries, and (2) the regulation of the adjustment of general average. To the first of these objects the council principally desire to direct the attention of other commercial bodies, with a view to obtain their co-operation in securing its accomplishment. The preamble of the Bill states that more than one-half of the business of the Court of Admiralty in the year consists of suits arising in Liverpool, Newcastle, Sunderland, and North Shields, to which, if Hull and Deal be added, the proportion is considerably increased. The necessity of taking witnesses up to London, of attending to watch the conduct of the case, and other incidental sources of expense and inconvenience through the courts being held there, are not only in themselves a serious injury, but they give rise, it is believed, in many cases to miscarriage of justice, the effect of which is most pernicious to the interests of trade. A remedy for some of these inconveniences may, in some cases, be found in the Act conferring Admiralty jurisdiction on County Courts in minor causes; but this jurisdiction is, and ought to be, very limited, otherwise a conflict of decisions might arise detrimental to the character of our justice, and introducing confusion and uncertainty into our maritime law. The provisions of the Bill prepared by the Incorporated Law Society of Liverpool, will, the council believe, secure the advantages of speedy and effective decisions at the cheapest rate compatible with good law, at the same time that the not less important advantage is gained of insuring decisions which shall be uniform in their character, and carry with them full weight. The principle of the proposed measure has the further advantage of being in perfect accord with the reforms recommended in the report made by the judicature commission, and while adapted for being assimilated with them, the plans can be carried into practice without waiting for those reforms to be effected. It is proposed by the Bill that district registries shall be established in every port where such a course is justified by the amount of business, with power to take evidence and decide small cases, subject to appeal to the court. It is further proposed that an Admiralty Court shall be held periodically at two or three of the largest ports by a judge of the High Court, of Admiralty, or other judge of the Superior Courts.

"The following advantages, amongst others, would, it is conceived, accrue from this measure:—1. Prompt, inexpensive, and comparatively certain administration of justice. 2. Uniformity of decisions. 3. Decisions would carry full weight. 4. In cases arising in port, the judges would have a much clearer comprehension of the circumstances out of which it arose.

"In the case of foreign vessels these advantages would be largely increased. I am, in conclusion, to beg that the Bill may receive from your body careful and favourable consideration, and should they concur in opinion with the council of this Chamber with regard to it, that they will petition in its favour when reintroduced next session, requesting your member, at the same time, to give the Bill his best support. Meanwhile, the council will be glad to be favoured with any suggestions or amendment for the improvement of the Bill, with a view to their being submitted to the promoters for their consideration.—Yours faithfully, WILLIAM BLOOD, Secretary."

COUNTY COURTS.

JUDGES' CHAMBERS.

Wednesday, Aug. 18.

An application was made to-day, before Master Bennett, to remove a plaint from the Clerkenwell County Court into a Superior Court, in order to enforce the judgment by arrest or otherwise. The matter came before the master under the 19 & 20 Vict. relating to County Courts.

Master Bennett said the plaintiff wished a certiorari to enforce the judgment.

The solicitor said he did, and handed the sections of the Act to the master.

Master Bennett, after perusing the statute, expressed an opinion that he could grant the application. The judgment could be removed by certiorari, and all the incidents of a judgment could revive.

It was asked that under the provisions the costs of the removal would be added.

The Master assented to the usual costs.

Order accordingly.

A SCENE IN A COUNTY COURT.

County Court judges often have extraordinary cases before them, and not unfrequently have their patience sorely tried by the legal practitioners who appear in their courts. But it is not often that we read of such a scene as occurred at Stourbridge. A case had been entered, in which Mr. Prescott, solicitor, sought to recover 10*s*. 6*d*. from Mr. W. H. King, clerk to the magistrates at Stourbridge, in respect to some court fees. Mr. Prescott conducted his own case, and Mr. Motteram, a barrister, appeared for Mr. King. Mr. Prescott observed that Mr. King had put the fees in his pocket. The Birmingham Gazette tells the rest of the story:—

Motteram said Mr. Prescott was acting most irregularly in saying Mr. King had put fees into his pocket. He said Mr. King had not put fees into his pocket.

Prescott.—I say he has.

Motteram.—Don't contradict me, sir. Sit down and behave yourself properly.

Prescott.—I say he has put them into his pocket.

Motteram.—How can a man conduct himself in so unbecoming a manner in a court of justice? (To the judge.—If I can have the case tried as a question of law I am perfectly content you should try it; but I am sure your feelings would forbid you trying a case where you were a witness to the facts, and after being appealed to by Mr. Prescott.)

Prescott.—I have not appealed to your Honour.

Motteram.—I don't think Mr. Prescott knows what he does.

Prescott.—Oh, you know it will not do for you, Mr. Motteram, to come here and bluster, as it does in some courts.

Motteram.—You know, Prescott, you have had one or two thrashings lately, and you will have another if you don't conduct yourself properly.

Prescott.—If you will come out I will thrash you; I will d—d soon thrash you.

Motteram.—You conduct yourself as a madman, sir.

Prescott.—You are simply a fool. If I'm a madman, we know which is the greatest fool.

The JUDGE.—If you are going to use such language, Mr. Prescott, I shall have to interfere.

Prescott.—Well, sir, you may interfere. When a counsel talks about thrashing, I am perfectly justified. If he will come outside I will thrash him.

Motteram.—You little puppy!

Prescott.—Puppy! There is the itinerant barrister and fool.

The JUDGE.—If you will continue to use such language, I shall have to use very strong measures. You have both indulged in personalities. To Mr. Prescott (who was still speaking).—Will you be quiet, sir?

Prescott.—No; I shall not be quiet. You can commit at your peril.

The judge again requested Mr. Prescott to remain quiet, and he subsequently suggested there should be an adjournment on the understanding there should be no advantage taken of Mr. Prescott's inability to bring an action after the lapse of three months. Eventually the matter stood over for a time, and on its being again referred to, another long discussion ensued as to the trial of the case before Mr. Godson. Mr. Prescott wished it to be tried there, and Mr. Motteram objected on the ground he had stated before. The matter was at length set at rest by Mr. Godson declining to try the case, but without making an order for its adjournment.

ECCLIASTICAL LAW.

NOTES ON NEW DECISIONS.

SUSPENSION FROM A BENEFICE—CLERGY RESIDENCE ACT—CHURCH DISCIPLINE ACT.—

The plaintiff, a clergyman, whilst holding a benefice in the diocese of Manchester, was found guilty in the Divorce Court, upon his wife's petition, of adultery at a place out of the diocese. The Bishop of Manchester, after a report duly made in another diocese by a commission of inquiry under the Church Discipline Act 1840, investigated the charges made against the plaintiff in his absence after due notice, and sentenced him to suspension ad officio at a benefice for three years, and further, "that the said sentence shall remain in force until he (the plaintiff) shall produce a certificate to his satisfaction, signed by three neighbouring beneficed clergymen of the diocese of Manchester, of his good conduct during the said period of suspension, and that such suspension be not taken off until he shall produce such certificate." The plaintiff being ignorant of the terms of the sentence, resided out of the diocese during the first part of the three years of suspension, but when the period of the sentence expired he sent to the bishop certificates of good conduct covering the whole time, but as to the first part from clergymen of the diocese in which he had then lived; and at the end of three years from his coming into the Manchester diocese he sent a further certificate signed by three neighbouring beneficed clergymen of the diocese of Manchester of his good conduct during the last three years. Before the receipt of this further certificate the bishop had licensed the defendant to the benefice which the plaintiff had held, and relaxed the sequestrations which had been decreed upon the benefice, one before and the other after the passing of the said sentence. It was declared in the sentence that the plaintiff had been shown to be guilty of "adultery or fornication," and there was no mention in the recitals of some of the matters required to be performed by the Church Discipline Act: Held, upon a special case stated in an action to recover possession of the church and the income received by the defendant, that the plaintiff had not sufficiently complied with the sentence; that the relaxation of the sequestration did not alter the effect of the suspension; and that the suspension per se incapacitated the plaintiff from instituting an action or suit for the profits of the benefice until the sentence were altered or satisfied: Held also, that the decree was not invalid for uncertainty, it being immaterial whether the charge were of fornication or adultery for the purpose of the proceedings against the plaintiff; that the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Manchester sufficiently appeared; and that it was not necessary to show on the face of the sentence that the seven days' notice required by sect. 4 had been given to the party accused, nor that the inquiry was public, nor that the preliminary proceedings, with which the bishop was not concerned had been strictly observed: (Morris v. Ogden, 1 L. T. Rep. N. S. 978. C. P.)

PRESENTATIONS.—The Duke of St. Albans is requested the congregation to recommend gentleman for the living of Redbourne, stating that he feels if the laity generally had more voice in the selection of their ministers it would immensely strengthen their hands, and material increase the usefulness of the clergy of the Church of England. That his grace is actuated by the best possible motives is clear; but it is unhappy probable that the system of congregations choosing their own clergymen would materially increase not only the usefulness of the clergy, but also the number of needy divines who hover about the parishes of ailing incumbents, using superhuman exertions to ingratiate themselves with the flocks which are about to become shepherdless; their object being to obtain signatures to a round robin addressed to the patron of the living when a vacancy occurs, praying the appointment of the intriguer. These men meet with considerable success in obtaining Crown livings if they light upon a Premier who is new to his work. Experienced Premiers are aware of the trick, and invariably refuse applications for livings backed up by memorials from parishioners. We are not without fear that if the plan of the Duke of St. Albans were generally adopted, it would often, on the death of an incumbent, make the selection of his successor as demoralising a process as a borough election. Without some safeguards it would only throw temptation in the way of needy clergymen, and probably render them in due time as unscrupulous as members of Parliament.—Pall Mall Gazette.

CORRESPONDENCE OF THE PROFESSION.

[NOTE.—This department of the LAW TIMES being open to free discussion on all professional topics, the Editor is not responsible for any opinions or statements contained in it.

SIR,—I perceive in the annual report of the council of the Incorporated Law Society, as reported in the LAW TIMES of last week, p. 320, that the Admiralty Jurisdiction (County Courts) Bill was ultimately withdrawn. This seems an error; at all events, the provisions of that Bill so much deprecated by the council seem to have become law. The County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Amendment Act 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 51), which comes into operation on the 1st Sept. next, empowers (sect. 2, division 1) any County Court having Admiralty jurisdiction to try "any claim arising out of any agreement made in relation to the use or hire of any ship, or in relation to the carriage of goods in any ship, and also as to any claim in tort in respect of goods carried in any ship, provided the amount claimed does not exceed 300l." Surely this provision gives the County Court jurisdiction over all claims not exceeding the above amount, arising upon charter-parties and bills of lading, or in respect of freight, demurrage, or short delivery of or damage to cargo, cases, as the report observes belonging to "the most important and best class of business that at present occupies the attention of the common law courts." Still, thus far it is quite possible that the enactment would have practically remained a dead letter, and the only effect of it would have been to have given the judges of the Superior Courts a discretion as to costs in the above maritime causes, where 300l. or less was recovered. For under sect. 9 of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act 1868 (with which the Amendment Act is to be read as one). Where proceedings are taken in a Superior Court without a judge's order, which might have been taken in the County Court without agreement, and the plaintiff does not recover a sum exceeding the amount to which the jurisdiction of the County Court in the particular case is limited, the plaintiff is not entitled to costs, and is liable to be condemned in costs unless the judge of the Superior Court who tries the cause certifies. The choice of the court, therefore, in which the action was brought would have depended on the readiness with which the certificate was granted in the Superior Courts. But the matter does not stand here; for sect. 3 of the Amendment Act of this year enacts that the jurisdiction conferred by this Act and by the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act 1868 may be exercised either by proceedings in rem or proceedings in personam. So that under the Act of this session the County Court has conferred on it the power of arresting a vessel in the above-mentioned causes, a power which none of the Superior Courts of common law possess, and which the Admiralty Court possesses in only a part of the above causes, viz., in cases of breach of duty in respect of damage to cargo, and then only where the ship connected with the cargo has no owner or part owner domiciled in England or Wales. The Act conferring this extraordinary power passed, I believe, through both branches of the Legislature with hardly any discussion. It was passed by the Lords in the same form in which it was sent up from the Commons.

V. J. J.

REPORT WANTED.—Can any reader of the LAW TIMES refer me to the report of a case, which I have an impression I read some years since in the LAW TIMES, but cannot now trace, in which it was held, I believe, that the Inclosure Commissioners had no power under their Acts to confirm an allotment made by the value of a portion of tenantry lands, not being waste, for recreation ground. A SUBSCRIBER.

COUNTY COURT—COSTS.—Though in the scale of costs to be allowed for proceedings in the County Courts under the 33rd section of the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 108 mention is made of "Letter before action" and "Instructions to sue," yet, by analogy to the practice in the Superior Courts, the registrar should not allow these items on taxation between party and party, unless the letter was really written and the instructions given. With respect to "Attending to enter the plaint including particulars and copies," I think the charge should be allowed, though done by the plaintiff himself and not by his attorney. With respect to the allowance of witnesses, by Rule 130 the judge is to direct what number of witnesses are to be allowed on taxation of costs between party and party, and by Rule 132, the costs of witnesses may, in the discretion of the judge, be allowed, whether they have been examined or not. If, therefore, at the conclusion of the trial, the judge directed what witnesses should be allowed, the subsequent allowance by the registrar of other witnesses would, I conceive, form good ground for an application to the judge to review the taxation, under sect. 34 of the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 108. It will, however, be borne in mind that no appeal lies from the judge's order as to the review of a taxation: (See Shortt and Jones's C. C. Acts, p. 166.) ADVOCATE.

SIGNING DEPOSITIONS BY MAGISTRATES.—On many occasions during the last four or five years objections have been taken, with more or less success, at the Central Criminal Court and on circuit, to the reception as evidence of the depositions of deceased witnesses, on the ground that the committing magistrate had not signed the particular deposition, but had merely signed his name once at the end of the whole of the depositions in the case, although the latter practice is apparently that laid down by Jervis's Act (11 & 12 Vict. c. 42). In most of the cases alluded to the judges allowed the deposition to be read in evidence, expressing their intention to reserve the point for the decision of the Court of Criminal Appeal if it should become necessary by a verdict of guilty against the accused; but the result in each case was an acquittal, so that the point has not been definitively settled. At the recent Cornwall assizes, the same question was raised before Mr. Justice Lush in a case of John Searle, for uttering counterfeit coin, with a similar result. The point being very important to all persons connected with magisterial proceedings, and having been favoured by the Lord Chief Justice of England with his opinion upon the objection raised before him at the Central Criminal Court in July 1868, I beg to ask you to be good enough to insert in your columns the annexed copy of the correspondence with Sir Alex. Cockburn, by which you will observe that he concurred in my view of the statute, that depositions were admissible in evidence if signed by the justice at the end only. I may observe, further, that I have referred to the point in the recent (tenth) edition of my Magisterial Synopsis, vol. 2, p. 813, note 7; and that the practice at this court has since been adhered to; but, in order the better to identify every witness's deposition as belonging to a particular case and to prevent interpolation, we number each page, placing at the foot in its left hand corner the words "Name of Accused A. B." and require the witness to sign each page or sheet of paper of his deposition at the foot or end thereof if it occupies more than one page or sheet; and we also state in the jurat the number of pages of the whole of the depositions in this way, after the names of the witnesses—"contained in pages 1 to 10 both inclusive."—Yours faithfully, Mansion-house, Aug. 24. GEORGE C. OKE.

(COPY.)

My Lord,—I beg you to pardon the liberty I take in addressing your Lordship upon the case of Joseph Richards, tried before you, at the Central Criminal Court, on Thursday last, in which an objection was raised by counsel to the admissibility in evidence of the deposition of an absent witness, on the ground that it was not signed by Mr. Maude, the committing magistrate, he having signed the depositions only at the end. When I state that I know nothing of the case itself, but that the question raises a doubt upon an important point in the daily practice of this and other courts, and of the magistracy in general (by whom my published works are extensively used), I feel that your Lordship will excuse my intruding on you, especially as my object is not to solicit your Lordship's opinion (which I could not presume to ask in this way), but to point out to your Lordship (as the question may, in consequence of the publicity given to it in the newspapers, be raised again on circuit), rather than discuss it in the public journals, that your Lordship has been misled by counsel as to the provisions of the Act cited, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, which I venture to submit was, in the case referred to, strictly complied with.

There were other provisions of the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, bearing on the point, which were not brought to your Lordship's notice; indeed, it appears to me that the section cited, sect. 17, itself will, on careful perusal, bear out my view; for although it requires the depositions to be "respectively" signed by the witnesses, and, therefore, each witness must sign his own deposition, yet it only requires the depositions to be signed by the justice, omitting the word "respectively." If, however, this is doubtful, the section explains it, for it refers to a form M. in the schedule of forms to be used (which sect. 23 legalises), and that form contains a caption of a set of depositions, directions as to the signing by the witnesses, and, at the end, a jurat for the justice to sign once, and in which caption and jurat, respectively, the names of all the witnesses are to be mentioned.

The case referred to, of Reg. v. Osborne, 8 Car. & P. 113, was decided on the construction of 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 2 (long after repealed by sect. 34 of the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42), which required the justice to "subscribe all such examinations and informations," &c., which is advisedly different from the language of the present Act, and, therefore, is inapplicable to the question just raised.

I would further refer your Lordship to the 3rd vol. of the new edition of Russell on Crimes, pp. 485, 486, for some decisions on the provisions of the present Act which will corroborate my statement; and which I may state embody what I believe is the almost universal practice of magistrates, i.e., to sign the depositions at the end of them only; and I venture to think that your Lordship will, on a closer consideration than you were enabled to give the other day, be of opinion that this course is strictly in accordance with the Act which now regulates these proceedings.

I have the honour to be, &c.

GEORGE C. OKE,

Chief Clerk to the Lord Mayor.

To the Right Hon. Sir Alex. E. Cockburn, Bart.

(COPY, REPLY.)

Dear Sir,—

It occurs to me that I have never replied to your letter on the subject of what I said in the case of R. v. Richards, at the Central Criminal Court. Let me do so now. I think you are quite right in your view. Had my attention been called to the schedule (as it ought to have been), I should have expressed a different opinion. The difficulty I felt would have been removed. You may say so whenever the occasion arises.—I am, yours sincerely, A. E. COCKBURN.

Queries.

75. INHABITED HOUSE DUTY.—Will a dwelling-house, used as law offices, the rental of which is more than 20l., and in the back part of which a female resides to take charge thereof, be liable to inhabited house duty? (see 31 & 32 Vict. c. 14, s. 11.) The section does not specify "offices." E. H.

76. MORTGAGE.—A. being possessed of a freehold estate, executed a mortgage in favour of B. by way of demise for a 500 years' term. The mortgage contained a power of sale enabling B., without the consent of A., to sell and convey the fee simple in the mortgage premises, or for any less estate. I shall be obliged by some of your readers kindly giving me their opinion whether or not B. can exercise the power of sale, and alone convey the fee simple in the mortgage premises, or can he only sell and assign for the residue of the 500 years' term. LEX.

77. LANDLORD AND TENANT.—A. rented B. a house at an annual rent of 14l., payable quarterly. B. left the house, and subsequently gave three months notice to deliver up the premises, and at the expiration of the notice A. accepted the key, and the quarter's rent then due. A. being advised that the notice was illegal, took no steps to re-let the house, neither did he return the key. Can A. sue B. for rent, or for use and occupation subsequent to the termination of the three months notice and the delivery of the key? L. T.

78. ARTICLED CLERKS.—If an articulated clerk be described in the articles as "clerk and shorthand writer," and if a covenant be inserted "That the clerk shall act as a shorthand writer, at all times when required so to do, and transcribe the notes so taken by him," does such a covenant in any way tend to vitiate or endanger the articles? Reply and references will much oblige. N. O.

79. REPAIRING FENCES.—First, A. and B. have gardens adjoining each other, but divided by a wall belonging to A. A. is disposed to let down his wall, or, being down, refuses to rebuild it. Has B. any and what remedy against A. and quote authority. Secondly, is the owner of a close adjoining a common bound to fence against the commoners, or are the commoners bound to herd their cattle? Answers will oblige; quote authority. T.

80. EXECUTION.—A. obtained judgment against a company incorporated by Act of Parliament. The company had, however, leased their works or undertaking before the judgment was obtained. What remedy has A. Can he issue execution against the company's works which are leased? If not, by what means can he enforce his judgment? L. T.

(Q. 67.) ADULTERY.—This plea could not be sustained. It was through the wrong act of the defendant that the adultery (if committed at all) arose, and he cannot therefore take advantage of his own wrong by way of bar to a just demand. In the case stated an indictment would not lie for bigamy against the wife: (R. v. Cur persons, 35 L. J. 58; Treat. 31 J. P. 336; Reg. v. Lumley, 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 454.)

(Q. 68.) WITNESSES IN COUNTY COURT—COSTS.—By rule 130 the judge of the County Court is in each case to direct what number of witnesses are to be allowed on taxation of costs between party and party, and by the 132nd rule the costs of witnesses, whether they have been examined or not, may in the discretion of the judge be allowed. The costs, therefore, of such witnesses only as the judge shall direct can be recovered.

— The allowance of costs to witnesses lies almost wholly in the discretion of the judge. If a witness is material to a case his reasonable expenses are generally allowed, and it is not always essential that he should be examined. But, of course, expenses will be disallowed to those witnesses who are immaterial, and not to an unreasonable number of those who are material; as where more than are necessary are brought to prove a single fact. W. F.

(Q. 70.) MORTGAGE—FORECLOSURE.—In this query the facts should be stated more fully, no mention is made as to the wording of the covenant to pay; the amount of principal money should appear in such covenant as well as the time for payment. But in the absence of the same being so mentioned and upon the short facts stated, I am of opinion that A. is entitled to redeem on payment of 1833. and interest, and that B. could not claim the 2000. on a bill of foreclosure. It will be borne in mind that a decree of foreclosure cannot be obtained until the estate has become forfeited at law by breach of the covenant for payment of principal and interest, so that the answer to this query depends almost entirely upon the wording of such covenant: (Coote on Mortgages, 3rd edit. 497.) W. H. F.

— I think that, provided nothing were said in the operative part of the mortgage of the sum of 2000. or of any other additional charge than the 1833, the property might be redeemed by A. on payment of the 1833. For where there are two clauses in a deed repugnant to each other, the first shall be accepted and the other rejected. The operative part of a deed states what is done or intended to be done by the deed, and for what consideration, by whom, and to or in favour of whom; and, if the consideration is a pecuniary one, the payment of it is mentioned in this part: (Sm. Compen. E. & F. F., 3rd edit. pp. 613, 663.) W. F.

(Q. 71.) JUDGMENT-DEBTOR IN THE COUNTY COURT.—The case of Goldwin v. Stone, in the Court of Exchequer, noticed rather fully in the LAW TIMES of the 5th June last, p. 111, will, I think afford A. C. S. the information he requires. W. H. F.

(Q. 72.) ARTICLED CLERKS.—This is a matter resting, to a great degree, in the conscience of the principal. If he is satisfied to make an affidavit as to the faithful services of his clerk, when that clerk has for a great portion of his time been taking his pleasure on the continent or elsewhere, why I see no reason why his articles should be forfeited, especially if he turn out to be good for anything after such a way of spending his time. There is nothing mentioned in the Act 25 & 24 Vict. c. 127, as to leave of absence; but of course no principal would object to a reasonable vacation for his articled clerk, such as is generally allowed. W. F.

(Q. 74.) COPYHOLDS—LEASE OF.—I would refer U. V. to Shelford's Law of Copyholds, p. 152, et seq., where it is stated "The most important head under forfeiture by alienation is in respect of leases; for if a copyholder grant a lease of copyhold not warranted by the custom of the manor, and without having obtained the license of the lord, a forfeiture of the copyhold is incurred." And again, at p. 161, "Though a lease for several years without a license or special custom is clearly a cause of forfeiture, yet the estate of the copyholder continues until the lord actually enters, or otherwise takes advantage of it as such. It is not a forfeiture ipso facto. It is not an absolute and immediate distinction of the copyholder's interest, it is only an act for which the lord may enter if he pleases; but if he does not choose to take advantage of it, the tenant's estate remains as before, or if the lord dies without entering, his heir cannot enter." LAW LIBRARY.

An Historical Sketch of the French Bar, from its Origin to the Present Day. By ARCHIBALD YOUNG, Advocate. Edinburgh: Edmonston and Douglas.

MR. YOUNG is right. Very little indeed is known to English lawyers about the French Bar, its organisation, its government, its code of laws, or its history. The names of a few of its foremost orators are familiar to us; but rather, we suspect, in their political than in their professional capacities. Of the great advocates who have made the Bar of France illustrious how many are remembered with pride by their brethren in England? And of those whose names are familiar how many speeches have ever been read by the British law student.

The volume before us is only what it is called, "a sketch." Something less than 300 pages could do but imperfect justice to a theme that would supply good material for three or four volumes. But let us be thankful for so much as Mr. Young has supplied, and hope that he may be induced to expand his theme, and give to us a real history, and not the mere outline of a history.

The profession of advocates in France had its birth, with the practice of judicial combats, in the reign of Philip the Fair, in 1306. The earliest authentic recognition of them is a law of that monarch prescribing and regulating the duties of advocates in these combats:

The plaintiff was bound to bring his accusation before the judge personally, or by his advocate; and the advocate's mission was one of no slight danger, as, if he did not take care to speak in the name of his client, and make it clear that he acted solely under his express instructions and that he himself made no accusation, he was held to have offered the combat in his own person, and might be obliged to do battle with the opposite party. The extraordinary mixture of legal formalities, religious ceremonies, and barbarous superstitions which distinguished these judicial combats is highly curious, and strikingly illustrative of the spirit of the age in which they prevailed. The form of procedure, and of the speeches to be made by the advocates for the parties, will be found in Dubrueil. At the conclusion of his speech, the advocate for the appellant threw his client's glove into the centre of the court. The advocate of the other party brought forward all his reasons of defence to induce the rejection of the wager of battle; and then added, "And in case that the court should think that the statement made by the opposite party is sufficient to support the wager of battle, my client denies the facts set forth; on the contrary, he affirms that he who has caused these allegations to be made lies, and that he is ready to support this by himself or by his champion, and thereto pledges his gage." Then the client himself said to the court before giving his gage, "My Lords, I affirm that in all that my opponent has caused to be set forth and vouched against me by his advocate, accompanied by the delivery of his glove, he has lied like a rascal, saving the honour of the court; and I deny all that he has set forth and stated against me, and support my advocate in what he has said in my defence; and I maintain that, in the event of the court finding good grounds for the wager of battle, I shall, notwithstanding what the advocate of the opposite party has said to the contrary, defend myself like a good and loyal gentleman, as I claim to be, and as one who has done no wrong in the matter urged against me, and there lies my gage." After the defiance thus given and accepted, a regular minute of the proceedings was drawn up; the judge authorised the combat, and the parties pledged themselves to appear on the day appointed. On that day, the king of arms, after having summoned the combatants, beginning with the challenger, published the police regulations according to law. The combatants, by themselves or by their advocates, made protestation in terms also regulated by law; and the combat was preceded by oaths and religious ceremonies in presence of the advocates of the parties. Then the herald-at-arms gave the signal, the members of the court retired, leaving to each combatant a bottle of wine and a loaf. The advocates also retired; their ministry was over; and the combatants were left, in the words of the formulary, "to do each the best he shall be able." The victor gained his cause and left the lists with honour. The vanquished was handed over to the marshal, "to do justice on him according to the King's pleasure." Certainly the advocates of the nineteenth century have good cause to congratulate themselves on being exempted from the risks to which their predecessors were liable in the fourteenth. An ill-considered speech may now lose a cause; but then a careless word might compel an advocate to throw aside the robes of peace and to do battle for his client, not only metaphorically, but in the most literal sense of the words. Both clients and advocates have a danger the less; and though law still ruins many a man, it no longer authorises and assists him to cut the opposite party's throat, or put his own in peril.

By slow degrees the profession of advocate advanced in esteem and in power, as ever it must where law is administered by anything approaching to scientific rule. The establishments of Louis IX., published in 1270, are the first glimpses of a code of French law, made up from the customs of the country, and partly from the civil and canon law. The 14th chapter contains many regulations relating to advocates, some of which may be commended to our own Bar: One rule provides that all arguments calculated to injure the opposite party shall be spoken courteously, without abusive language, either as to fact or law; and another forbids the advocate to make any bargain with the party for whom he pleads for a share of the matter in litigation. A subsequent law of Philip the Bold, published in 1274, imposes upon advocates the obligation of swearing that they will only take charge of those causes which they believe to be just—the refusal to take the oath being punished with interdiction. The second and third articles of this law treat of the fees of advocates, which were to be proportioned to the importance of the cause and the skill of the pleader. The fee was never to exceed thirty livres tournois, equivalent to about 27l. of our money. Advocates were to swear that they would receive nothing above that sum, directly or indirectly, and they were liable to be declared infamous, and to be perpetually interdicted for any violation of this oath. A subsequent law of the same monarch seems to imply that, at that period, the pleadings were not public; for it provides that no persons except those necessary for the conduct of the cause shall enter the court. Nor does the Roman law then appear to have had much authority in France, as an article of the same law enacts that no advocate shall found upon the written law where the consuetudinary law exists. In 1291 Philip the Fair renewed the enactments of Philip the Bold, concerning the fees of advocates, and the prohibition to receive anything beyond the amount fixed by law, and added to it a recommendation to them to be exact in the discharge of their duties, and to avoid the use of abusive language in their pleadings.

Among the distinguished advocates of that reign was Philip de Beaumanoir, who wrote a book on legal customs, one chapter of which is entirely devoted to advocates:

Among other things, he recommends them to hear their adversaries' statements with calmness and patience, and to be brief in their pleadings. It appears that those convicted of false witness, excommunicated persons, and those in the habit of insulting the judges and parties in a suit, were, at this period, refused admission to the Bar. The judge also had the right of refusing to allow advocates whose incapacity was known to him to plead before him. He could likewise, on the application of parties, appoint them an advocate, whose fees should be regulated by usage, and who was bound to accept such an appointment, unless he could state satisfactory reasons for his refusal.

In 1327 (Feb. 13) more particular regulations were made by an express law with respect to the duties of members of the Bar:

They were obliged to make oath that they would diligently and faithfully discharge the duties of their office; that they would not knowingly take up unjust causes; that if they discovered any cause to be unjust after they had undertaken it, they would forthwith abandon it; that they would immediately intimate to the King's Court if anything in any of their causes affected His Majesty; that they would not knowingly introduce matters impertinent to the cause, or state or insist upon customs which they did not believe to be true; that they would to the utmost of their power endeavour to expedite their causes; that they would not seek delays or knavish subterfuges; that, however important the cause, they would not receive under any pretence more than thirty livres tournois as a fee for their services; that for a cause of average importance they would receive less, and for a cause of trifling moment much less, according to the character of the cause and the quality of the suitors.

PROMOTIONS & APPOINTMENTS

MR. JAMES MOTE, of No. 1, Walbrook, London, and Eltham House, Eltham, solicitor, has been appointed, by the Lord Chancellor, a London Commissioner to Administer Oaths in Chancery; and, by the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench, a London Commissioner to Administer Oaths in the Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer.

LEGAL OBITUARY.

H. L. TRAFFORD, ESQ.

The late Henry Leigh Trafford, Esq., stipendiary magistrate of the Salford hundred division of Lancashire, and of the Manchester petty sessions, who died at Corwen, North Wales, on the 31st ult., in the sixty-first year of his age, was the younger son of the late Trafford Leigh, Esq., of Oughtington (who assumed the surname of Trafford), by Hennella, daughter of the Rev. Sir Thomas Broughton, Bart., and was born in the year 1809. He was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple, in 1834, and had filled the office of stipendiary magistrate for twenty-four years. "Mr. Trafford," says a local paper, "was occasionally a little eccentric in his manner, but was an able magistrate, and his decisions could rarely be taken exception to. At Salford Borough Court his brother magistrates passed a vote expressing regret at his loss, and stating that the Bench desired to record its high sense of the impartiality and ability which he had uniformly displayed in the discharge of the important duties of his office. The resolution also expressed sympathy with Mrs. Trafford in her bereavement. At the county police court, Strangeways, a similar resolution was also recorded by the county magistrates."

The deceased gentleman married in 1842, Jane, daughter of the Rev. F. W. Hulme, rector of Mosey Hampton, co. Gloucester.

LEGAL NEWS.

The City Press, in its "Wills and Bequests," mentions that the will of Mr. Charles Baldwin, J.P., of 23, Sussex-gardens, Hyde Park, was proved in the London court by his daughter, Mrs. Mary Sophia Chenevix, the sole executrix. The testator died on the 18th Feb. last, in his ninety-fifth year. He was the senior member or father of the Stationers' Company, of which he had been twice master, and also one of the three treasurers. He was for fifty-five years engaged upon the newspaper press, and had spent a large fortune in connection with it, and was the original proprietor of the Standard. By his will, he directs that his freehold property shall be sold, and the produce thereof, together with his personal estate, which was sworn under 1000*l.*, shall be divided equally amongst his five daughters and his daughter-in-law, the widow of his late son, the Rev. Charles Frederick Baldwin, M.A. The testator was the father of fifteen children, five of whom died in infancy.—The will of Alexander William Rowland, of Hatton-garden, wholesale perfumer, proprietor of Rowland's Macassar oil, Kalydor, and Odonto, was proved under 35,000*l.* personalty. The testator died at his residence, Champion-hill, Lower Sydenham, on the 28th June last, aged sixty-one.

SINGULAR SCENE IN A COURT HOUSE.—The Ottawa Daily News says:—"The name of Judge Lafontaine has become familiar to Canadian lips. Here in the province of Ontario we are justly proud of the high standing of the judges of our Superior Court. Our neighbours, however, of the province of Quebec are not so highly favoured. Grave charges have been made against some of the judges of the superior and other high courts, and it is much to be feared that many of these charges are too well founded. Chief among the accused is his Honour Judge Lafontaine, of the district of Ottawa. His position in the community over which he judicially presides may be inferred from the scenes that usually characterise the sittings of his courts. These scenes usually go unreported, but as they are a scandal to British justice—of which we usually boast so much—it may not be out of place to shed a little daylight upon them. At the opening of the recent sessions of the Superior Court in Aylmer it was discovered that there were only thirty-three jurors present. The court was about to proceed with its ordinary business, when Mr. Peter Aylen pointed out that the law required that at least forty jurors should be in attendance at the sessions of the Superior Court. Judge Lafontaine was in a quandary. Afraid to proceed without the legal number, he temporised and explained, and argued and pleaded, but all to no purpose. Mr. Aylen was inexorable. And so the first day of the court was spent. On the morning of the second day the same difficulty appeared again. There were not enough petit jurors present to satisfy the demands of the law. Judge Lafontaine thought that Mr. Aylen's ambition would have been satisfied with his having kept the court a whole day without transacting business; but he was mistaken. Mr. Aylen sternly denounced the way in which justice was administered in the district of Ottawa, and appealed to the plain written text of the law against holding a court with less than forty jurors. It was of no use that Judge Lafontaine appealed in the interests of justice. His appeals fell upon deaf ears. The second day was spent as fruitlessly as the first. On the morning of the third day Judge Lafontaine took his seat upon the bench in triumphant humour. The forty petit jurors were present, and he felt that he could smile defiance at the foe. Mr. Aylen, robbed of a grievance, was mute. Just then the grand jury, which had been pushing through its business while the court was wrangling with Mr. Aylen, brought in its presentment. That unfortunate presentment renewed the strife. In their presentment the grand jurors expressed their regret that the judge's influence should be so much impaired by the charges that had been made against him both in and out of Parliament. Any other man in the judge's position would probably have regarded such an expression of sympathy as very equivocal indeed. But certain men gladly grip at straws, and the judge seemed to be overjoyed at the expression of sympathy. His joy, however, was of but short duration. Mr. Aylen sprang to his feet and protested against the presentment. He denounced it in unmeasured terms as misrepresenting the people of the district of Ottawa. The judge mildly protested, but his protests were unheeded. Warming with his indignation Mr. Aylen went further, and accused the officers of the court of mal-practice in paying silver to the jurors, and pocketing the discount. This brought others into the row, and for a while there was the mischief to pay. Mr. Aylen condemned the whole administration of justice in the district of Ottawa as a sink of iniquity fitly represented by his honour who sat upon the bench. Every now and then, with piping voice, the court would say: "Mr. Aylen, Mr. Aylen, you are interrupting the business of the court." But the warning note was unheeded as the voice of a child in a thunderstorm. And that storm lasted until noon of that third day. After that there was peace, and Mr. Justice Lafontaine, on the afternoon of the third day, began the business of the Superior Court of the district of Ottawa. The moral of all this is not far to seek. A judge who, with all the terrors of law at his disposal, cannot make himself respected in his own court, has no business to be a judge at all."

Law and the Lawyers.

At a meeting of his constituents at Plymouth the ATTORNEY-GENERAL (Sir Robert Collier) was warmly and deservedly complimented on the success of his Bankruptcy Bill. It is not generally known that this measure does not come into operation until the 1st Jan. next.

The excitement in Ireland on the Land Law question is rapidly growing. The Irish papers are full of it. All the old talk about compensation for improvements is abandoned, and it was never more than a pretence. The common demand is now for "fixity of tenure," which means, the giving of the land to the tenants, subject to the payment of a fixed rent. Is it proposed that the same law should be applied to the tenants of houses? And if not, why not?

In consequence of the schemes for confiscation now openly put forward by influential persons, not in Ireland only, but in England also, a plan is preparing for the formation of a "Property Protection League."

THE ALBERT INSURANCE OFFICE.

THERE can be no doubt what course prudence will counsel the policy-holders to pursue—they must close at once with the proposals of the liquidators. It is that or nothing, partial salvage or total loss. The wreck is complete. The usual flight of plunderers is hovering about, greedy for the blood that is to be sucked out of so huge a carcase, and only unanimity on the part of those who have something to lose can snatch the prey from the talons of the would-be liquidators. This is the first duty to which all other considerations must be postponed. Prevent, at any price, a formal winding-up. Assent to any reasonable terms for the reconstitution of the business. There is no substantial difficulty in this, if the policy holders will agree to act together for the common salvation. The sum of sacrifice at which a mutual assurance society would be formed out of the existing policies is simply a matter for actuarial calculation, and by no means difficult. It can be ascertained with perfect accuracy. The existing policies are sufficient to form such a society, even if no new business should ever come to it. The sacrifice would not exceed forty per cent. in some cases and ten per cent. in others. This is a serious loss, it is true; but then the alternative is between the loss of the half or of the whole, and a winding-up would leave nothing for the policy holders. But there is one part of the proposal that is wholly inadmissible—the payment of a price to the shareholders of the Albert. That the business is valueless is shown by the fact that the policies are to abate. Instead of going to the shareholders, they should be required to pay up 50 per cent. of their unpaid capital. If wound-up they must pay all.

The causes of the failure are inexplicable. The rates of insurance were not lower than those of other offices; if it has accepted bad lives the effect would not have been felt for many years to come. No amount of expenditure in the procuring of business could have produced so formidable a deficit. Commissions on new business, however large, will not explain it. There remains only the buying up of other offices at prices much beyond their true value, added to the expenses of negotiating the purchase and of compensations paid to the directors and officers of the absorbed companies. These might in the aggregate have shown a heavy loss, but scarcely so heavy as actually appears upon the balance sheet. This is a question on which it behoves both shareholders and policy holders to demand a strict investigation, for we know that persons most experienced in the business of life assurance are unable to account satisfactorily to themselves for the enormous deficit that has been declared.

PRACTICE UNDER THE HABITUAL CRIMINALS ACT.

THE first application of this statute having fallen to the lot of the Middlesex sessions, a few hints from the experiences of it there will be useful to all engaged in the administration of the criminal law.

We have noticed in another place the diversity of opinion on the construction of the clause relating to receivers of stolen goods.

The Act provides, that where a former conviction is proved, unless the court shall otherwise direct, it shall be deemed to be part of the sentence that the prisoner shall be subject to the supervision of the police for seven years, or for such less time as the court shall direct, and it is to be part of the record of the sentence. The Act does not require the formal pronouncing of this part of the sentence, unless the Judge should shorten the time of supervision. But Mr. Serjeant Cox deemed it desirable to make this new consequence of repetition of crime as widely known as possible to those whom it concerned, by publicly pronouncing it with the sentence in all cases. We commend this practice to Judges, Recorders, and Chairmen of Quarter Sessions as one that should be observed for the next two or three years, until the liability is brought clearly home to the thief mind.

A question early arose as to what proof of former conviction should be required for the purpose of procuring Police Supervision. It occurred repeatedly that the former conviction had not been charged in the indictment, and the question then was, how it should be proved; whether parol evidence of the fact was admissible, if it was necessary to prove it by production of the certificate of conviction, in the same manner as when charged in the indictment, or if the evidence of a witness present at the former trial would be such "proof" as the Act requires in order to subject the convict to the supervision consequent upon a second conviction.

Mr. Serjeant Cox was of opinion that the proof thus required must be strictly legal proof, and that, although it was a question for the Judge and not for the jury, he was bound to require the production of the certificate and evidence of identity. In one case the prisoner admitted his former conviction, and the Judge, with some hesitation, accepted it, coupled with proof of identity by the inspector present at the trial.

An extraordinary blunder in the side note of sect. 8 may mislead persons who look at the Act hastily, and do not take the trouble to read the text with care. This side note runs thus: "Persons twice guilty of felony and not punished with penal servitude, to be subject to the supervision of the police." From this it would appear that where a sentence of penal servitude is passed, the supervision of the police is not to follow. But not merely is no such provision contained in the text, but, if it had been there, it would have defeated the very object of the statute by giving impunity to the worst class of offenders. We direct attention to this extraordinary error, as not a few persons obtain such knowledge of Acts of Parliament as they possess by merely reading the side notes.

The disputed section (11) as to the burden of proof in the case of receivers against whom a previous conviction is proved requires that, to permit the proof of such former conviction to be given upon the trial, so as to throw upon the prisoner the burden of proof that the stolen property was honestly obtained, seven days' notice of the intention to do so must be given to the prisoner. This must be borne in mind by magistrates' clerks and solicitors undertaking such prosecutions, and they should be very careful to give the notice wherever the receiver has been formerly convicted.

READING OF THE HABITUAL
CRIMINALS ACT.

A CURIOUS conflict of opinion upon the true construction of this Act has appeared in the correspondence of the Times.

Mr. Serjeant Cox, the Deputy Assistant Judge of Middlesex, in his charge to the grand jury, describing to them the provisions of this new statute, which had then just come into operation, stated that, with respect to receivers, an important alteration in the law had been made in this, that whereas hitherto in all cases the proof of guilty knowledge was upon the prosecution the new Act provided that, in the case of persons previously convicted of any of the offences named in the schedule, or such as involved fraud or dishonesty, a previous conviction might be put in evidence as a part of the case for the prosecution, and then guilty knowledge would be implied, unless the prisoner proved that he came by the stolen goods honestly.

A letter in the Times questioned this reading of the Act by Mr. Serjeant Cox, and declared the opinion of the writer to be that the Legislature had made no such provision; that whatever might have been the intention, it had in fact done nothing more than permit proof to be given of a former conviction before, instead of after, the verdict upon the principal charge, and that the provision that seven days' notice should be given to the prisoner of the intention of the prosecution to put a former conviction in evidence, and that "he will be deemed to have known such goods to have been stolen until he has proved the contrary," was merely an error of the Legislature, caused by the committee having struck out the proposed enactment as to the presumption of guilty knowledge, without omitting also, as it should have done, the provision with respect to notice of it.

On the following day "A Stuff Gownsmen" came to the vindication of the Judge's interpretation of the Act, adopting entirely, and supporting his opinion with reasons, the construction that the provision for notice was a specific enactment that, when such notice was given, the receiver will be, as the statute phrases it, "deemed to have known such goods to have been stolen, until he has proved the contrary."

And such is certainly our reading of it. Having great confidence in the legal acumen of the writer of the letter expressing dissent from the view of it put forward by the Deputy Assistant Judge, we have again carefully considered the disputed section. This review of it has rather confirmed than shaken our previous impression. For practical purposes it is impossible to go back to the history of a statute and the manner of its amendment by the Legislature. It must be read as it is, and all that it contains must be construed to have some meaning, unless it is decidedly contradictory to something contained in the same statute. But here there is nothing in the nature of conflict. The words are very plain in their meaning. The notice required to be given to the defendant that the former conviction would be put in evidence against him, would have been unnecessary, if no other purpose were designed, for it would not need so long a time merely to disprove the fact of a former conviction.

The object of the notice is manifest. It is to give to the defendant ample opportunity to provide himself, if he can, with proof that the goods in his possession were obtained without guilty knowledge that they had been stolen. That notice says in effect, "You have been previously convicted, that conviction will be proved, and as the consequence of it, you must show that the stolen property you are charged with possessing was obtained by you in an honest manner, and to enable you to procure such proof, if you can, this seven days' notice is given to you." If the provision as to notice does not mean this, it has no meaning at all.

It would be yet a further improvement in the criminal law if, in all cases involving fraud and dishonesty, former convictions for the like kinds of offences were allowed to be put in evidence by the prosecution before verdict, instead of deferring it, as now, until after the verdict. The antecedents of a prisoner are a very material ingredient in the determination of his guilt or innocence under such circumstances.

LAND LAW REFORM.

THERE is no question that more properly belongs to the lawyers than this. Outside of the Profession, even among persons well-informed upon most subjects, there is a surprising amount of ignorance about Real Property Law and its practical operation in social economy. Statesmen and politicians, whose special duty it should be to master the great question upon which they will so soon be called to legislate, are scarcely better versed in it than the newspaper writers, who are compelled to scribble leading articles day by day upon a subject of which they have not a glimmering of knowledge, and in dealing with which they consequently fall into most ridiculous errors. The reason is that our Law of Real Property is not the production of closet philosophers, evolved from their inner consciousness, but a system originally formed for and fitted to a state of society now passed away, and since moulded, by slow degrees, to the new conditions of social organisation. Hence it is that only lawyers, who have been compelled to the study by the demands of their Profession, have thoroughly mastered a branch of the law, whose foundations must be looked for in history alone, and cannot be traced by reference to reason and abstract argument of right and wrong.

And for the same cause, only a practical lawyer is competent to deal with its reform. If, indeed, revolution is desired; if the existing system of Land Law is to be wholly swept away, and a scheme entirely new established upon its ruins, we admit that the statesman, the politician and the leading article writer would be the fittest persons to deal with it. The lawyers would be too much hampered by their memories of the past; their habits of thought too much moulded by the groove in which they have been made to run from their youth up, to be enabled to manufacture a code of Land Laws different altogether in principle from that which they have been accustomed to recognise.

But the cause of this incapacity to construct a new code, especially fits them for advising upon reasonable and practicable reforms in the present code. No other men can so well say, not only what reforms ought to be made, but what can be made, and how to make them, and as the question is pressing and the time short, they cannot better use the leisure of the autumn than in discussing it preparatory to that wider debate which the beginning of next year must witness in Parliament, with a view to immediate action.

We propose, with the assistance of our readers, to perform this duty, by publishing the contributions of the Lawyers to the controversy in these columns, where their opinions and suggestions upon most of the many mighty Law Reforms of the last twenty-five years were given to the world, and aided so materially in the improvements that have been accomplished.

To assist the investigation, it is desirable that all opinions of any weight should be fairly before us. It is necessary to know what we are fighting. Useful hints may be gleaned from antagonists, not only as to what to do, but as to what to avoid. Last week we recorded the extreme views of the most numerous, and not the least intellectual, class of agitators, and therefore we know something of their ultimate aims, knowledge always of the utmost importance in strategy. If you know that the object of a man who knocks at your door and asks permission to sleep in your hall is to get at your plate chest, you will turn the lock against him. You will not say, "I grant your request, because it is harmless, and will trust to Providence to protect me afterwards." Of course, the knowledge that something more is sought is not always a reason for refusing a seemingly modest demand of something in itself unobjectionable, but it is a reason for looking with greater caution upon the prior claims.

The manifesto of the Land Law League and the lecture of Mr. BRADLAUGH representing the Reform League are valuable as declarations of the ultimate designs for whose furtherance all lesser changes will be devised.

We omitted last week to give the specific terms of the declaration put forward by the new Land Law League, and we now supply the defect. We take them from the Star, the organ of the party:

The efforts of the association are to be directed to the following objects, viz.:—1. To promote the free transfer of land. 2. To secure the passing of Mr. Locke King's Real Estate Intestacy Bill. 3. To restrict within the narrowest limits the power of tying up land. 4. To preserve the rights of the public over commons, and generally over all lands which require an Act of Parliament to authorise their inclosure; and to oppose the practice of annexing such lands to the estates of the neighbouring landholders. 5. To promote measures by which, without unjust interference with private rights, facilities may be afforded to the workmen and tillers of the soil for acquiring an interest in the land of the country. 6. As one means to the object last proposed:—To endeavour to promote such an administration of landed property owned by public bodies or held for any public purposes as shall help to carry out such object." The association, it is expected, will have completed its organisation in the course of a few weeks, so as to be able to commence work in the autumn, and it is probable that early next year the association may be prepared with a land measure for Great Britain, which, in such case, will be introduced into Parliament as early as possible next session. Mr. Mill is chairman of the association, and on the provisional committee are the following names:—Mr. Edmond Beales, Sir John Bowring, LL.B., F.R.S., Mr. Jacob Bright, M.P., Sir C. W. Dilke, Bart., M.P., Mr. George Dixon, M.P., Professor Fawcett, M.P., Sir George Grey, K.C.B., Mr. Thomas Hare, Mr. Frederic Harrison, Sir Henry A. Hoare, Bart., M.P., Mr. George Howell, Mr. Thomas Hughes, M.P., Mr. Duncan McLaren, M.P., Mr. Edward Miall, M.P., Mr. Walter Morrison, M.P., Mr. P. H. Muntz, M.P., Mr. A. J. Mundella, M.P., Mr. Charles Neate, Mr. George Odger, Mr. George Potter, Mr. Thomas B. Potter, M.P., Rev. James E. Thorold Rogers, M.A., Mr. P. A. Taylor, M.P., Mr. Henry Vincent, and Mr. James White, M.P.

In a very different tone, but scarcely less extreme in their views, are the principles proclaimed by our very able and honest contemporary the Spectator, not moved by the mere democratic desire to pull down, but as having a distinct political creed, the reverse of that which has maintained its ascendancy for a generation, and against which there are growing symptoms of revolt—the principle of laissez faire, and the non-interference of Government and law. The Spectator contends that we are not governed enough; its arguments are in fact in favour of enlightened despotism. It has its own views of the land laws. It starts with the assumption that the owner of land has only a limited interest in it, which the State may justly control at its will, if only it makes compensation for any pecuniary loss entailed upon him. The application of this principle to the demand for "tenant right" is ingenious and novel. If a tenant, it contends, improves the land, the State may justly enforce as against the landlord, compensation for such improvements. But compensation may be either in money or in time. The State that may enforce payment in money may justly enforce, that payment in another form; and instead of compelling the landlord to pay the tenant 100*l.* in cash, may compel him to give one hundred pounds' worth of additional tenancy! This is startling doctrine, to say the least of it. Let us try it by a practical application. The Spectator produces a profit, say, of 1000*l.* per annum to its proprietor. It has employed the present editor at a salary of 500*l.* per annum. By his undoubted ability he increases the profits of the Spectator to 1500*l.* per annum. He has introduced by the tact of his ingenious head and industrious hands divers permanent improvements. According to the doctrines of the Spectator, the law might justly, and in justice should, compel the proprietor of the Spectator to compensate him in cash for such improvements, though there was no such contract, or compel the proprietor to retain him in the editorship for a term of ten years or more, however desirous he might be to change, or even though he might desire to be his own editor.

Or, to put it in another form, that will bring it home to every reader. Say that you, reader, are (as we hope you soon may be, if you are not) the owner of a house; that it is let on lease for twenty years to a grocer, who has established a business there, and without your consent first obtained made alterations, better to fit it for his business, which he calls improvements. The lease expires. As the law is you may now have possession; if you want to occupy you may take it, or you may require more or less rent, and in fact make a new bargain with him or any other person. But, as the Spectator desires the law to be, hereafter, it would deny to you this right; it would compel you to pay in cash for the alterations made in your house, without your sanction, which you did not want, and from which you derive no benefit; or, at the option, not of you, but of your tenant, he is to be entitled, in lieu of compensation in cash, to compensation in time by the compulsory continuance of his lease as a tenant right for another term of twenty years.

That we do not exaggerate the opinion of our contemporary will be seen by the following passage from a recent article on this subject:—

That there can be no such thing as absolute ownership in land, that no people, not even the English, has ever acknowledged it for one moment, that our whole legislation, fiscal and social, is based on a denial of such ownership is a thesis we are prepared to maintain against all comers, but it has extremely little to do with the matter in hand. If a contract can be kept, it must be kept, ultimate theories notwithstanding, and the State has contracted that, subject to one grand exception, landlords within its dominion shall possess full ownership of their lands. They are to have them and all they can get out of them, now and in future, and are to have the aid of the State in getting their right. There is no more doubt about that in our minds than there is doubt about the contract to pay interest on Consols, and the unwritten contract must be observed just as closely as the written one. But then the exception is part of the contract, and must be read with it, and the exception, as we understand it, is this: A landlord's land may be taken from him, for its value, whenever the interests of the whole community require, and without its value whenever the existence of the people is at stake. If it cannot be taken for its value when the community resolves to take it, then every Road Act, Railway Act, Embarrassed Estates Act, or Act punishing felony with forfeiture is an act of violent plunder. If it cannot be taken without compensation when lives are at stake, then the Poor Law sanctions a robbery, for under that law rates may so exceed the entire rental as to swallow the whole estate. That actually happens whenever rates rise above 20s. in the pound, as in a few parishes they have once risen in Ireland. If, then, the State deems it needful to take all the land in Ireland from the landlords for a full price, it may be acting wisely or foolishly, but it is acting within the contract by which it has bound itself to abide. If, for example, to put the most extreme case we can think of, it bought all Ireland as one embarrassed estate, divided it among the people, and recouped itself by a land tax on the Indian principle, it would be acting within its moral right. The political importance which the landlord thinks he would in that case lose, is not a property at all, but a theft from the voters, to whom, and not to him, it by law belongs, and over whose votes he has no right whatever, beyond the right he would have if he stood among them without land. A fortiori, if the State takes part of his land—for that is what every tenant-right measure must amount to, whether the tenant-right is perpetual or limited to a term of years—and gives compensation for the same, which compensation, provided it is honest and real, need not of necessity be a cash payment, it is within its contract. The landlord loses nothing whatever that it is beyond the province of just legislation to take away. The social deference, for example, which landlords value so highly, is paid to them either as individuals for refinement or what not, or as men of wealth, or as men of political power, or as men capable of injuring their neighbours when they please. In the first two capacities, they would retain it at least as fully as at present; in the last, they have no right to it which the State is bound to respect, indeed, no right at all. It follows from that principle that any land law whatsoever which Parliament thinks it wise to pass is just, provided that sufficient necessity is proved, and provided that it votes full compensation for any profits in the shape of money which it may take away. Further, there is one instance in which the State may, without injustice, violate a property-right, even where it has apparently contracted to respect it, and that is whenever that right involves unmistakable wrong, say, theft from some other person whose rights it has also pledged itself to maintain. That case arises, by the consent of all just men, in respect to the claim for improvements made on land. To refuse compensation for such improvements, unless the original lease contained a distinct covenant that none should be made, is to evade a debt which the State may rightfully compel the debtor to pay. And we are unable to see why such payment should not be made in time instead of money. For example, if Pat Byrne has spent a hundred pounds upon a farm, which hundred pounds his landlord owes him, should he be evicted, we do not see why the State should not give him, instead of a hundred pounds, as many years' additional tenure at the old rent as would be equivalent to a hundred pounds' worth of the right to raise it. We rather think there is a principle there which, in its working, would establish a very effectual tenant-right, and create an interest in making improvements besides, but that it is not our present object to discuss. All we desire to ask just now is why the exchange of time for money, when the money is due, and the time has a money value, is more unjust than declaring a bank-note a legal tender, that is, why it is unjust to take any land for its value, and right to exchange time for money, the State would be possessed of sufficient moral power to effect changes very much wider than an English premier is under any circumstances likely to propose.

REPRESENTATION OF LABOUR.

At the Trades Union Congress, held last week at Birmingham, this question was again mooted, and an unanimous feeling expressed that the working class should be directly represented in the House of Commons by working men, rather than by men of the middle and upper classes, who are necessarily ignorant of their real wants and wishes. The following interesting discussion is reported:—

Mr. Walton (Bacon) read a paper on the "Direct Representation of Labour in Parliament," in which he contended that the working-classes were not represented as they ought to be in the House of Commons. The session of the reformed Parliament was allowed to pass without a single member having suggested an inquiry into the cause of more than a million and a half of working men in England being in a state of compulsory idleness. That he viewed as an unmistakable proof of the want of sympathy in the House for the wants of the working-classes. Skilled workmen, he said, were flying from poverty and starvation at the rate often during the present year of a thousand a day from Liverpool alone; yet no inquiry had been instituted into the cause of their removal, nor any remedy suggested to alleviate the condition of those who remained behind. The condition of the working-men had been neglected, and not a single working-man had been permitted to enter Parliament in the labour interest. What, therefore, should they do? They should unite, form a working man's party, and at all future elections where two Liberal candidates had to be elected, they should insist upon nominating one, allowing the middle-class to choose the other. Should the middle-class party refuse to concur in this arrangement, the working-men would support their man by plumping for him. They should in future disregard the delusive cry of "Don't divide the Liberal interest," but, having one object in view, nothing should divert them from its accomplishment.

Mr. Howell (London) read by Mr. R. Marsden Latham upon the same subject. "Coming events (the writer said) cast their shadows before," and it was generally believed that what were known as "working men's questions" would in the next and future sessions of Parliament engage the attention of the Legislature. If it was borne in mind that of the entire population of the United Kingdom more than 20,000,000 belonged to the working class, it would be obvious that the moral and material progress of so considerable a majority of the people was liable to be affected by the character of the legislation with regard to those questions. He was therefore of opinion that in comparison with the subject of securing the direct representation of labour in Parliament, all other popular topics of discussion were of secondary importance, especially considering the fact that the earnings of the working classes exceeded 400,000,000l. annually. The present Parliament was almost exclusively composed of members representing the nobility and landed gentry, of officers in the army and navy, of lawyers, manufacturers, railway directors, and other persons representing the interests of capital and commerce; but no members had yet been returned who directly represented the great class which he ventured to say did the work of the nation. It was a matter of regret that the candidature of workmen representatives should have hitherto been unsuccessful, and it was in view of that fact that a national organisation termed "The Labour Representation League" had been established. The writer hoped that the members of the congress would actively and earnestly support the association, and assist in returning working representatives to Parliament.

Mr. HARRY (London) submitted a paper, or rather an address, to the Chelsea Electoral Association, which, being in print, and circulated among the delegates, was taken as read. It urged the formation of a great industrial party to secure the return of representatives of labour, with the view of securing the "nationalisation of the land by purchasing it of its possessors," and a national paper currency based upon the productive wealth of the nation, combined with a national system of credit and exchange.

On the motion of Mr. Odger, seconded by Mr. Cremer, the following resolution was passed:—

"That this Congress indorses the papers of Messrs. Walton, Latham, and Harry, as containing sentiments thoroughly in accordance with the wants and wishes of working men, and this Congress recommends its constituents and working men generally to support the Labour Representation League, just established in London, to obtain the return of actual working men to the House of Commons."

A JUDGE ON JURIES.

The evidence given by Baron Bramwell before the Law Courts (Scotland) Commission as to trial by jury is worth attention. In answer to Mr.

Shand's question, "In the majority of cases do you think that a trial before a jury or before a Judge is to be preferred?" Baron Bramwell answers:—"That is a very large question indeed. I think if I wanted the truth to be ascertained in the particular case, I should prefer an intelligent man who had been in the habit of exercising his faculties all his life on such questions to twelve men who had not been in the habit of exercising theirs, who might not be so intelligent men, who certainly have not been in the habit of exercising them together, farmers and others, who are very much fatigued from being taken and shut up in a hot court. If I wanted nothing but the truth in a particular case, I should prefer the verdict of the Judge; and it seems to me impossible to doubt he is the preferable tribunal. When I was first made a Judge myself, I was very strongly in favour of trials being before a Judge; but I am afraid that the jury is a crutch that I have been leaning on for so long a time that I have now got used to it, and I don't think I am as good a judge of the question now as I was thirteen years ago. Moreover there is no doubt that trial by jury popularises the law. I remember a case before the House of Lords in which I was contending for a particular construction of a covenant, and my brother Willes was contending the other way, and the question put to me was, How was it possible that people should enter into so stringent a covenant as you contend for? I said, 'My Lords, they will trust to that true court of equity a jury, which, disregarding men's bargains and the law, will decide what is right in spite of all you say to them.' And it is so; I don't say that they do not regard the law, for I believe they do; but every man must feel that, although he may have the law on his side, he is in some peril if the justice of the case is not with him also. I think it would be difficult to discriminate between civil and criminal cases; and in criminal cases I think it is better that the Judge should not be the man to find the prisoner guilty. But it is a very large question; and I feel some hesitation in offering an opinion about it."

In answer to a further question, "You have had no cause from your great experience to be dissatisfied with jury trials?" the learned Baron answers:—"No. There are cases in which juries go wrong; for instance, in an action against a railway company, they generally go wrong there; in actions for discharging a servant they generally go wrong; in actions by a tradesman against a gentleman in questions whether articles supplied were necessary to an infant or wife, they are sure to go wrong; in actions as to malicious prosecution, they are always wrong. You may say to them—'The question is not whether the man is innocent, but whether there is absence of reasonable cause and malice,' but in vain. They find for the innocent man."

In answer to Mr. Justice Willes's question—"And cases of running down?" Baron Bramwell replies:—"There they generally find for the plaintiff, so much so, that a man who has run down another, if he is wise, will bring the action first. I remember one case particularly, in which the question was whether the man that recovered was free from blame, and there was blame in the other; and each recovered in the action where he was plaintiff."

This last answer of Baron Bramwell's shows the value of trial by jury, and accounts for the fact that anyone whose carriage is smashed by the wilful driving of somebody else's carriage always has to pay a lawyer's bill besides his coachmaker's bill, and generally heavy damages for the privilege of having his life imperilled and his property destroyed.

JUDICIAL STATISTICS, 1868.

No. 1.

COMMON LAW COURTS.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH, CROWN SIDE.

The return made by the Queen's Coroner and Attorney and the Master of the Crown-office shows certain of the proceedings under the peculiar jurisdiction of the Court of Queen's Bench on the Crown side.

It is explained by these officers that the nature of the offences is, conspiracies, perjuries, assaults, nuisances, and other misdemeanors, and occasionally, but rarely, felonies; but that no record is kept in the Crown-office of the number of cases tried, as the trials take place at Nisi Prius in London and Middlesex, and at the assizes for the other counties; nor of the number of persons tried; nor of the number acquitted or convicted, except in cases in which judgment is entered up in the Queen's Bench, and except in cases of fines; nor of sentences, except where they are passed by the court in banc, which very seldom occurs now, as sentences are, by virtue of the statute 11 Geo. 4. and 1 Will. 4, c. 70, almost invariably passed by the judge at Nisi Prius, and not afterwards entered up of record in the Queen's Bench.

In 1868 there were seven persons acquitted and seven convicted, in which cases judgment was entered up in the Queen's Bench; there were six cases of fines; one in which the inhabitants of Milton-next-Sittingbourne were fined 1s.; one in which an individual was fined 1s.; one in which two individuals were fined 1s. each; one in which three individuals were fined 1s. each; one in which two individuals were fined 100l. each; and one case in which the inhabitants of Cradley were fined 6s. 8d.

The total number of proceedings in 1868 is stated to be as given in the following abstract. The different proceedings on each matter for 1868 are shown in the table.

Mandamus—made absolute	24
Informations—Quo warrant	5
Habeas Corpus ad subjiciendum by judge—granted	24
Certiorari—by court	16
by judge	46
Judgments and executions	28
Orders of Sessions	29
Special cases under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, from Quarter Sessions	10
Special cases under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, on proceedings before justices	37

In the number of writs of summons issued in 1868 there is a decrease of 44,345, or 34·8 per cent., as compared with the number for the preceding year, the number in 1867 having shown a decrease of 5339, or 4·4 per cent., as compared with the number in 1866. As compared with the number in 1859, the decrease in 1868 is 3394, or 3·9 per cent.; as compared with the average of the seven years 1859-65, viz., 104,857, the decrease in the number for 1868 amounts to 21,981, or 20·9 per cent. In the remaining numbers under "process issued," the decrease in 1868, as compared with the preceding year, is 29,805, or 24·2 per cent. In the total of the "matters heard" the decrease in 1868, as compared with the preceding year, amounts to 496, or 25 per cent.

BILLS OF COSTS TAXED.

The number of bills of costs taxed in the Court of Exchequer in 1868, exclusive of bills taxed under the statute, was 4971 against 8930 in the preceding year. No return is given under this head for either of the Courts of Queen's Bench or Common Pleas for 1868.

In the following abstract of the returns furnished by the associates of the three Superior Courts of Common Law, and of those furnished by the clerks of assize and the clerks of the Crown, is shown for 1868, with regard to the courts at Westminster, the number of remanets from the preceding year for trial at the commencement of the year, and, both with regard to the courts at Westminster and on circuit, the number of causes entered for trial, and the number of trials, the number withdrawn, struck out, &c., and the number of remanets at the end of the year; the totals for the preceding year being also given, and the total for 1859.

PUBLIC COMPANIES.

RAILWAY COMPANIES.

Furness.—A dividend at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum.

Great Western.—Dividends announced at the rate of 2 per cent. per annum on the original stock; 2½ per cent. per annum on the South Wales; 1 per cent. per annum on the Newport; and 1 per cent. per annum on the Oxford stock.

Great Western and Brentford.—Two per cent. per annum dividend declared.

North and South-Western Junction.—A dividend at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum.

Penarth.—A dividend at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum.

Whitehaven, Cleator, and Egremont.—A distribution at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum.

BANKS.

Birmingham Town and District.—A dividend of 6s. per share, making with a similar distribution in March last a total payment of 7½ per cent.

Caledonian.—A dividend at the rate of 11 per cent. per annum declared.

Worcester City and County.—A dividend at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum.

ASSURANCE COMPANIES.

Albert Assurance.—The special meeting was held on the 28th inst., at which it was proposed to register the undertaking with limited liability. At the meeting held on the 12th inst., it was considered unjustifiable to pay present claims in full to the prejudice of those falling due hereafter; and Mr. S. L. Price and the manager having been appointed provisional liquidators, they were desired to prepare a statement of assets and liabilities and to consider all necessary arrangements. Their report shows that the company's capital is 500,000l., of which 176,000l. is paid up. The liability of the proprietors is limited to the balance of the uncalled capital. The present business is very large, and has been collected at a great cost. The existing policies are 8,207,041, with annual premiums 312,657l. The annuities are 19,307l. The assets are estimated to produce 421,500l., including 150,000l. as the value of the uncalled capital. The claims and debts now due are 110,000l. The general liabilities are now estimated at 1,407,932l., and, deducting present assets, the deficiency is 986,432l. If the annuitants' and immediate creditors' claims be reduced one-half, the actuaries believe that nearly 80 per cent. may hereafter be paid on future claims, though they advise that only 75 per cent. should be engaged for. If this proposal be agreed to, there will be an estimated surplus of 153,854l. There is much uncertainty admitted with regard to these calculations. Should this reconstruction be negatived, the liabilities are estimated at 3,260,000l., and trifling dividends could only be paid over a period of many years. It is proposed to form a new company to take over the liabilities thus reduced. The company will then exist almost on the mutual principle. Meetings are to be held in London, Manchester, Liverpool, Birmingham, Leeds, and Nottingham, to consider these proposals.

MISCELLANEOUS COMPANIES.

Berlin Water Works.—A dividend at the rate of 9 per cent. per annum.

China Steam Ship and Labuan Coal (Limited).—A further dividend of 4s. in the pound is payable to the creditors.

Langham Hotel.—The old company has been wound-up, and the new company is in full possession. A dividend at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum declared.

Natal Land and Colonisation.—A dividend of 5s. per share.

North Central Wagon.—A dividend at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum.

Submarine Telegraph.—A dividend at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum is declared.

REPORTS OF SALES.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

MORTGAGE TO SECURE CREDITORS—POSSESSION OF DEBTOR—PREFERENCE—BONA FIDES—SEQUESTRATION—STAT. 13 ELIZ. C. 5.—By an order made in a suit H. was directed to pay into court a sum found due from him in respect of certain trust-moneys. Before the day fixed for payment H. executed a deed whereby he assigned, by way of mortgage, the whole of his property to trustees for the benefit of five of his principal creditors, to the exclusion of the persons interested in the trust-moneys. The deed contained a proviso for redemption on payment of the debts due to the five creditors within six months, and also a proviso that H. should continue in possession of the property for six months, but not so as to let in or permit any execution, sequestration, or other process, and in case any such should be enforced, or attempted to be enforced, that the possession of H. should cease and determine. Default having been made in payment of the trust-moneys, under the order of the court, a writ of sequestration was issued, and the sequestrators seized part of H.'s property; whereupon the trustees of the deed moved for the withdrawal of the sequestration: Held, that they were entitled to hold the property as against the sequestrators: (Poyser v. Harrison, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 1001. V. C. S.)

PATENT—ACTION IN THE NATURE OF SLANDER OR TITLE—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.—The plaintiffs, the proprietors of a patent spooling machine, brought an action against the defendant, also the proprietor of a patent spooling machine, for falsely and maliciously writing and saying to various persons in treaty with the plaintiffs for the purchase of their spooling machines, that the plaintiff's patent was an infringement of the defendant's, the defendant claiming royalties for their use, and threatening legal proceedings if these royalties were not paid; in consequence of which the plaintiffs lost the sale of their machines. The defendant pleaded not guilty. At the trial evidence was offered on the part of the plaintiffs of various specifications and machines existing before the date of the defendant's patent, in order to show that the defendant's specification claimed matters that were not new, and that the defendant himself had used them, and consequently knew the facts which would render his patent void; but this evidence was excluded by the judge as being immaterial whilst the defendant's patent was still subsisting: Held, that the evidence was rightly excluded, and that no action would lie against the defendant for the warning given by him to intending purchasers of the plaintiffs' machines, unless it were shown to have been given malà fide with the intent only to injure the plaintiffs, and without an intention to follow it up by legal proceedings; or that the circumstances were such as to make the bringing of an action by the defendant altogether wrongful: (Wren and others v. Wield, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 1007. Q. B.)

FIXTURES—MORTGAGOR AND MORTGAGEE.—Trade fixtures annexed to the freehold for the more convenient use of them, and not to improve the inheritance, and capable of being removed without any appreciable damage to the freehold, pass under a mortgage of the freehold to the mortgagee. The decisions which establish that a tenant may remove trade fixtures are inapplicable as between mortgagor and mortgagee: (Clinch v. Wood, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 1012. Ex. Ch.)

INTEREST SUIT—ADMINISTRATOR PENDENTE LITE—RECEIVER APPOINTED BY COURT OF CHANCERY.—This court having formally refused to appoint an administrator pendente lite in a suit where the Court of Chancery had appointed an administrator, on its being brought to its knowledge that the Court of Chancery was of opinion that such an appointment would be desirable, granted a second application to the same effect. The 70th section of the Probate Court Act gives power to the court to appoint an administrator even though the application be made by a third person not party to the suit: (Tichborne v. Tichborne, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 1015. Prob. and Div.)

SUIT FOR DISSOLUTION—PREVIOUS SUIT FOR NULLITY DISMISSED—COSTS.—Where a wife had failed in a suit for nullity on the ground of impotency, and afterwards obtained a decree for dissolution on the ground of adultery and cruelty, the court held that the husband ought not to be condemned in the costs of both suits, and ordered that the costs paid by him in the suit for nullity should be credited to him in taxing the costs for the dissolution suit: (Ditchfield v. Ditchfield, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 1016. Div. and Mat.)

DISSOLUTION SUIT—DECREE NISI—MARRIAGE OF PETITIONER BEFORE DECREE ABSOLUTE—DISCRETION—20 & 21 VICT. C. 85.—After the decree nisi in a matrimonial suit, and before the decree absolute, the petitioner married again. The Queen's Proctor brought the fact under the notice of the court, but on affidavit, showing that the petitioner had acted bona fide under a mistaken impression that the decree nisi dissolved the marriage, the court held that it was a proper case for the exercise of the discretion vested in it by the 85th section of the Divorce Act, and made the decree absolute: (Noble v. Noble and Godman, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 1016. Div. and Mat.)

A SOLICITOR DROWNED AT SLAPTON.—A melancholy accident has just occurred at Slapton to a Mr. Wolves, solicitor, of London, who has lately been staying at the Sands Hotel. In the evening, after dinner, against the advice of his friends, he went out to bathe. He was a very good swimmer, and had many times stated that he could swim from Blackpool to the Start. On this occasion he went into the water near the hotel, and when he had been absent some time the landlord and others, growing anxious, sent out a boat in search of him. The boat was rowed out to sea, and returned after a fruitless journey. Late in the evening the chief boatman, Lyne, at Torcross, and Pederick, a publican, thought they heard some one in the water smacking his hands, so they ran on the beach, but could see no one. This is a mile and a quarter from the Sands Hotel, and it is supposed the unfortunate gentleman was just then seized with the cramp and went down. His body was found two days afterwards at a place below Torcross, and about four miles from the Sands Hotel, called Langston's Rocks.—Western Daily Mercury.

PATENTS.—In the year 1868 there were 3991 applications for letters patent; 2490 were passed thereon, and 2456 specifications were filed; 1501 applications lapsed or were forfeited in the year through the applicants failing to proceed for their patents within the six months of protection, and 34 patents became void through neglect to file specifications. With regard to the older patents, it appears that 13,101 bear date between the 1st Oct. 1852 and the 31st Dec. 1853. The additional progressive stamp duty of 50l. was paid at the end of the third year on 3692 of that number, and 9409 became void. The additional progressive stamp duty of 100l. was paid at the end of the seventh year on 1274 of the 3692 remaining in force at the end of the third year, and 2418 became void. Consequently about 70 per cent. of the 13,101 patents became void at the end of the third year, and about 90 per cent. became void at the end of the seventh year. The proportionate number of patents becoming void by reason of nonpayment continues nearly the same to the present time. In the year 1868 the stamp duties received in respect of patents amounted to 119,271. The fees to the Attorney-General and Solicitor-General for England, and to their clerks, absorbed 11,915. The Attorney-General and Solicitor-General for Ireland receive 2000l. as compensation, and the Lord Advocate 850l. The Patent Office establishment takes 9882l.; the printers, 17,677l. There are other items of expenditure, but the surplus is very large, and the aggregate surplus income from 1852 to the end of the year 1868 exceeds 726,000l. The commissioners repeat in their report this year that the building devoted to the purposes of the Patent Office is not, and never can be, made suitable to the requirements of the office. They add that the building is now filled, and there is a continual increase of specifications and scientific works for which provision must be made. Complete sets of the commissioners of patents' publications, each set including more than 2500 volumes, have been presented to the most important towns in the kingdom, to be accessible to the public daily free of charge; and complete series of abridgments or abstracts of specifications have been presented to a large number of literary institutions.

THE BENCH AND THE BAR.

REVISING BARRISTERS.—Walter B. Trevelyan, Esq., Temple, London, has been appointed revising barrister for the Berwick district, and Harrison Falkner Blair, Esq., St. James's Chambers, Manchester, has been appointed additional revising barrister.—Newcastle Journal.

Last week Mr. G. Waugh, barrister, of London, was bathing in the sea between Dartmouth and Kingsbridge, in company with Messrs. Reynolds and Lucas, also barristers. Suddenly Mr. Waugh exclaimed, "I'm drowning," and disappeared instantly. His companions, knowing he was an excellent swimmer, thought he was joking; but he never reappeared, and yesterday his body was picked up off the Start.

MR. SERJEANT SIMON AND HIS CONSTITUENTS.

—The hon member for Dewsbury addressed a large meeting of his constituents on Monday night. The learned gentleman reviewed the work of the past session and the part he had taken. In reference to the Irish Church Bill, he stated that he voted in all the twenty-eight divisions which took place upon it. The hon. member also spoke upon the financial policy of the Government, the question of education, the bankruptcy laws, trade unions, the ballot, and other subjects. A unanimous vote of confidence in their representative was passed by the meeting at the close.

WHO IS TO BE THE LORD JUSTICE?—If, says the Spectator, we are driven from the purely political field, we must make our choice between two other alternatives. We may either fix upon a lawyer pure and simple, or we may select one who, having risen as high as politics will take him, is now independent of their help. In the first-class, Vice-Chancellor James seems the favourite, and we have no doubt that he will make a good Lord Justice. It would have been better if he had sat longer as Vice-Chancellor, and if his reputation at the Bar had not been so much overshadowed by Sir Roundell Palmer and Mr. Jessel. But we do not think this a sufficient reason for putting Mr. Jessel over his head. If the other alternative be adopted the choice is larger, but it is not so free from grave embarrassments. First of all, we may doubt whether any ex-Lord Chancellor would feel it consistent with his dignity to accept anything below that office, though we may cite the example of Lord Lyndhurst, who took the post of Chief Baron of the Exchequer after giving up the seals. But this is not the only difficulty. With almost all the men of this class there is some political objection. Take the case of Lord Westbury. His conduct with regard to the Irish Church does not make it more easy than it otherwise would be to approach him. Take the case of Lord Cairns. Would not the offer of such a post look as if the Government was holding out some inducement to a practised debater to abstain from expressing himself strongly on points of difference? We know very well that when the same post was offered to Lord Cairns on the last vacancy, an assurance was given him that nothing of the kind was expected of him, but he was not then leader of the Opposition in the House of Lords. He could not possibly combine the two functions. The offer of the Lord Justiceship then might have left his hands free as one of the most prominent members of the Opposition, but it would wear a very different aspect now. One name, indeed, remains, but with that there are other and more peculiar difficulties. The greatest of all is that the suggestion can come from no one but from him who would naturally be the last to make it. We do not venture to throw it out; it only occurs to us as a possibility. What if Lord Hatherley himself were to return to the court over which he presided for eight months, and for which he is so eminently fitted, thus enabling Government to strengthen its hands in the Upper House by the introduction of Sir Roundell Palmer without losing the immense help it derives from Lord Hatherley himself? The point is one solely for his consideration. He would naturally reflect where he could be of most service. He would ask himself whether the place he now fills, and in which he has rendered himself eminently useful to his party, is calculated to employ all his powers to the best advantage. In the long run we think he would prefer the place from whence he rose, but no one can expect that he should wish to return to it already. To give up the position of Lord Chancellor from such motives would be an act of unparalleled generosity, and we should not have mentioned it if we thought it would also be one of self-sacrifice.

MAGISTRATE AND PARISH LAWYER.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

LARCENY BY SERVANT.—B., a groom in the service of prosecutor, was supplied by his master with money to pay for the keep of the stallion of which he had the charge. He said that he had paid three sums to C., which was untrue; he had appropriated them to his own use: Held not to be larceny: (Reg. v. Dartnell, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 1020. Byles, J.)

EMBEZZLEMENT.—B., not being authorised to receive money for his master, obtained 1l. for and on account of his master from C., but not while in his employ; he was not asked to account for it, nor did he admit that he had received it: He was held to be guilty of embezzlement under

24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 68: (Reg. v. Dartnell, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 1020. Byles, J.)

NORWICH CITY JUSTICES, GUILDHALL.

Thursday, Aug. 26.

(Before the MAYOR and other JUSTICES.)

REG. v. KINDLE.

Mutiny Act—Unlawful possession of a soldier's overcoat, or cloak, without being able to give satisfactory account.

Thomas Kindle was brought up in custody charged with having possession of a cloak, the property of Her Majesty, provided for the use of a private in Her Majesty's Royal Horse Artillery. Linay appeared for the prisoner.

From the evidence it appeared that the prisoner had been found in possession of the cloak, and stated that he bought same of a private in the regiment for 5s., and gave such a description of the man that he had been put under arrest.

Linay, on behalf of the prisoner, contended that as there was no proof that the prisoner's statement was untrue it ought to be considered a satisfactory account, in the same manner as giving the name of the person when found in possession of stolen property.

The Bench reminded Mr. Linay that it was in evidence an article cost 3l. 10s. new, and was worth 2l. now, and the prisoner bought it for 5s.

Linay replied that cast-off regimentals fetched but very little, and the prisoner might consider 5s. a fair price.

The Bench convicted in a penalty of 5l., and 6l. the treble value of the coat and other costs.

GAMING LICENCES.—The Commissioners of Inland Revenue have notified their intention of enforcing the penalty against all persons known to have killed game without a licence in the forthcoming season.

AS IT SHOULD BE.—The annual report of Mr James Caldwell, the governor of the gaol at Dunedin, New Zealand, dated the 14th April last, states that the value of the labour of the prisoners during the year ended the 31st March last more than covered the entire expenditure of the establishment, without taking into consideration the labour of such prisoners as were engaged in prison employment, such as washing, cooking, cleaning, &c., and various other works connected with the gaol. The prison contained, when the report was printed, 789 inmates, of whom 43 were debtors and six lunatics. During the year there were received 595 male and 147 female prisoners. The expenditure for the year on account of the gaol was 7385l. 2s. 8d., and the value of the prisoners' labour was 8778l. 3s. 7d., showing an excess of 1392l. 0s. 11d. over the expenditure.

LOAN SOCIETIES.—The annual abstract of the accounts of loan societies in England and Wales, prepared by Mr. Tidd Pratt, shows returns for 1868 from only 699 societies, instead of, as in recent years, above 800. There were 148,295 loans made in 1868, the amount circulated being 731,408l. The sums in borrowers' hands on the 31st Dec. 1868, amounted to 443,723l. The amount paid in the year for interest by borrowers or their sureties was 35,395l.; but borrowers and would-be borrowers paid also 9437l. for forms of application and inquiry. 13,557 summonses were issued in the year for recovery of sums amounting to 27,012l., and 22,002l. was recovered; but 2583 distress warrants were issued. The societies incurred costs amounting to 3127l.; costs amounting to 2561l. were paid by borrowers or their sureties. The societies state their gross profits in 1868 at 46,902l.; their expenses of management at 18,206l. They paid 27,502l. as interest to depositors or shareholders, and state their surplus or net profits at 4987l. These loan societies chiefly abound in London and its suburbs; all the rest of the kingdom does not contain so many as the metropolis.

SMALL RATEPAYERS.—A Parliamentary return, ordered at the beginning of the session, has just been issued, but it is still imperfect. It relates to English Parliamentary boroughs having a population of 20,000 or more, and to the poor rate made next after Christmas 1867, when the Reform Act of 1867 had come into full operation, abolishing composition and requiring that every householder be rated to the full rate. The return shows a rate to be collected amounting to 2,213,858l. There was actually collected 1,828,325l.; 21,311l. was legally excused; 90,147l. was for other cause not recoverable; the recoverable arrears are stated at 26,659l.; but in several instances no entry appears under these last three heads, the rate not having been closed. 52,343 persons, almost an exactly equal number of men and of women, were excused from payment of the rate on the ground of poverty. 137,926 summonses were issued for the recovery of the rate, and 29,442 distress warrants. The return shows 155,281 tenants at weekly rents, whose rates were paid by arrangement through their landlords;—9500 in St. Mary's, Nottingham; 9366 in Ashton-under-Lyne; 7896 in Lambeth; 6551 in Liverpool parish; 6517 in Preston; 6181 in Hunslet (Leeds); 5701 in Leeds parish; 4545 in Mile-end Old-Town; 4412 in Ardwick, Manchester; 4006 in Chorlton, Manchester; 4287 in Camberwell; 3829 in Aston, Birmingham.

TAXATION IN LONDON.—We have before us a statement of the local rates annually paid by a householder in the parish of Camberwell. His house is rated at 55l. Poor-rate, 2s. 9d.; general purpose rate, 1s. 2d.; water-rate (about) 1s. 1d.; expenses of Board of Works, 6d.; lighting-rate, 5d.; local sewers rate, 4d.; main drainage rate, 3d.—total, 6s. 6d. Even Camberwell is better off in this respect than some of the East-end parishes. In 1862 the rates in St. George's-in-the-East amounted to 7s. 3d., and those in St. Nicholas, Deptford, 9s. 2d. in the pound. Thus, the incidence of taxation in London affords an admirable incentive, if one were needed, to the discharge of the great duty of getting on. When a man grows richer and moves westward, he finds a double improvement in his circumstances. He has fewer rates to pay, and more money wherewith to pay them. If he goes to Tyburnia, he will only be liable for 2s. 4d. in the pound; if he takes a still higher flight and settles in Mayfair, he will escape with 2s. 1d. As things are, close upon one-third of the rateable value of a house in Camberwell goes in local taxes, and for this the tenant gets imperfect drainage, questionable water, a Poor-Law which leaves the street full of beggars, and such police protection as was vouchsafed the other day to Mrs. Peake. If it is impossible to lighten the ratepayer's disbursements, we cannot but think he might under a different system of government get a little more in return for them.—Pall-mall Gazette.

PRESENTATIONS TO THE POLICE.—Capt. C. G. Hodgson, the late chief superintendent of the City police force, after a service of upwards of thirty years, has retired upon a pension, granted by the Court of Common Council, of 600l. per annum, the full amount of his salary. Some time since a movement was set on foot amongst the members of the force of all grades to present him with a testimonial of their respect and esteem, and this was very cordially received and approved of, and a few days ago the testimonial, which consisted of a silver salver and a tea and coffee service, was presented to Capt. Hodgson, on behalf of the subscribers, by Inspector Foulger and Inspector Bailly, at his private residence at Acton. It was intended that the presentation should be made in the presence of a body of the men, but in consequence of the state of Capt. Hodgson's health, it was thought advisable that the ceremony should be conducted in private. On Thursday also a large number of gentlemen and tradesmen of Paddington and Willesden met at the Prince of Wales Tavern, Harrow-road, Paddington, for the purpose of presenting a testimonial to Mr. Mackerell, late an inspector of the X Division of police, and who, after twenty-seven years' service in that force, has retired with a full superannuation pension. Some short time ago the divisional squadron of police, of which Mr. Mackerell was inspector, presented him with a very handsome and costly bible, and the tradesmen and gentlemen above referred to, have supplemented the gift by presenting Mr. Mackerell with a valuable gold watch, a gold chain, and a purse containing gold.

AN ECCENTRIC PRISONER.—At the Middlesex Sessions on Saturday, George Taylor, 37, described as a moulder, of wild appearance, and with scarcely a rag to cover him, was placed in the dock charged with stealing a watch and chain from John Hayes, a coffee-house keeper, of 88, St. John's-street, Clerkenwell. He was also indicted for stealing a pair of boots, the property of John Balderson, of 15, St. John's-street, Clerkenwell, and further for assaulting and beating Philip Ennesey, a plumber. Mr. Francis, the deputy clerk of the peace, read the first charge over to the prisoner, and asked him whether he was guilty or not guilty. Prisoner—I might just as well say "guilty" as not. (Laughter) Put it down "guilty." Mr. Francis—You are further charged with stealing a pair of boots the property of John Balderson. Prisoner—Put that down "guilty." (Laughter.) Mr. Francis—You are also charged with assaulting Philip Ennesey. Prisoner (with the utmost indifference)—Put them all down "guilty." You are sure to have your own way. (Renewed laughter.) Mr. Sergeant Cox—Is the prisoner known? Reeves, a warder, said he had been previously convicted, but that it was some time ago. He behaved very strangely while in the prison. Mr. Sergeant Cox—Prisoner, the sentence upon you is, that you be imprisoned and kept to hard labour for twelve calendar months. Prisoner—Will that include the boots? (Laughter.) The Judge—Yes, that includes the boots. The prisoner tripped lightly from the dock, and said, "Hurrah! now I shall get a new coat."

LOCAL TAXATION.—The Blue-book issued a few weeks ago, showing the amount of local taxation levied in the several parishes of England and Wales in the year ending at Lady-day, 1868, has been followed by a supplement of 291 pages, stating the rate in the pound of the aggregate of all local rates in each parish on the rateable value. The rates vary greatly in different places. They are below 1s. in several parishes, as low as 6d. in two thinly-populated parishes in Lincolnshire and the West Riding, and 5d. in the parish of Hardwich, Suffolk, with its 25 inhabitants and rateable value of 343l. On the other hand, the rates exceed 5s. in the pound in many parishes, exceed 6s. in several, exceed 7s. in some, and are stated at 8s. in the pound in the parish of St. Margaret, King's Lynn. The present volume makes some corrections in the summary of the year's local taxation in England and Wales, and gives the following amended summary:—Amount levied for poor relief, 7,834,870l., including 336,811l. for vaccination and registration fees, payments under the Parochial Assessment and Union Assessment Committee Acts, salaries of collectors, &c.; county, hundred, borough and police rate, 2,760,352l.; highway rate, 1,538,215l.; church-rates, 217,083l.; lighting and watching-rate, 76,978l.; Improvement Commissioners, 445,431l.; general district rates, 1,796,690l., rates under Courts of Commissioners of Sewers, including drainage and embankment rates, 709,071l.; rates of other kinds, 1,355,473l., including 981,140l. for general and lighting rates levied by vestries and district Boards under the Metropolis Local Management Acts; making a total of 16,734,163l. local taxation of England and Wales in the year ending at Lady-day, 1868. The return has been prepared by the Poor-Law Board, and appears to have been compiled with care and pains.

THE MAGISTRATES AND THE PUBLIC-HOUSES.—Nearly forty memorials were presented to the Manchester city magistrates at the brewster sessions against the granting of new licences. They were from temperance societies, Sunday and ragged school teachers and managers, religious congregations, and public meetings. The mayor assured the deputations that the magistrates were impressed with the importance of the additional duty which had been imposed upon them by the recent Act of Parliament, but pointed out that, however desirable it might be to reduce the number of beerhouses in the city, and to substitute others of a superior class, this could only be effected in course of time. Of the several applications for new licences two were postponed, one for an extension of licence was granted, and the others were refused. Six houses were reported by the police for misconduct, and the licences of these houses were suspended. There were nine applications yesterday for spirit licences in the township of Birkenhead, and nineteen in other parts of the hundred of Wirral. The magistrates adopted the restrictive principle, and granted only two new licences, both being out of Birkenhead. There were 312 applications for beer licences—15 in Birkenhead and 162 in the country. Most of the beer-sellers' applications were granted. A Leeds there were nearly 400 applications to renewal of spirit licences and thirty-two new applicants. Most of the old licences were granted except in cases where the occupier had been fine twice during the year for infringement of the law and these were adjourned to Sept. 23. Of the new applications four only were granted—three for restaurant keepers. The magistrates afterwards sat specially to hear applications for certificates under the Beerhouse Act (without which no licence can be obtained). There were 730, and at Bradford, there were 615 applicants for these certificates. At the annual licensing meeting at the borough of Stafford, the bench, with a view of doing away with the nuisance occasioned at night by the noise of skittle-playing gave notice that during the next year they expected the publicans to close their skittle-alley at nine in the evening, and the beer-house kept at eight, and that any person failing to comply with this regulation would be in danger of losing his licence next year.

RECEIVERS OF STOLEN GOODS.—To the Editor of the Times:—Sir, In a letter inserted by this morning, "A Barrister" contends that only alteration in the law as to receivers of stolen goods effected by the Habitual Criminals Act that a previous conviction may be proved by verdict, and he adds that without further evidence of guilty knowledge the judges will hold that it is no case for the jury. The prediction is somewhat rash, and the more so as the reading of Act on which it is based is erroneous. Your respondent has left out of sight the fact that the doctrine of recent possession is immensely tended. Under the old law any man who found in the possession of goods lately stolen called upon to give an account of the way in which he came by them. Thus, where two coats of about twenty yards each, were found in possession of the prisoner two months after they had been stolen, Mr. Justice Patteson held that the prisoner should explain how he came by property: (Taylor on Evidence, vol. 1, pp. 151-2.) But where tools had been traced to a prisoner three months after their loss, where a horse was found in his keeping six months after it had been stolen, where goods were discovered in his house sixteen months after a robbery, it was held that no explanation need be given. By the Habitual Criminals Act the mere fact that a man previously convicted of certain specific offences, involving fraud or dishonesty, is found in the possession of stolen goods, is to be evidence of guilty knowledge. How, in the face of this enactment, a judge is to say what the Legislature expressly declares to be evidence is not evidence passes my comprehension. When once the case has gone to the jury it is virtually decided by the previous conviction. Guilty knowledge being a presumption and not a question of fact, almost anything will turn the scale. For a proof of this we have only to look to the working of that section of the Coining Act which converts certain misdemeanors on a first offence into felonies after a previous conviction. It has been held by some of the judges that under this section the previous conviction is to be given in evidence before the subsequent offence is proved, and the result of this is, as I myself have seen, that the weakest possible case, without a shadow of legal evidence upon the facts, will support a verdict of guilty. It will be the same with receivers of stolen goods. Serjeant Cox is not quite correct in saying that the burden of proof is shifted upon them, for if goods were recently stolen some part of that burden always lay upon the receiver. But the practical effect of the section is as he stated it. "A Barrister" is also in error as to the reference to the first schedule. The words "any felony not punishable with death also" have nothing to do with the fourth part of the Act, for that deals solely with such offences as are specified in the first schedule, and involve fraud or dishonesty. A glance at the third part of the Act explains the difficulty which your correspondent has found, and of which I should think he has a monopoly. The 8th section provides that all persons who have been twice convicted of any offence specified in the first schedule shall be liable to police supervision. Any felonies except murder, any offences against the coinage not amounting to a felony, together with the misdemeanors of obtaining money by false pretences, conspiring to defraud, being found by night armed with intent to break and enter any house or building, come within the schedule. It is true that bigamy and manslaughter are felonies; it is also true that they need not involve fraud or dishonesty; but if "A Barrister" had carefully read the Act before passing judgment upon it, he would never have supposed that either of these offences could be admitted as evidence against receivers.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant, A STUFF GOWN. Aug. 26.

REAL PROPERTY LAWYER AND CONVEYANCER.

NOTES ON NEW DECISIONS.

POLICY OF INSURANCE GIVEN AS A SECURITY.—SURPLUS.—B., agent for C., an officer in the army, supplied him from time to time with goods. Policies of insurance were effected and given to B. as security for whatever might be due at the death of C., to whose account the premiums were regularly charged. At C.'s death the debt due to B. was 1800*l.*, but the moneys received from the policies were 3500*l.* The difference between the debts and the money received was held to be a balance due to the account of the deceased officer: (Bruce v. Garden, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 1002. V. C. J.)

WILL.—CODICIL.—REPUBLICATION.—Testator by his will (before the Wills Act) devised two houses to his niece A. and her heirs. By a settlement subsequently made on her marriage, he granted the houses to a trustee to the use of himself for life, remainder to the husband for life, remainder to the wife if she should survive for life, remainder to the issue of the marriage, remainder to his own right heirs. By a codicil to his will in 1826 he confirmed his will. In the events which took place, the devise to the right heirs of the testator came in question. Held, that the codicil revived the devise in the will to the niece and her heirs: (Harvey v. Lloyd, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 1003. V. C. J.)

POWER.—PERPETUITY.—ELECTION.—A testatrix had, under her marriage settlement, a power of appointment of a certain fund to and among the children of the marriage. By her will, purporting to be in execution of the power, she appointed a portion of this fund to a son for life, with remainder to such persons as he should by his will appoint. By her will there was also a general residuary appointment, subject to all other appointments to her three daughters. She also gave other bequests to these daughters out of her own property. Held, that the execution of the power in favour of the appointees after the son's life interest was void for remoteness: (Wollaston v. King, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 1003. V. C. J.)

WILL.—POWER OF APPOINTMENT.—MARRIAGE.—EXCEPTIONS IN SECT. 18 OF WILLS ACT.—A. left a will by which he devised all his property to B. for life, with power of appointment, and, in the event of her dying without issue or without exercising her power of appointment, to her next of kin at the time of her death. B. exercised the power of appointment, and subsequently intermarried. Held, that the marriage did not revoke the will, and that the will came within the exceptions of the 18th section of the Wills Act, on the ground that next of kin in the original will did not include the same persons as next of kin under the Statute of Distributions: (Re M'Vicar, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 1013. Prob. Ct.)

WILL AND CODICILS EXECUTED ABROAD.—EFFECT OF AS TO CONFIRMATION.—A testator left three testamentary papers, a will, and two codicils endorsed on the back of it, none of them duly executed according to the law of England. The second codicil was made in Italy, and, according to the law of that country, was duly executed as to form, but taken by itself it could have no independent existence, nor could it confirm the will, although referred to it. Held, that neither will nor codicil could be admitted to probate. In determining the validity of testamentary papers the court will have regard to the law of one country only, and will not mix up the legal requirements of two countries: (Pechell v. Hilderley, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 1014. Prob. Ct.)

THE PRESSURE OF TAXATION ON REAL PROPERTY.

A paper on the above subject was read by Mr. Purdy, of the Poor Law Board, at the British Association. He said the nearest approach at present to the annual value of real property in England and Wales is expressed by some figures which show the gross sum to be upwards of 145,000,000*l.* for the financial year 1867-68, thus assessed:

Under schedule A	£116,341,387
Sum formerly charged under A, but since 1865 transferred to schedule D as profits	29,057,991

Total

The assessment upon which the Crown actually gathered the tax was upwards of 9,000,000*l.* short of this gross sum; the statement of the amounts "charged" standing, for the same year, thus:

Under schedule A	£107,062,662
Sum formerly charged under A, but since 1865 transferred to D as profits	29,041,932

Total

The principal items under schedule A in 1865 were:—Lands, including tithe rentcharge, 46,403,000*l.*; messuages, 59,236,000*l.*; quarries, D, 526,000*l.*; mines, D, 4,277,000*l.*; iron works, D, 1,248,000*l.*; canals, D, 786,000*l.*; railways, D, 13,882,000*l.*; gas-works, D, 1,618,000*l.* Those marked D are now placed under schedule D. The amount of local taxation incident upon real property is known with great fulness. The chief items are:

Amount levied under the name of poor-rate	£11,061,000
County, hundred, borough police, not paid out of poor-rate	307,000
Highway rate, not paid out of poor-rate	917,000
Church-rates	217,000
Lighting and watching rate	77,000
Improvement commission rates	445,000
General district rates, levied under the provision of Public Health and Local Government Acts	1,797,000
Rates under courts of Commissioners of Sewers, including drainage and embankment rates	709,071
Rates of other kinds, and inclusive of 861,000 l. levied in the metropolitan district as general and lighting rates	1,203,000

Total

It may be well to remember that nearly half of this heavy sum is entailed upon the ratepayers by the absolute right to relief which the legislation of England has given to the poor. The imperial taxes that are incident upon realty certainly exceed 6,000,000*l.*, they probably approach to 7,000,000*l.* So far as their respective amounts can be discovered, they are exhibited in the following statement:

Property tax, 1867	£2,354,030
Land-tax, 1868	1,056,000
House duty, 1868	1,008,000
Succession duty, average of 1867-68-69	562,000
Stamps on deeds and other instruments, not otherwise specified, 1868	1,405,000

Approximate total

Allowing for possible defects in the imperial tax table, the aggregate burden is this:

Taken by local taxation	£16,733,000
Taken by imperial taxation	6,362,000

Grand total

Upon the gross value assessed under Schedule A, 145,390,000*l.*, this is equivalent to 3*s.* 2*d.* in the pound; on the net value, the amount "charged," 136,135,000*l.*, it equals 3*s.* 4*d.* in the pound. A Parliamentary return of some interest to the discussion of the incidence of taxation was in 1853 obtained upon the motion of Mr. Moffatt, and Mr. Purdy showed from it that sixteen years ago landed property, including the tithe-rentcharge, bore 45*s.* 6 per cent. of the aggregate amount of the rates and tax mentioned above; and the residual property 54*s.* 4 per cent. The gross assessment in 1864-65 of lands and of other real property under Schedule A in England and Wales was:

		Per cent.
Of lands, including tithe-rentcharge	£46,403,437	35.3
Of other descriptions of real property assessed in this schedule	84,938,063	64.7

Total

As against 1851-52 it appears that 10.3 per cent. has passed from the land and gone upon other assessable property. Land would appear now liable to bear rather more than one-third of any burden laid upon real property generally; and real property other than land rather less than two-thirds. As regards the growth of the property under pressure, during the past fifty years England has increased largely in numbers and more largely in material prosperity. Under such conditions, it is inconceivable of any community that a great impetus should not have been given to the development of what English lawyers mean by the term "realty," or real estate. Authentic records afford the means of instituting a comparison between the years 1815 and 1868; or, roughly speaking, after the lapse of half a century. In the first-named year the population of England and Wales was 11,004,000; in 1865 it was 21,500,000 persons; the increase being 96.2 per cent. In 1814-15, the real property assessed under schedule A was 53,495,000*l.*; and in 1867-8 it was 145,390,000*l.*, or 171.8 per cent., and thus surpassing the rate of development in the population by 75.6 per cent. Separately it appears that the annual value of real property and other lands for England and Wales was in 1814-15, 17,235,375*l.*; 1864-65, 84,937,648*l.*; increase in 1864-65, 67,702,271*l.*; increase per cent, 392.8; and the annual value of lands (inclusive of tithes), for England and Wales, was in 1814-15, 36,260,009*l.*; 1864-65, 46,403,875*l.*; increase in 1864-65, 10,143,855*l.*; increase per cent, 27.9.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

CLAIM AGAINST A COMPANY FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT.—NOTICE OF THE OBJECT OF THE CONTRACT.—COMPANIES ACT 1862, s. 95.—The C. Company, which was established for the purpose of constructing railways, in a letter signed by its secretary, gave an order to the E. Company for 360 tons of rails at a certain price, and for 500 tons of a different kind of rails at a certain price; the terms being three months' acceptance from date of each delivery. The 500 tons of rails were intended for a railway which was not to be constructed by the C. Company, but by a firm whose leading partner was a director of the C. Company, and these rails were alleged to have been included in the order by mistake. These rails were made, but not delivered, in consequence of a letter from the C. Company, requesting the E. Company not to send them from their works until further orders. The C. Company was subsequently ordered to be wound-up. On a claim by the E. Company for damages occasioned by breach of the contract: Held, that the order, though not under seal, was binding on the C. Company, and that the E. Company was entitled to prove for the damages occasioned by the breach of contract; and also that the court would not sanction the giving of acceptances by the official liquidator for the amount of the contract. The managing director of the E. Company was also a director of the C. Company, and it was alleged that he must have known that the rails were not required for one of the C. Company's contracts: Held, that this did not affect the validity of the contract. The doctrine of notice does not apply to the purchase and sale of goods in the usual manner between two companies: (Re The Contract Corporation, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 964. M. R.)

WINDING-UP.—PETITION.—A coal company carried on a large business in London and the country at a loss of 3500*l.* per annum. At a general meeting it was reconstructed under new management. A shareholder, who had written a grossly abusive letter claiming a return of what he had paid, with certain shareholders at a country office that had been discontinued, presented a petition to wind-up. The court held that there was inability to carry on at a profit is not of itself sufficient ground for a winding-up, and dismissed the petition with costs: (Re The Joint Stock Coal Company, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 966 V.C. M.)

ALBERT INSURANCE COMPANY.

Messrs. S. L. Price and A. R. Kirby, the provisional official liquidators of the Albert Life Assurance Company, have issued their statement of the position of the company, with a proposal for the arrangement of its affairs. They state that the paid-up capital is 176,000*l.*, and the uncalled amount 324,000*l.*; while the liability under policies and annuity contracts is limited to the capital and funds of the company. Mr. Charles Jellicoe and Mr. Arthur Bailey, the actuaries, having been consulted, have given an opinion, which is stated at length, both as to the actual position of the company and the most likely mode of reconstruction. They state that the policies in force on the 31st Dec. last represented a total of 8,207,041, on which annual premiums of 312,657*l.* were payable, and annuities of 19,307*l.* The present liabilities they estimated at 1,407,932*l.*, and the assets, including uncalled capital, at 431,500*l.*, showing a deficiency of 986,432*l.* They then observe:

If a compromise be effected reducing by one-half the claims of the annuitants and immediate creditors, we think that, taking the assets to be of the value of 431,500*l.*, the company would be in a position to pay, as the claims arise, nearly 80 per cent. of the sums assured. But, inasmuch as there are several elements of uncertainty in the case, and as a valuation of the liabilities at the present date has yet to be made, we think that in any proposal for the arrangements of the company's affairs it would be inexpedient to engage to pay in the first instance more than 75 per cent. of the sums assured under the policies. The following is an estimate of what would be the position of the company thus reorganised. The above item of 1,147,487*l.*, viz., value of liabilities under policies, would be reduced to 137,173*l.*; the above item of 150,445*l.*, viz., the value of liabilities under annuities, would be reduced to 75,223*l.*; claims admitted, and general debts, would be reduced from 110,500*l.* to 55,250*l.*; total, 267,841*l.* Assets, including uncalled capital, estimating the loans on policies at 10*l.* in the pound, 431,500*l.*; apparent surplus, 153,654*l.*

The liquidators point out that should the business collapse and the company be continued in liquidation, the result will be that the estimated liabilities entitled to rank against the company will amount to 3,260,000*l.*; and that whereas, under a reconstruction, continuing policy-holders will be secured on the average to the extent of 75 per cent. of the amount assured under a liquidation they would only receive a trifling dividend spread over several years. It is, therefore, proposed to reorganise the company on the basis of an average reduction of 25 per cent. of its assurance liabilities; but the reduction on each policy would be ascertained before the policy-holders were called upon finally to determine as to continuing their policies. In order to carry out these arrangements, they state that it will be necessary to form a new company to take over from the old company all its assets and undertake all its liabilities on the reduced scale. The policy-holders to be entitled to 80 per cent. of the future profits, the remaining 20 per cent. to be reserved for the shareholders of the present company. It being indispensable that the new company should be formed by shares, it is proposed to issue to the present shareholders fully paid-up shares in the new company of the nominal value of 5*l.* in proportion to the amounts paid up in the present company, and thus secure an equitable division amongst them of such 20 per cent. of the profits. The new shares in no case to be entitled to more than 5 per cent. per annum until the policies have, either out of the existing assets or future profits, been made up to their original amount. The actual result would be that the reorganised company would practically be a mutual assurance company, but having 20 per cent. of its profits set aside for the old shareholders in the Albert Life Assurance Company from which it had obtained its business. It is further proposed that, at the end of one year from the date of the reorganisation of the company, a re-valuation of all the assets and liabilities shall be made, and such additions made to the policies as the result of such investigation may warrant. The proposed average reduction of 25 per cent. has been put at a maximum amount in order to place the company on a perfectly safe footing. It is intended to make it part of the constitution of the new company that in future there shall be a thorough investigation of the assets and liabilities at the end of every third year by two independent actuaries of high standing, one to be nominated by the shareholders, the other by the policy-holders. This proposal will be circulated among the shareholders, policy-holders, and other claimants on the company, and the liquidators point out the absolute necessity of a prompt decision on the matter. It is intended to propose at the forthcoming meetings that representatives should be nominated to form a central committee for assisting the liquidators to carry out the proposed arrangements.

The meeting of the shareholders of the Albert Assurance Company was conducted with closed doors. Mr. Neale, one of the directors, was in the chair, and a report was read by Mr. S. L. Price, accountant and joint provisional liquidator, giving a short history of the concern, followed by explanations with regard to moneys paid as compensation and other matters. A proposal that Mr. Kirby, the son of the late manager, should be requested to resign his position as one of the provisional liquidators was then moved and seconded, but was ultimately withdrawn on a promise from the chairman that another meeting shall be called on the 21st Sept.

The following letter has appeared in the Times:—"Sir,—I take the earliest opportunity of informing you that, on the application of this committee, his Honour the Vice-Chancellor, Sir W. M. James, has been pleased, with the view of avoiding the great expense which would be incurred by the attendance of numerous counsel, solicitors, and others, at Shire on the hearing of the petition to wind-up this company to order, that the same be adjourned for the purpose of being heard in London on the 17th prox., and that the hearing on the 10th be pro forma only. I am Sir, your obedient servant,

ALBERT LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY.

Vice-Chancellor James's Chambers,
11, New-square, Lincoln's-inn, Aug. 27, 1869.
Sir,—With reference to your letter of the 25th inst., addressed to the Vice-Chancellor, I have to inform you that it has been arranged for the hearing of the petitions to be adjourned to the 17th Sept., when they will come on before his Honour in London probably at these chambers, but of the exact time and the place of the hearing you had better inform yourself by inquiry hereafter. As there will be nothing done at Shire on the 10th Sept. except to formally adjourn the petitions, it will be unnecessary for any of the parties interested except the petitioners' solicitor to attend. Your obedient servant, JOSHUA BIRD ALLER, Chief Clerk.

JURIES IN COMPENSATION CASES.—The alleged injustice of juries in assessing damages for railway accidents was complained of both at the London and North Western and Great Northern meetings. Mr. Moon, at the London and North Western meeting, said they had plenty of cases to prove the unfairness of the existing law as it affected railway companies. As instances he mentioned that a blind man who came into the station hurt his hand by a nail and brought an action; a boy climbed upon one of the company's mantelpieces and pulled it down with his weight, and they had to pay 150*l.* damages. Col. Packe, at the Great Northern meeting, referred particularly to the "Warren" case, in which a lady obtained 1700*l.* damages for falling on a carpet.

MARITIME LAW.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

MORTGAGE—ARREST OF SHIP.—The mortgagee of four sixty-fourth shares had arrested her in a suit which he subsequently abandoned. The court condemned him in costs but not in damages: (The Egerateia, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 961. Adm. Ct.)

PRACTICE.—Where a suit had been brought in rem, in which the proceeds of the res were insufficient to satisfy plaintiff's claim, it was held that a separate suit in personam might be brought in the Admiralty Court: (The Pet, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 961. Adm. Ct.)

JURISDICTION—COLLISION—PERSONAL INJURY.—A sailor, injured in a collision, brought a suit in rem against the ship. The Admiralty Court was held to have jurisdiction under sect. 7 of the Act of 1861: (The Beta, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 988. Priv. Co.)

PRACTICE—RIGHT TO BEGIN.—Where in a cause of damage defendants pleaded inevitable accident, and denied generally the averments of the petition, but made no charge against plaintiffs, the defendants ought to begin: (The Thomas Lea, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 1017. Adm. Ct.)

SALVAGE—ARREST—COSTS.—Where salvors took out a commission for appraisal and sale after a valuation of the salvaged vessel and cargo at less than 1000*l.* by the Receiver of Wreck, but did not proceed with its execution, and after three weeks gave notice of not proceeding further in the suit: Ordered, that they should pay the costs, and, as they could have ascertained the value in a very short period, that they should pay damages from four days after the issue of the commission till the date of the notice of withdrawal: (The Margaret and Jane, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 1017. Adm. Ct.)

DAMAGE—PLEADING—PARTICULARS.—Where the petition alleged that oilcake was not delivered in good condition according to the terms of the bills of lading, that there was a breach of contract, and that the damage was caused by negligence: The plaintiffs are not bound to set forth the particular acts or the character of the negligence that caused the damage: (The Freedom, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 1018. Adm. Ct.)

DAMAGE—COLLISION—PLEADING—COSTS.—In a cause of damage defendants admitted that their ship was the wrongdoer, but pleaded that the collision was solely caused by the neglect of a pilot, whom they took by compulsion of law. This fact having been proved at the hearing: Held, that the plaintiffs must be condemned in costs: (The Royal Charter, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 1019. Adm. Ct.)

PRACTICE—SALVAGE—COSTS.—Where separate salvage suits are not consolidated, full costs in the later suits will not be granted save under exceptional circumstances: (The Belle of Lages, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 1019. Adm. Ct.)

Some very novel points occasionally come before the law courts, but one raised in an action tried at the Liverpool assizes lately may be considered as unique. The cause had reference to the non-delivery of a cargo of nitrate of soda, and it was pleaded in answer to the claim that the cargo in question had been destroyed by an earthquake off the Peruvian coast. Then arose the knotty point whether the earthquake was an "accident" or a "circumstance," and this has been left for the judges to decide.

COUNTY COURTS.

BATH COUNTY COURT.

(Before C. F. D. CAILLARD, Esq., Judge.)

CRUSE v. STAFFORD.

Lien on judgment.

Bartrum applied to the court, pursuant to notice, to declare that he was entitled to a lien on the judgment recovered at the last court under the provisions of the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127, s. 28.

Clark, who appeared for the defendant, asked his Honour not to entertain the application until after he had heard an action at the suit of Stafford against Cruse.

This was opposed by Bartrum, who characterised the application to postpone it as an attempt to rob his client of the fair result of the miserable verdict of 5*l.* he had received.

His Honour decided to hear the application, and, after Bartrum had cited authorities, his Honour was satisfied as to his power to make the order asked for, and said he was certainly inclined to do so.

Clark urged him not to make the order, and pointed out that if it was made, Mr. Stafford would not obtain his money.

His Honour.—How much? Is it the 17*l.*?

Clark.—Oh, no; it is 4*l.* odd.

After a long discussion, his Honour said that he certainly should make the order in the terms of the section, and he must express his satisfaction at the existence of such a provision, especially in this case, so as to prevent one judgment being set off against another; and, looking to the interest of the Profession, he was certain Mr. Clark would upon consideration see that it was a most equitable order.

JUDGE SMITH ON JURIES.—To the Editor of the Shrewsbury Chronicle.—"Sir,—The judge of our County Court has a strong prejudice against the old English right and custom of trial by jury. An exemplification of this was shown at the County Court in this town, on Thursday, the 12th ult., in the case of Davies v. Dyson. There the plaintiff, as he had a full right to do, required a jury, upon which, as mentioned in your report in to-day's paper, the judge came out with the following remarks:—"His Honour said that out of 14,000 plaintiffs entered during the year 1868 he heard 7769, and out of that number there were only seven jury cases, or less than one in each one thousand plaintiffs. What he wished to know was whether or not they could dispense with the jury in this case. A most grievous injury was sustained by persons being summoned on juries, and he wished to do all he could towards checking the evil. Mr. Clarke, on behalf of the defendant, said he should be most happy to dispense with the services of the jury, and leave the case to his Honour Mr. Widing had every confidence in his Honour but would rather, now that the jury were summoned, have the case heard before them. His Honour stated that he would like to suggest to the Legislature that the best way of doing the business was not to create more judges, but to dispense with juries in civil cases. He had consulted a counsel practising in the Superior Courts on the subject, and he gave it as his opinion that the juries in those courts took up one-third more time than if a case was taken to the judges." Mr. Wilding, with great respect to the court, adhered, consistently with his duty, to his client's wishes. But what does the Judge? No doubt 'wishing to do all he could towards checking the evil,' and to alleviate the 'grievous injury sustained by persons being summoned on juries,' directed the case to be taken last; and, in the face of the fact that the jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff for the full amount claimed, immediately thereupon exclaimed, 'Then I give no costs nor court fees.' In this, however, he was a little too quick, as he was reminded by Mr. Wilding that he had no control over the costs, the action being brought in the court of Queen's Bench, and that in that court the costs followed the event. Now, contrast this with the conduct of Thomas Humphreys, Esq., Deputy Judge, at Llanidloes, on the very same day. A horse case was tried by jury, but not a word of self-laudation or complaint came from the judge, or any unusual order as to costs. And again on Friday, the 13th, at Newtown, also before the same judge, in Shaw v. Jacob, a jury had been applied for by the plaintiff since the last court. Mr. Jenkins, for defendant, took objection to the application having been made subsequent to the adjourned hearing, submitting that it should have been made three clear days before the first hearing. His Honour, however, overruled this objection; and the jury were sworn and tried the case, returning a verdict for plaintiff for 10*l.* damages. Mr. Brough applied for costs, which His Honour granted; and every right-thinking person will say that in granting such application he did his duty. Trial by jury is a right any suitor has; and it is given to him by law, and it is not the province of any judge to try to suppress such right, or if insisted upon to say that the offending party shall be deprived of the costs to which he is fairly entitled, and which should attach to their verdict.—I am, Sir, yours obediently,—JURY. Welshpool, 20th Aug. 1869."

ECCLIASTICAL LAW.

SEQUESTERED LIVINGS.—By the existing law, when the incumbent of a benefice falls into pecuniary embarrassments his creditors may appropriate nearly the whole income of the living till their debts are paid in full. A very small margin is left to defray the necessary expenses of providing for the services of the church; and in no case is the bishop entitled to demand more than 20*l.* a year for that purpose. The incumbent himself and his family can claim of right nothing. Of course it very frequently happens that he continues at his post, and receives the annual sum allotted for the service of the church. But he frequently does not, and it is frequently undesirable that he should. In many cases, too, sequestration of the living is accompanied by suspension of the clergyman. At all events, and whatever be the cause, so soon as he becomes non-resident the creditors are not obliged to allow him a single farthing. It is the consciousness of possessing this hold upon his income which makes it a matter of course for his tradesman to allow him credit. Remove it, or materially impair it, and the poorer clergy will be exposed to the same kind of inconvenience as would have beset the working man had the power of imprisonment for contempt been withdrawn from the County Court judges. Yet this is what the Earl of Harrowby proposes to do, and to do in the interests of the Church. According to this Bill no living worth less than 300*l.* a year is to be liable to sequestration at all, and no living worth less than 500*l.* a year is liable to sequestration if the population exceeds 1000. We cannot undertake to say precisely what number of livings would be placed beyond the reach of the law by this clause. But it is certain that a very large proportion of the whole number of livings in England come within one or other of these two categories, and that an immense number of clergymen would, were the Bill to become law, find the relations between themselves and their tradespeople suddenly assume a new character. Nor is this all. The disposal of the funds, in the case of those livings which are left liable to sequestration, is adjusted upon such a scale as will in the majority of instances leave a very small pittance for the creditors. Where the population is less than 1000, 300*l.* a year is to be the bishop's share of the income, to be spent, of course, on providing for the services of the church. But the majority of such livings are not worth more than 400*l.* a year altogether; while many would trench very closely upon the minimum value of 300*l.* Where the population is between 1000 and 3000, the sum set aside for ecclesiastical purposes is to be 500*l.*; where it is over 3000, 600*l.* Clearly, these provisions, if literally carried out, would seldom leave much for the creditors, and frequently nothing at all. And under such circumstances the value of a clergyman's living as security against eventual loss on the part of his butcher, his grocer, and his wine merchant, would be materially diminished. Now credit, of course, may always be abused; and it has been abused by parish clergymen to the great injury of the Church. It has been abused, too, by working men, though that may have hurt only themselves. Still it is just as necessary, if that is all, to a poor clergyman as it is to anybody else. His income, we must remember, though its average value is known, fluctuates from year to year, and where it is derived from glebe such fluctuations may be serious. Many clergymen have no private means, and on the whole it seems not improbable that a good deal of inconvenience might be caused to individuals by the operation of such a measure as this. But, on the other hand, it is still more clear that the Church at large would be a great gainer by it. The shepherd exists for the flock, and not the flock for the shepherd. And the disgraceful condition to which country parishes are occasionally reduced under the existing law is a far greater evil than any hardship which the prevention of it in future might inflict on individual clergymen. These, moreover, ought not to be allowed to mortgage the property of the Church for the gratification of private self-indulgence; and to destroy her usefulness in a parish for perhaps a whole generation, that they may for a few years give good dinners, and go out hunting twice a week. Even less reprehensible modes of spending money become highly culpable when measured by the consequences they produce. Even flower shows, school fêtes, Gothic architecture, irreproachable decorations, all good things in their way, at once become bad things when purchased at the cost we have described. And to place some check upon the facility of running in debt for these objects, which most clergymen enjoy, is so desirable an end that we must allow it to be quite worth the price. It is hard, no doubt, that a prudent man should be refused credit for necessities because extravagant men will avail themselves of it for luxuries. But it is not the only position in the world in which the innocent suffer for the guilty. And sufferers may console themselves with the reflection that their private inconvenience is to an unusual extent a public benefit. We should add that one of the clauses in the Bill enables the bishop to make provision for the incumbent and his family out of the sum allotted to him for ecclesiastical purposes, in those cases where the former is non-resident, and does not take the duty himself. But this is never to exceed one-third of the sum assigned.—Pall Mall Gazette.

BANKRUPTCY LAW.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

BANKRUPTCY—EQUITABLE MORTGAGE—FIXED MACHINERY—RIGHTS OF ASSIGNEES IN BANKRUPTCY AS AGAINST THE MORTGAGEES.—R. and H., who were ironmasters, deposited, by way of equitable mortgage, with their bankers, the lease of their ironworks. Upon the premises were rolling mills, used for rolling iron. These were fixtures, and were admitted to have been included in the mortgage. There were a number of different sets or trains of iron rolls belonging to the mills. The trains were of different sizes according to the size of iron intended to be rolled. Of some of the trains there were duplicates. There were also some rolls which had been made for the mills, but which required further fitting before they could be put into the machine and used. Upon the bankruptcy of R. and H.: Held (reversing the Deputy Commissioner), that all the rolls which had been actually fitted to the machine passed under the mortgage to the mortgagees, as belonging to the machine as part and parcel of it, and forming essential parts of it, but that those rolls which had never been fitted to the machine, and which required something more to be done to them before they were fitted to the machine, did not pass under the mortgage, but went to the assignees in bankruptcy. The proper law to lay down as applicable to this case, was that that which belonged to the machine as part of it was included in the mortgage. On the premises of the bankrupts were also some weighing machines, which were sunk in holes dug in the floor of the factory. The sides of the holes were faced with brickwork, and the machines rested on a flooring of brickwork at the bottom of the holes, but they were not in any way attached to the brickwork: Held (affirming the Deputy Commissioner), that these weighing machines passed to the assignees in bankruptcy. There were also on the bankrupts' premises some long and heavy iron plates called "straightening plates," used for straightening bars of iron when taken out of the furnace. These plates were bedded in the floor of the factory so as to be level with it, and they rested on a platform of brickwork: Held (reversing the Deputy Commissioner), that these plates were included in the mortgage, and did not pass to the assignees in bankruptcy: (Ex parte Astbury; and ex parte Lloyd's Banking Company; Re Richards and Hill, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 997. Chan.)

PLEA OF COMPOSITION-DEED UNDER SECT. 192 OF BANKRUPTCY ACT 1861—CREDITORS WITH SURETIES—EFFECT OF ABSENCE OF RESERVATION OF RIGHTS AGAINST SURETIES.—To an action by the indorsee against the acceptor of a bill of exchange, the defendant pleaded a deed of composition under the 192nd section of the Bankruptcy Act 1861, which contained no reservation of rights against sureties. The plaintiff having replied that the bill was accepted for value and indorsed to him for value, and that if he had assented to the deed he would have discharged the drawers, the defendant rejoined that before the registration of the deed the drawers consented to the plaintiff executing and becoming bound by the deed. The allegation contained in the rejoinder was found by the jury to be proved, and the verdict was entered for the defendant. On motion to enter judgment for the plaintiff non obstante veredicto: Held, that the plaintiff being shown by the replication to be a creditor with sureties, the deed would be vitiated by the absence of a reservation of rights against sureties were it not that the rejoinder obviated this objection by showing that at the time of registration of the deed the drawer's consent had been given. The omission in a deed of composition of a clause reserving the rights of creditors against sureties does not invalidate the deed unless it is shown by averment that there are creditors with sureties: (Poole v. Willats, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 1006. Q. B.)

RIGHT OF SURETY TO OPPOSE—LARGE INTEREST CHARGED ON DISCOUNTING BILLS.—Where 25 per cent. is charged upon bills, the court will not deal with the case as that of ordinary trade creditors. Where a surety is joined with the insolvent and others to a third party, for money advanced to that third party, and nothing has been paid, such surety is not a creditor, and will not be allowed to oppose: (Re Thomas Byrne, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 1019. Ir. Bank.)

Robinson supported bankrupt.

His HONOUR, in giving judgment in this matter, reviewed bankrupt's trading transactions as exposed in the examinations to which he had been subjected. Bankrupt had attributed his failure to dullness of trade, illness, and want of capital, the amount with which he commenced business having been 150*l.* In Nov. 1863, he opened a second place of business, though it now seemed that in October of that year, if his affairs had been investigated, a deficiency of 500*l.* would have been disclosed. In March last, Arthur and Co., warehousemen, of Glasgow, his largest creditors, to whom he owed 600*l.*, sent two accountants to inquire into his position, who, upon taking stock, advised him to make an assignment; and, on his refusal, urged him to allow some one to receive the takings, and superintend the business, he being himself disabled by illness from giving it his personal superintendence. That he also refused to do, the consequence being that he persisted in carrying on the trade for another month, without any account being kept of the takings during the interval since the creditors' accountant took stock. It appears that some person was left in charge to manage, or rather mismanage, the business, but the goods were either sold at a nominal price, or given away, of which the bankrupt, however, professed ignorance; and the person in charge was fined by the magistrates for creating a disturbance by throwing hats out of the window. His Honour, however, was of opinion, that the charges which had been preferred against bankrupt under several sections of the misdemeanour clause (221st) of the Act could not be substantiated, but he was quite satisfied that bankrupt had been guilty of offences under the 159th clause of the statute. He had been guilty of unjustifiable extravagance, and of an entire omission to keep any books of account. It was difficult to resist

LAW LIBRARY.

In 1344 the Parliament of Paris provided for the creation of a novitiate for advocates, and in the resolution describes three classes, consulting advocates, pleaders, and listeners. What were the precise functions of these last we are unable to say; but each had its own robes, like the sergeants and barristers of our own Bar.

Of these the first were the highest in professional rank, being of at least ten years standing. They wore a robe of black silk, covered with a scarlet mantle lined with ermine. The pleaders wore a violet gown, the listeners a white one. An ordinance of King John in 1363 ordained that advocates should sign their papers, "that the knowledge and skill of the advocates of our court may appear more clearly, and that they may be more strongly stimulated to write, in a brief, able, and substantial manner." It is further provided that they shall not be heard more than twice in the same cause, and that they shall not repeat in their replies or duplies what they have already said, unless it be absolutely necessary. Thus, even at this early period, the right of reply, and even of duply, was considered as one of the greatest privileges of the Bar; and the right of defence seems to have been as well provided for in the stormy days of King John, when France was exhausted and crippled by the English wars, as it is now, when she is in a position to dictate to Europe under the Imperial despotism of Napoleon III. The advocates in Paris were held in great honour by the Court of Parliament. "They are," says Pasquier, "honoured with the furred hat, which is the true mark of the magistrates of the Palace, and they also give to the more ancient among them a seat on the fleurs-de-lis with the King's Counsel." Advocates of high standing were often consulted by the judges upon difficult questions. In the old style of Parliament they are termed conseillers au parlement, and in the sixteenth century they still preserved the costume belonging to that office; for, in 1514, on the occasion of the entry of Mary, sister of the King of England, into Paris, when the Parliament resolved to go to meet her in scarlet robes and furred hats, the president sent to summon the advocates "to join themselves to the court, well mounted, and clothed in robes of scarlet and furred hats."

Further regulations of the French Bar were made by Charles VII.:

In one, dated 1446, we find it enjoined upon advocates to be as brief as possible in their pleadings and writings, on pain of an arbitrary fine; and in another, dated 1453, they are recommended to be moderate in their fees, both for pleadings and writings, which seems to show that the old regulations restricting them to thirty livres turnois had fallen into disuse. Shortness of pleadings is also enjoined; and, from the repetition of this injunction in almost all the ordinances, it may fairly be inferred that the long-windedness of the Bar had been found a serious obstacle to the efficient administration of justice.

Charles VIII. in 1490, forbade the admission to the Profession of advocates of any person who had not studied in a recognised university for five years, and there proved properly qualified. The buying of any judicial office is forbidden under severe penalties. In the reign of Francis I. the appointment of a public prosecutor with his subordinates deprived the Bar of a considerable part of its emoluments, and the public of its best protection, for, not content with this, prisoners were expressly forbidden to employ counsel.

An ordinance of Henry III. enjoined the Bar to inscribe with their own hands, beneath their signature, the amount of fees they had received. Previously they had made no acknowledgment of their fees, and they refused obedience to the order, which, however, appears perfectly objectionable, and was, in fact, nothing more than that signature of the brief, for the purpose of taxing costs, which is the practice of the English Bar. So far, however, did the French Bar carry their hostility to this ordinance that they marched in a body, two and two, being 407 in number, to lay down the functions of their office, declaring that "they voluntarily abandoned the profession of advocates rather than obey a law injurious to their honour." When the Parliament met there were no advocates. They had "struck," and Paris was in a commotion. But the Bar carried their point, and the obnoxious ordinance was rescinded. The strike lasted from 21st May to the 20th July.

A similar occasion is reported of the Scotch Bar in 1674.

It is noticed that, in the sixteenth century, judicial pleadings were too often disfigured by "a strange marquetrie of French and foreign words, more curious than correct." But was it not so with our own, and was not imperfection of the language the cause? However that may be, English pleadings were never, like the French, "overloaded with long quotations from a variety of authors, sacred and profane, which were intended to display the learning of the advocate."

In this century the Bar came to be formally registered and organised, with a recognized head called the batonnier, and thus was the organisation of the Bar conducted, and so it has continued with trifling alterations:

From a pretty early period in its history the Bar of Paris was accustomed to arrange itself by benches, in order that its members might meet and confer more easily. These benches were placed in the great hall of the Palais de Justice or in the adjacent galleries. In 1711, the advocates, formerly divided into eleven benches, were arranged in twelve. The first was composed almost entirely of seniors, and a few seniors were placed at the head of each of the others, after whom came the younger members, according to the date of their admission into the order. This organisation, however, was found to be very imperfect, and in 1780 the fifth bench contained 101 advocates, the seventh nine, and the eighth 7; while the tenth had 95, and the twelfth 10. In 1781, a reform took place, and the order was divided into ten columns, each containing from fifty to sixty advocates. Each column elected two deputies, whose functions lasted for two years, and who might be re-elected. These deputies from the different columns, along with the former presidents of the Bar, constituted the council of the order, elected its presidents, watched over its roll, and maintained its discipline. The advocates were further divided into three classes—listeners (avocats ecoutants), pleaders (avocats plaidants), and consulting advocates (avocats consultants). According to the ancient practice, the young licentiate from the University was presented to the court by one of the seniors of the Bar, and the president administered to him the oath to observe the laws, which he took standing upright, in his gown, with uncovered head, and right hand uplifted; in short, the ceremony of the oath seems to have been very similar to that at present observed at the Scotch Bar. A minute of the taking of the oath was then drawn up and signed by the senior, or, as he was termed in the olden times, the godfather of the young jurist. After taking the oath, the advocate might assume the gown, but he had not yet the right of pleading. He entered upon a period of probation, called le stage, which, by a decree of May 1751, was extended to four years. Upon the lapse of this period, his name was inscribed in the roll of advocates upon the report of one of the chiefs of his bench or column. The pleaders (avocats plaidants) were highly respected, and had the right not only of appearing in the Courts of Parliament, but also in all the inferior judicatories. The mutual exchange of papers was considered one of the courtesies of the Profession, and, before pleading, the advocates were in the habit of making extracts from their briefs, containing the facts of the case, and communicating them to the opposite counsel. Pleading and consultation for the poor was one of the established rules of the ancient Bar, and every week nine advocates met in order to hold gratuitous consultations on the causes of the poor. The advocates, as at present, spoke with their heads covered, except when they pleaded before the King's Counsel. The consulting advocates—avocats consultarii, as they are termed in the old ordinances—held the highest rank at the Bar. They gave their advice to the pleaders, they regulated the affairs of families, and were intrusted with many matters of the highest moment. They had a bench set apart for them in Parliament, and were entitled to a seat on the fleur-de-lis. The head or president of the French Bar was, and still is termed a batonnier. This title dates back to the middle of the fourteenth century; but for a long time after that period it was an office of little importance. The name is derived from an ancient usage, according to which the staff (baton) of the banner of St. Nicolas, the patron of the confraternity of advocates, was carried at the head of the order in processions and ceremonies. He who carried it was termed batonnier. So late as 1602 however, the dean (doyen) held the first place at French Bar, the batonnier only the second. The latter is mentioned for the first time as the head of the order in 1687; and it is only since July 1868 that he has had a legal title to be considered the head of the Bar. Formerly the senior member of the order, by date of inscription on the roll, used to be elected batonnier. But as the great age of the advocate thus chosen often unfitted him for efficiently discharging the duties of an office the conclusion that such misconduct was wilful, and that his intention was to conceal the true state of his affairs. His Honour thought he should not be doing more than justice to the creditors, or expressing too strongly that disapprobation of the bankrupt's conduct, which had been so properly invited, more especially considering the narrow escape he had had of being brought within the operation of a still more penal clause of the statute than that under which he was acting, if he were wholly to refuse an order of discharge; but he certainly preferred, and probably the creditors would be satisfied with, the adoption of a more lenient alternative. He should, therefore, grant the bankrupt's discharge, but consider it his duty to suspend its operation for a period of twelve months.

Robinson applied for protection for bankrupt. His HONOUR asked if that were opposed. Ritson.—Certainly, my instructions are to oppose everything to the utmost.

His HONOUR thought the practice which he ought to follow was that of the London courts. There where a bankrupt's discharge was suspended for twelve months he was allowed protection for six months, with liberty to apply for a renewal at the end of that period.

After some little discussion, his Honour gave bankrupt protection for three months, at the expiration of which time he could apply for a renewal of it, but on giving due notice to the opposing creditors.

COUNTY COURTS.—In answer to the queries propounded by your correspondent, "A Practitioner in the County Courts," I would reply to his first question, No, decidedly not, the terms of the Act and rules of court not having been, in the first instance, complied with. Secondly, No. The judge's power in such cases ends at the rising of his court, vide rules 130 and 132; but either party may have the registrar's taxation reviewed by the judge: (vide 19 & 20 Vict. c. 108, ss. 34 and 35.)

NOTES AND QUERIES ON POINTS OF PRACTICE.

Queries.

81. CRIMINAL LAW.—A. B. employs C. D. to collect certain rents. Before C. D. has rendered any account, A. B. receives from the chief clerk in bankruptcy a notice that C. D. has executed an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, and that A. B. is included as a creditor. A. B. can only conclude that C. D. has received the rents, and appropriated the money to his own use. Is A. B. in a position to commence criminal proceedings against C. D.? JOHN W. WILLIAMS.

82. SALE BY SHERIFF.—Will any reader inform me what is the fixed charge allowed to auctioneers by the sheriff for sale of furniture and effects in a house? G. C. M.

Answers.

(Q. 76.) MORTGAGE.—Where the operative words of a deed are contradictory to the covenants and powers, the former shall take the precedence. Lord St. Leonards, in his treatise on Powers, says, "A seisin must be raised commensurate with the estates authorised to be created under the power." In the case in question there B. having no seisin is unable to grant any freehold estate, much less a fee simple: (Vide Sugden's Treatise on Powers, 5th edit., p. 140.)

S. Z. E.

— It seems to me that this case is very nearly allied to that put in the LAW TIMES of 21st Aug. by "A. W. Deacon" (Q. 70), and will admit of the same remark as to repugnant clauses. I do not think that B. could alienate for a greater estate than that given to him by the operative part of the mortgage, viz., 500 years. Probably a court, in construing such a deed, would regard the power to sell and convey in fee simple as a mistake, and contrary to the intention of the mortgagor.

W. P.

(Q. 77.) LANDLORD AND TENANT.—Notwithstanding the illegality of the notice, the fact of A. having accepted the rent and the key would be a bar to his recovering from B. for use and occupation after such an act.

W. P.

(Q. 78.) ARTICLED CLERK.—In my opinion an articulated clerk who has entered into such a contract is only bound to perform it in a reasonable manner. At all events, if a clerk were unreasonably compelled to "act as a shorthand writer," to the exclusion of his other necessary studies, the principal would not be carrying out his covenant (which I believe is generally inserted in articles) "to teach and instruct by the best ways and means he may or can, and to the utmost of his ability," his clerk, "in the practice or profession of an attorney at law and a solicitor in Chancery."

W. P.

requiring watchfulness and tact in no ordinary degree, the order determined to give up this principle of election. The bâtonnier is chosen for one year only; but since 1830 it has been usual, at the close of his first term of office, to re-elect him for a second year. The bâtonnier has the privilege of making his business appointments at his own residence, even with those who are his seniors at the Bar. The title of dean (doyen) belongs to the senior member of the Bar inscribed on the roll; but it confers no other privilege than that arising from seniority. The bâtonnier, the former bâtonniers, and the deputies from the columns form a council, which meets in the Advocates' Library, and whose chief object is the preservation of the discipline of the order. The bâtonnier himself adjudicates upon trifling complaints against members of the Bar; but if the matter is of consequence, he reports it to the council. If the suspension of a member, or the erasure of his name from the roll, is to be deliberated on, the bâtonnier, after examining into the matter, reports to the Crown counsel, and their decision is registered. In the most important and serious cases, the court is petitioned to give judgment in terms of the requisitions of the bâtonnier, and the conclusions of the Crown counsel. At the expiration of his term of office, the bâtonnier makes up the roll of advocates, with the assistance of the former bâtonnier and the deputies, and deposits it in the register before the 9th of May.

PROMOTIONS & APPOINTMENTS

The Right Honourable Sir William Bovill, Knight, Lord Chief Justice of Her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas at Westminster, has appointed John George Thompson, of Stockton-on-Tees, in the county of Durham, gentleman, to be one of the Perpetual Commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women, under the Act passed for the Abolition of Fines and Recoveries, and for the Substitution of more Simple Modes of Assurance.

LEGAL NEWS.

A SINGULAR WILL CASE.—The Royal Court of Jersey have given judgment in a curious will case, which involved the question, never before brought under the notice of the court, whether the sentence of a French criminal court could be made operative in the island of Jersey in a civil suit. The particulars of the case, which excited considerable interest, were as follows:—On the 18th May 1847, Jean Pierre Maigné (under the name of Jean Maigné), was, by a sentence of the Criminal Assizes of Ille et Vilaine, held at the Palais de Justice at Rennes, condemned to penal servitude for life (travaux forcés à perpétuité), Maigné, who was tried during his absence, managed to escape to Jersey, where, with his wife, he lived till his death in Oct. 1862. According to the French penal code this condemnation carries with it civil death, and the 25th article of the code defines the effect of this to be that the condemned person loses all the property he possesses, which falls to his heirs in the same manner as though he had died a natural death, and had left no will. He is also incapacitated from making a will, or receiving property bequeathed to him under a will, and his marriage is dissolved so far as all civil rights are concerned, leaving his wife and heirs to the free exercise of all the rights which his natural death would give them. Maigné and his wife, after their arrival in Jersey, possessed some money, which was placed in the name of the wife in the Post Office Savings Bank, and part in the Commercial Bank, the husband, however, drawing upon the amounts. The wife died in May 1860, and at the time of the death of the husband in Oct. 1860, there was in the savings bank the sum of 201. 9s. 3d., and in the Commercial Bank 108l. 6s. 8d. By his will Maigné bequeathed this money to be divided among the French poor residing in Jersey, and appointed the Rev. J. F. Volckeryck, Roman Catholic priest at St. Helier's, Jersey, trustee for the same. An injunction was served upon the banks not to pay over the moneys, and the will was attacked by Michel Pierre Bertel, principal heir of Maigné's wife, née Julienne Jeanne Bertel, on the ground that the said will was invalid, and further, that it had been made at the suggestion of the defendant, who had used his influence under his office of confessor. No evidence of this point was, however, tendered, and the Attorney-General, who opposed for the trustee, contended that the French law was not applicable to Jersey, and that inasmuch as the deceased had resided there for several years, and that the will had been duly registered according to the laws of the island, the court was bound to consider the case and decide thereon agreeably to Jersey law and custom, losing sight altogether of the French law and its bearing on the case. The case was heard two months ago, and judgment has been given in favour of the defendant, the court considering that the deceased, having resided so long in Jersey, had become amenable to its laws, and further, that the civil death which followed as a consequence of the French sentence, though it might be operative in France, could not extend to Jersey, especially when the wife of the deceased did not take the benefit of the French sentence, but continued to live with her husband till her death. An appeal against the judgment was put in.

WAUGH.—On the 24th ult., aged 24, George Waugh, barrister,¹ New-square, Lincoln's-inn, and elder son of George Waugh, Queensborough-terrace and Regent-street.

unnatural and inconsistent with facts, and diametrically opposed to the decision in Nepean v. Knight.

The very recent case of Reg. v. Lumley, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 454, deals with this vexed question in a highly satisfactory manner, and is, we think, conclusive on the subject. The question was whether on the trial of a wife for bigamy, evidence that the first husband was alive in 1843, four years before the date of the second marriage, but that he had not since been heard of, justified the Judge's direction to the jury that the first husband must be presumed to have been living at the date of the second marriage.

The court held that it did not, and as the reasoning of the judgment seems to apply to civil as well as criminal cases, we venture to make the following quotation from it:—"In an indictment for bigamy it is incumbent on the prosecution to prove to the satisfaction of the jury that the husband or wife (as the case may be) was alive at the date of the second marriage. That is purely a question of fact. The existence of the party at an antecedent period may or may not afford a reasonable inference that he was living at a subsequent date. If, for example, it were proved that he was in good health on the day preceding the second marriage, the inference would be strong—almost irresistible—that he was living on the latter day; and the jury would in all probability find that he was so. If, on the other hand, it were proved that he was then in a dying condition, and nothing further was proved, they would probably decline to draw that inference. Now the question is entirely for the jury. The law makes no presumption either way."

GENERAL AVERAGE.

THE NEW LAW AND PRACTICE IN RESPECT OF JETTISON.

WE proceed to lay before our readers for their information the following brief exposition of the peculiar state of the law and practice existing at the present moment in regard to jettison.

If any of the goods forming part of a ship's cargo be thrown overboard for the general safety of ship, freight, and cargo, the amount insured upon these jettisoned goods is now held to be recoverable from the underwriters on an ordinary policy of marine insurance.

The amount insured on the freight of the jettisoned goods is likewise recoverable from the underwriters on freight.

The same rule applies in a different manner to the loss of a ship's masts or sails cut away, or anchors slipped from for the general safety. The entire cost of replacing them is recoverable from the insurers of the ship.

The underwriters, having in the first instance paid the entire loss (instead of paying only the proportion of it, according to the old-established principles of general average), are then entitled to recoup themselves as they best can, the proportions of the loss falling upon the owners of the other property rescued from total loss by the voluntary loss of the property jettisoned, cut away, or slipped from.

According to the opinion of various eminent lawyers, the effect of this new rule of law is to constitute such general average loss a total loss of part, which is now determined in law to be a particular average.

Adopting this view of the law as it at present stands, if the policy of insurance assumes all risks, the total general average loss may be recovered from the insurers. But if the policy is "warranted free from particular average," the entire general average loss cannot be recovered from the insurers; it is supposed, however, that in such a case they would be liable for the proportion of the general average loss attaching to the property insured.

Under a policy on goods warranted free from particular average, we repeat, it is now generally understood that the underwriters are not liable for the amount insured on goods jettisoned, but their liability for the proportion of the net market value, and freight of them has, at all events, never yet been disputed.

It further results from all this, that where a policy is warranted free from particular average under 3 per cent., and damage or partial loss accidentally sustained by sea perils does not amount of itself to 3 per cent., whether in the case of an insurance on ship, freight, or goods, the general average loss may be and is now in practice added to the particular average properly so called, to make the claim recoverable if the general average, and particular average losses together amount to 3 per cent.

The leading American case, with which the judgment in Dickinson v. Jardine is mistakenly thought to be in conformity, determined that the total general average claim for jettison was recoverable on a policy of insurance on goods "warranted free from particular average."

The present rule of English law, as already noticed, is generally understood to be that the total amount insured on jettisoned goods is chargeable against the underwriters only if the policy takes the risk of particular average.

If goods are insured "free from particular average," and half of them be necessarily sold in a sea-damaged condition at a port of refuge, to prevent their utter loss, there is no recourse against the underwriters if the other half of the goods should arrive in safety at the port of destination; but if the safe arrival of the ship with the residue of the cargo be obtained by the jettison of the remaining half of the goods insured, the underwriters are now liable for a total loss of all the goods insured, although the total loss of ship, freight and cargo, with the exception of what was previously lost by the sale of the sea damaged goods, has been avoided by means of the jettison.

When jettison of goods takes place near the loading port, and the ship puts back to that port, and the amount of the jettison is specifically ascertained, the underwriters may be called on to pay a total loss of the amount insured on the goods thrown overboard.

If the goods are fully insured and valued in the policy at a certain amount, including expected profit and freight advanced, at the port of shipment, but the profit and freight are not specified in the policy as being included in the insured value, the underwriters may be required to pay a total loss of the invoice cost, profits, and prepaid freight of the jettisoned goods.

The merchant may then ship other goods instead of them, and ultimately, on the arrival of the ship and cargo at the port of destination, realise a second time the profit and prepaid freight by the sale of these other goods.

The right of the merchant in such a case to ship other goods is always, in practice, admitted, and its equity is obvious.

The merchant has, of course, the choice of claiming from his underwriters the amount insured, or from the contributors the market value of the goods thrown overboard, just as it may be for his pecuniary benefit to avoid a loss of market when the prices have fallen, or to reap for himself the profit on a gaining market.

If the captain of the ship at a foreign port of destination collects the jettison as general average, the assured in this country is now entitled, in case the market was a losing one, to claim the amount insured and let the underwriters take the benefit of the contributions.

LAND LAW REFORM.

It is plain now from the comments of the Irish press that the most extravagant demands are preferred by the leaders of the movement for "eliminating landlords and capitalists from the social organization," and that their followers confidently anticipate the speedy realisation of the dream. The Weekly News makes no secret of the purposes of its party. "It is idle any longer to talk of compensation for improvements," it says, "equally illusive would be a bill for granting fixity of tenure at impartially regulated rents." "Our efforts must not end with the overthrow of landlord power," it says in another place; "but they may well commence with it. Let it be this year for a land question, the next for repeal." The nation demands "fixity of tenure at impartially regulated rents." "Up for the land" it adds; "three millions of Irish Christian ryots must enjoy at least the protection and security extended to the dusky Asiatic worshippers of Vishnu. There must be an end for ever to the blasphemous feudal theory of absolute irresponsible individual dominion over the land."

It is of course useless to propose improvements to those whose aim is not reform but revolution; who contemplate confiscation and not regulation. But it is important clearly to understand what the extreme demands are, because not a few speakers and writers on this side of the Channel are advocating revolutionary measures in Ireland on the plausible fallacy that there are special circumstances that would justify a confiscation of the rights of property there, although the principle might be indefensible here. But in very truth there is no such difference; the principles that are assailed in Ireland are of universal application. They lie at the foundation of civilised society. It is certain that if confiscation be adopted in Ireland, its adoption will soon come to be advocated in England, and with the same result. Whatever is done with the land laws in the sister country next year will be done at home within ten years. The taste of plunder sharpens the appetite for more. Confiscation on one side of the Channel will assuredly be followed by confiscation on the other. Moreover, who doubts that a great majority of those who cry out for fixity of tenure in Ireland are moved mainly by the hope that the example there will be followed here.

But revolutionary demands are no sufficient reason for refusing reasonable reforms; on the contrary, the surest way to defeat the designs of anarchists is to make the defensive position tenable by strengthening its weakest points. Our land laws are very far from perfect; they are capable of considerable improvement, though the practical evils resulting from their defects are grossly over estimated. Let us take each in turn.

Foremost in pretence, though least in the actual esteem of the League, is the law of primogeniture, or, in a less obnoxious phrase, the law that prescribes the devolution of a freehold to the eldest son, or next heir, if the owner dies intestate. A Bill was read a second time in the House of Commons last session to remove this anomaly, and to require that a freehold shall, in such case, pass, like a leasehold and all personal estate, under the Statute of Distributions. The arguments on both sides were weighty. The burden of proof was upon those who supported the exception. Their strongest point was the inconvenience of a division of small properties, which are not only the most numerous, but the very cases in which the owners would most frequently omit to make a will. Take, for instance, the common case of one house being the sole property of the intestate. It cannot be divided bodily. It must be sold and pass away from the family. The answer, however, to this pathetic appeal is twofold; first, if the owner is really desirous to keep it in the family, he can readily do so by making a will; secondly, a considerable portion of the existing houses are of leasehold tenure and pass under the Statute of Distributions, and no serious inconvenience is found to result in practice.

In fact, the answer to every objection to the assimilation of the law for the devolution of real and personal property is that the owner may deal with it as he pleases. Knowing how the law will dispose of it for him if he fails to make a will, it may be fairly presumed that by leaving the law to take its course he intends that destination of it. Nor is there any injustice in this. The heir-at-law has no moral right to the inheritance of the whole estate. And there is in it a practical absurdity; for, if part of the estate chances to be leasehold, that part will be divided among the next of kin, while the freehold will go en bloc to the heir-at-law. The case is frequent, of two adjoining houses passing, the one because it is freehold, to the eldest son, the other, because it is leasehold for 999 years, is divided among the family.

The hope of the promoters of the Bill that it will break up large landed estates and pull down the landed interest is as vain as are the fears of its opponents. It will have no perceptible effect, for the great landowners who desire to keep up their families will only be more careful to make a will. The lawyers will profit somewhat by the increased number of wills they will be called upon to make, and this is all.

The law of primogeniture may, therefore, be abandoned without fear or reluctance, and it is the first of the Land Law Reforms that presents itself for practical solution. It would be well if the landowners would themselves take the initiative and introduce their own measure to the House of Lords immediately on the commencement of the next session.

THE IRISH LAND QUESTION.

A CORRESPONDENT of a contemporary has suggested an ingenious scheme for the settlement of this question, assuming that the claims preferred by the tenants for compensation for unexhausted improvements are genuine, and not, as may be reasonably suspected, merely plausible pretences under which to make an attack upon ownership, with a view to the transfer of the land itself from the Saxon to the Celt. But all reasonable and practical plans for determining the dispute, so far as it concerns the relationship of landlord and tenant, are worthy of consideration, and therefore we present this one, which has, at least, the advantage of novelty:

Sir.—The popular notion here and in Ireland is that there is but one, and only one, method by which the land question can be permanently and safely settled, and that is, to pass a law that practically would transfer the land from the owner to the tenant; and this notion has received no little countenance from members of Parliament and Irish "national" journalists. There is, I beg to submit, a simpler and safer mode of settling the Irish land question, and it has the merit of avoiding the obstructions that seem to block the way towards anything like a satisfactory solution of the difficulty: it wrongs no class; on the contrary, it alike guards and secures the interests and rights of both landlord and tenant. Further, I have propounded it to proprietors and tenants, during the last few months, in various parts of Ireland, and they declared that such a mode of settlement would be equally satisfactory. It is this; as legislation is certain to take place on the subject, let it be enacted that on a tenant taking a farm a valuation be made of its worth per acre, and that valuation to be registered by a public officer, with the signatures of the landlord and tenant attached, declarative of their agreement as to its fairness. That when the tenant leaves the farm, either on his own or the landlord's notice, the valuation be retaken, and if the farm has been increased in value by the tenant, either by his labour or outlay, or both, that the landlord pay him the difference between the first and second valuation; but if the second valuation shows that the land has deteriorated in value, owing to the mode in which it has been worked, or neglected by the tenant, that the difference between the two valuations be paid by the tenant to the landlord. This would both be "tenant-right" and "landlord-right." The tenant, secure in being repaid for his outlay, would improve his holding; while the landlord would be preserved from the common folly in Ireland of letting the land to the highest bidder, and would only let it to a tenant whose character and means would afford him security in the event of his land sustaining injury. The plan adopted, no tenant would care for a lease, but would prefer to be free to carry his capital and his experience to any favourable market that might open for their employment; and the landlord would be careful not to trouble a tenant whose improvement of his farm was the best possible security for the regular payment of the rent. The working out of the details associated with such a measure would not be difficult. Its adoption would harmonise seemingly conflicting interests, would give prosperity to the country, and cut the ground from under the feet of the demagogues.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
A TRAVELLER.

THE POLICE.

At the late Middlesex Sessions a man was indicted for a violent assault on a policeman. The defence was that the policeman was tipsy and trod on the toes of the defendant, who was drunk, and thence the struggle and the injury. Witnesses were called on both sides who directly contradicted each other as to the facts. The Deputy-Assistant Judge told the jury there was perjury on one side or the other, and they must determine which they would believe, the policeman or the defendant's witnesses; if the story of the former was true, the assault was clearly proved; but if the latter were telling the truth, there could have been no assault at all, inasmuch as, according to them, the policeman was not within fifteen yards of the prisoner when he fell. The jury acquitted the prisoner, and the audience applauded.

This and other cases tried during those sessions, exhibited a remarkable and somewhat alarming state of the public mind in relation to the protectors of the public peace and property. The "roughs" are naturally pleased at the opportunity for paying off the old grudge they have against their official enemies, and they do not scruple to avail themselves of it. There is no limit to their defiance of the constable and their contempt for the law. Knowing that the public prejudice is running against their foes, they count, not altogether wrongly, on the absence of interference, if not on positive sympathy. A sensible letter in the Times, from a chief constable, indicates the course which, under such circumstances, it would be prudent for the police to pursue, and we commend it to all who have the control of the police everywhere:

Sir,—I shall feel glad if you will allow me a few words on police management, apropos of the case of the three bank clerks which has earned considerable notoriety. As you are aware, the Town Police Clauses Act, and other Acts of a local application, invest the police of towns with the power of arresting any person "found committing" any offence. This is, no doubt, necessary to some extent, but very great care should be taken by the heads of police that this power is not abused. During my service (extending over a dozen years) I have found a rather dangerous tendency among the police, and especially among the "young hands," to exercise to the utmost this summary mode of dealing with offenders. Having found that in practice so much depends upon having the confidence of the public, I issued an order some time ago directing the force of which I am the head not to arrest any person for a petty offence where the name and address of the person are known, or can be obtained, and where the disturbance or offence ceases, and is not likely to be renewed. Such cases are proceeded against by complaint and summons. The result has been most satisfactory. Fewer petty assaults upon the police have been committed, and there is a praiseworthy disposition among the public to assist a policeman when occasion requires it. Englishmen, excluding the criminal classes, of course, are a law-abiding people, and it is extremely important that public confidence in the police should not be disturbed. Where a person commits, in a moment of irritation, perhaps, some petty offence, to proceed by summons would answer every purpose. No man would run the risk of disobeying a summons, when at the most, perhaps, a fine of a few shillings would follow conviction. On the other hand, the police should, as far as possible, respect the feelings of a man who, at the worst, commits an offence involving no moral obliquity. If this course had been adopted with the three clerks, the disturbance (if disturbance there was) in the Haymarket would not have lasted five minutes longer, and the case would probably never have been heard of outside the walls of the Marlborough-street Police-court.—Yours obediently,
A BOROUGH CHIEF CONSTABLE.

THE NEW LAWS OF THE SESSION.

XXII.—COURTS OF JUSTICE SALARIES AND FUNDS.

(32 & 33 Vict. c. 91.)

THE object of the Act is to transfer the fee fund in Chancery and Bankruptcy, and the charges thereon, to the Consolidated Fund.

All the funds now standing in the name of the Accountant-General are to be transferred to the Bank of England, on order of the Lord Chancellor. The suitors are to be indemnified out of the Consolidated Fund.

If at any future time the cash balance to the account of the Accountant-General should fall below 300,000*l.*, a sufficient sum shall be transferred to that account to raise it to 500,000*l.*

When the amount exceeds 500,000*l.*, the excess is to be paid over to the Consolidated Fund.

The costs and other income of the Court of Chancery are to be paid in like manner.

Similar provisions are made for the Bankruptcy Court fund.

The salaries of Judges, now charged in the Suits' Fund, are henceforth to be paid out of the Consolidated Fund. Compensations, pensions, salaries, &c., charged on the said fund, are to be placed on the annual votes.

The Treasury may, with the concurrence of the Lord Chancellor, by order, at any time, increase or diminish the number of officers of the court. And any appointments made after the passing of the Act are to be subject to any future regulations, or to the abolition or modification of the office.

The Court of Bankruptcy and the Court for Relief of Insolvent Debtors in Carey-street are, with their sites, to continue vested in the Commissioners of Works, and appropriated as the Treasury, with the concurrence of the Lord Chancellor, may from time to time direct. The like provision is made for the district courts.

The Lord Chancellor, with the consent of the Lords Justices, Master of the Rolls, and Vice-Chancellors, or any three of them, and with the concurrence of the Treasury, may by order increase, reduce, or abolish and make new fees to be taken in proceedings in the Court of Chancery. The Judge of the Admiralty Court may do the like there, and the Lord Chancellor in the Court of Bankruptcy.

Fees are to be taken by stamps, either impressed or adhesive, and their use is to be regulated by Treasury orders. Documents not properly stamped are to be invalid.

The receipts from stamps are to be paid to the Consolidated Fund.

Annual accounts of the expenditure of the courts are to be published by the Treasury, which are to show the surplus or deficit, with a comparison for two years. They are to be laid annually before Parliament.

The Lord Chancellor may from time to time make orders for carrying the Act into effect, and the Treasury may make regulations.

A list of repealed Acts and parts of Acts is contained in the schedule.

It comes into operation on Oct. 1st, and is to be cited as "The Courts of Justice Salaries and Funds Act 1869."

THE EFFECT OF NATURALISATION IN FRANCE.

MR. DAVENPORT HILL, Q.C., has addressed an interesting paper to the Social Science Association on the question whether allegiance by birth is affected in England by naturalisation in France, founded upon a correspondence which passed in 1848 between Lord BROUGHAM and M. CREMIEUX, the Republican Minister of Justice, when the former applied for letters of naturalisation. The subject has been brought forward by reason of the recently published libel of Lord CAMPBELL on the memory of Lord BROUGHAM.

Mr. HILL tells us that a perusal of the correspondence will show that M. CREMIEUX believed, or affected to believe, that the law of France was so hostile to a double allegiance that it would not allow a foreigner to be naturalised unless he renounced allegiance to his native country; although he appears to have thought that such express renunciation was not absolutely necessary, as being in fact implied by asking for and accepting a French act of naturalisation.

In addition to this correspondence Mr. HILL sets out a letter received from a French Judge, and then deals with Lord CAMPBELL and the English law.

"The glaring fallacy, not to say the absurdity of the doctrine," he says, "makes us carefully scan the terms which Lord CAMPBELL uses respecting it, that we may distinguish between his representation of the ridicule which it had been the means of casting upon Lord BROUGHAM, and his own private opinion as to the just foundation of such ridicule. That the acceptance by an Englishman of naturalisation in France or elsewhere in time of peace, should be held an offence against the law of England by so profound and accomplished a lawyer as Lord CAMPBELL most undoubtedly was, is a proposition I cannot bring myself to adopt. Double allegiance is a status perfectly well known to our law; and indeed sometimes forced upon a British subject by statute; as where the son, or even grandson, of an Englishman is born abroad, he still continues a British subject, as well as a citizen of the country in which his birth takes place. The case of Murray v. Wilson, 1 B. & P. 443, may be cited to show that our law sometimes clothes an Englishman born in England, who has by his own act obtained naturalisation abroad, with privileges pertaining by treaty to foreigners, even while it denies them to our own fellow subjects bearing no other character. In that case two Englishmen naturalized in the United States dispatched an American vessel bound thence to British India at a time when no English vessel could double the Cape of Good Hope or Cape Horn without a licence from the East India Company, which this vessel did not possess. The Court of King's Bench, in a judgment pronounced by Lord KENYON, decided the voyage to lawful, and the judgment was confirmed by the Exchequer Chamber on writ of error. Thus it was solemnly determined to be conformable to law for a British subject to obtain from a foreign state a privilege exempting him from a restriction binding on all his fellow-countryman who had been satisfied to remain Englishmen and nothing more."

"But suppose Lord BROUGHAM had complied with the suggestion of the French Minister, and as far as in him lay had renounced his country, what then? Doubtless the reputation of any Englishman would most grievously suffer who should attempt utterly to divest himself of his English nationality. But Lord BROUGHAM, a lawyer, and as a lawyer knowing that he could not by any act of his own shake off his allegiance of birth, would by accepting the invitation of his insidious correspondent have covered himself with infamy.

"If, then, it be clear, as it undoubtedly is, that the mere acceptance of a French Act of Naturalisation would be harmless in England, would the proposed renunciation have given it force? My own firm belief is that it would have had no such effect. That a British subject acting upon his new allegiance may, under certain circumstances, find himself so placed that he cannot, so far as regards that particular position, avail himself of his English rights, is not to be disputed. Yet, under any circumstances, the requirement of M. CREMIEUX was as futile as it was indecent, except so far as it placed Lord BROUGHAM in a position in which as a man of honour he could proceed no further. Whether or not the latter knew that the minister's dilemma was unjustified by both the law and practice of the French Chancery is more than I can say. But it was not for him to follow the example of M. CREMIEUX, and charge the French Minister of Justice with ignorance of the law of France; or vainly attempt to force a décret of naturalisation (which he could not demand as of right) from a Government not disposed to grant it."

Mr. HILL concludes by saying that, entertaining a confident hope that the association will see fit to adopt the view laid before them, he is persuaded they will take means to vindicate such part of the legal reputation of Lord BROUGHAM as stands impeached by the combined efforts of M. CREMIEUX and Lord CAMPBELL.

In reply, the Standing Committee on Jurisprudence, adopted the following report: "The sub-committee appointed to consider Mr. Commissioner HILL's pamphlet on the remarks of Lord CAMPBELL on Lord BROUGHAM, report that they have considered the pamphlet and recommend,—That the thanks of the Association be conveyed to Mr. Commissioner HILL for his very able and valuable communication respecting Lord BROUGHAM's legal position in applying for the privileges of French citizenship, and the aspersions cast upon him with reference to that application contained in Lord CAMPBELL's Life of Lord Brougham. But the committee are of opinion that Lord CAMPBELL's judgment of Lord BROUGHAM's conduct on this or any other occasion has not met with such credence as to call for a vindication of Lord BROUGHAM's memory at the hands of the Association."

And they add the following resolution:—"That the committee is of opinion that to take any steps in refutation of the remarks made by Lord CAMPBELL would be to give them an importance and a weight which is at once greater than that which the public has attached to them and greater than they themselves deserve."

A PUBLIC PROSECUTOR.

THIS question will be formally mooted in the next Parliament. There is much to be said on both sides. It is not nearly so easy of solution as those who write and talk about it so glibly appear to suppose. Experience is not altogether in its favour, and arguments of great weight are to be produced against it. The system is by no means popular in France, where it is alleged to work too well for the interests of the powers that be. Undoubtedly it may be made the instrument of a tyrannical Government, and although, so long as our present institutions endure, there is little danger to individual liberty from official power, it must be remembered that we hold that liberty by a very frail tenure. Democracy is rapidly advancing, and where Democracy is, individual liberty perishes. The public prosecutor of a democratic despotism would be a terrible engine. Forethought would counsel caution in doing anything under present circumstances that would increase the power of the Government, which a very small further advance in the direction to which it is marching, will convert into the most intolerable and intolerant of all tyrannies—the tyranny of numbers over intelligence and property.

But as the question will certainly be discussed, it will be as well for the lawyers to be prepared to take part in it, and for this purpose it is needful to know upon what system prosecutions are conducted in other countries. We are indebted to correspondents of the Pall-Mall Gazette for valuable information upon the systems in Scotland and in America, which will be equally useful for reading and for reference. This is the scheme for PUBLIC PROSECUTION IN SCOTLAND.

Sir,—I may supplement the account given in your columns by "An American" of the system of criminal jurisdiction in the United States, by an outline of the corresponding system in force nearer home. In Scotland the arrangements for investigating and prosecuting crimes are very similar to those of America, but they are adapted to a centralised instead of a federal form of institution. The chief criminal court is called the High Court of Justiciary, consisting of the same judges as the Supreme Civil Court. It sits in Edinburgh generally once a week, and the members go on circuit, of which there are three, twice a year. In each county the sheriff performs the duties both of County Court judge and of stipendiary magistrate. The magistrates of towns and the justices of the peace of counties have cognizance only of trifling offences. The chief prosecutor is the Lord Advocate, who, for this and multifarious other duties, political and civil, receives a salary of about 2500*l.*, while the Solicitor-General, his lieutenant, is paid about half that amount. Subordinate to these are four advocate-deputies, one attached to the High Court, and one to each circuit, who are selected by the Lord Advocate from the junior bar, each paid 400*l.* a year, with hopes of promotion to a sheriffship, which does not exclude them from practice or from higher advancement. An Edinburgh solicitor is appointed to hold the office of "Crown agent." In each county a local attorney is appointed also by the Crown, who has the name of "procurator fiscal" (civil lawyers will easily recognise the derivation), or popularly the "fiscal." Boroughs and the justices of the peace have also their own fiscals.

When information reaches the fiscal, whether from the police, private persons, or rumour, of a crime having been committed, he proceeds, if necessary, to the spot, makes a preliminary investigation, and then applies to a magistrate for a warrant to apprehend the suspected criminal. Assuming the offence to be of some gravity, the accused is taken before the sheriff, sitting in private, and examined, not severely as in France, but generally and fairly, and with warning that his answers may be used against him. His deposition is taken down in writing, authenticated by the sheriff, and is called his "declaration." Other witnesses are examined in the same way by the fiscal before the sheriff, always in private, and their evidence at this stage is called their "pre-cognition." That this investigation should be in private is the main blot upon the system, for though alleged to favour the detection of crime, it really impedes that object by excluding the evidence which might be volunteered if the character of the facts were publicly known. Besides, it places an undoubtedly dangerous power in the hands of the authorities, who may at pleasure detain anyone upon small evidence, or may make the investigation a sham if they are inclined to favour the accused. But privacy is obviously no essential part of the system, and this objectionable feature might be easily removed in Scotland, as it certainly would not be admitted in England. On the conclusion of the examination, during which the accused may be committed as often as necessary for further evidence, the sheriff decides whether he shall be committed for trial or set at liberty. If committed, the whole recognitions are at once transmitted to the Crown agent in Edinburgh, by whom they are submitted to the advocate-depute of the circuit for his consideration. Indeed, at any stage of the investigation the local fiscal may apply to this officer for instructions or guidance. If the case presents any elements of difficulty, the advocate-depute takes it to consultation with the Lord Advocate or Solicitor-General. He then determines whether the evidence is sufficient to require the accused to be put on trial, and if he thinks it does not he orders him to be discharged. If the evidence, however, appears to be sufficient, the advocate-depute considers whether the case should be tried before the sheriff or at the assizes, and directs accordingly. If before the sheriff, the prosecution is generally conducted by the local fiscal, aided sometimes by an Edinburgh barrister, who holds the subordinate appointment of "depute for the sheriff courts." If the trial is to be at Edinburgh or on circuit, the advocate-depute for the district draws the indictment and conducts the trial. The indictment, with a list of the witnesses and of the jury panel, must be served on the accused, whether in prison or not, at least fifteen days before trial. At the trial every witness is excluded from the court till the moment that his evidence is required. If a prisoner has not retained counsel the court in every case will assign him counsel at the Bar; but there is a special provision by which those who are too poor may obtain the services of both attorney and counsel gratuitously for the preparation as well as the conduct of the defence. Such are the arrangements under which trials of importance are conducted, and it need only be observed that in the case of small offences the reference to Crown counsel does not take place, but the fiscal prosecutes on his own responsibility. In all cases he is liable in damages for abuse of powers at any stage of the proceedings. If the proper authorities decline to prosecute, any private individual may prosecute, on first obtaining leave of the Lord Advocate, which is given as of course.

It will be seen that this system is very complete, and at the same time very cheap. Though chiefly directed by members of the junior bar (of from two to ten years' standing on an average), who are content with small salaries, it has the advantage of being always under the superintendence of the chief law officers, while it forms an excellent training school in criminal jurisprudence. To apply the machinery to England would not be difficult, for it would only need expansion, and no doubt in the application many improvements of detail might be effected. But the leading principles are simple and involve no constitutional change. They require only the appointment of local attorneys to conduct inquiries, and to act under the direction of competent barristers for each district or circuit. These barristers, placed in communication with and under the control of the Attorney-General, would supply the requisite legal knowledge for guiding an investigation or conducting a trial. The difficulty made by the English attorneys and Bar is that criminal business would thus be concentrated in a few favoured hands. But if it were better done by a few responsible hands than it is by many irresponsible hands, the country, perhaps, not think the objection fatal.—I am, &c., A SCOTSMAN.

And this is the system of public prosecutions in America:

As an appendix to your recent able article upon public prosecutors, permit me to briefly describe what may be called the American system of prosecuting criminals.

This system is based upon the axiom that a criminal offends the State even more than he injures his victim. Consequently, the State undertakes to prosecute the criminal, and the injured person becomes simply a witness for the State.

Under the American system there are three distinct codes of laws: the United States code, the State code for each member of the national Confederacy, and the municipal code for each city in the State. These necessitate three distinct classes of public prosecutors: the United States district attorneys, who represent the nation, and are appointed by the President and the Attorney-General; the State district attorneys, who are elected by the people; and the corporation attorneys, also elected by popular vote. Thus, if a person steal a letter from a post-office he is prosecuted by the United States attorney in the district in which the offence is committed, and he is tried before a United States court. If, instead of stealing a letter, he steal a purse, he is prosecuted in a State court by the State district attorney. If, instead of stealing anything, he violate a municipal ordinance by infringing upon the public rights in any thoroughfare, the corporation attorney takes care that he is properly punished before a city magistrate.

This system may at first seem complicated; but in practice it works as easily and as powerfully as an immense machine. The office of public prosecutor has large emoluments, both in salaries and fees, and is generally held by an able lawyer. In very few instances have any outside counsel to be employed by the Government, and, on the whole, the system is economical and satisfactory. Its economy is especially noticeable in restricting the number of cases which actually go to trial, thus saving the time of courts and juries. The public prosecutor, as the representative of the Government, can enter a nolle pros. when the case against an offender is weak, or can move that a person be discharged upon his own recognisances, or can dismiss the affair altogether if there be not evidence enough before the grand jury to warrant an indictment. These ample powers are sometimes abused, but not often. The abuses would be even less frequent if all the prosecutors were appointed for life or good behaviour, instead of being elected or appointed for a brief political term.

Now, let us apply this system to the Overend, Gurney, and Co. prosecution, and see how it works. The charge being one of fraud, or conspiracy to defraud, neither the national authorities nor the municipality would have anything to do with it. The State district attorney representing the county of Middlesex would take charge of the matter. First, Dr. Thom would go before a magistrate (not before the mayor) and make his complaint. Then, the magistrate would go through his preliminary examination, as the Lord Mayor has done. Sufficient cause having been shown, the magistrate would hold the accused on bail; would bind Dr. Thom to appear as a witness before the grand jury, and would turn the case over to the district attorney, who would attend before the grand jury and see that a bill of indictment be found. Finally, the trial would come off in regular course, Dr. Thom appearing as a witness for the prosecution, and being paid his fees the same as any other witness. From the first stage to the last the State would assume all the expense of the prosecution, and the people would pay the costs in taxes.

It is at once evident that, under the American system, no such hitch in the proceedings as that which is to be settled by the Lord Chief Justice could possibly occur.—I have the honour to remain, &c.

AN AMERICAN.

CRIMINAL LUNATICS.

The following thoughtful article on this subject appears in the Pall Mall Gazette:

The report recently made by the Commissioners in Lunacy on the Broadmoor Criminal Lunatic Asylum contains some features of unusual interest at the present moment, when the publication of the memoirs of Dr. Conolly has recalled to mind the system of non-mechanical restraint which he advocated, and the success which, as a rule, resulted from the adoption of it. For our criminal lunatics, so called, we have three state establishments, exclusive of hospitals for soldiers and sailors, and these are Fisherton House, a certain number of wards in Bethlehem, and Broadmoor Hospital. The last was opened about five years ago, and contains at present 456 inmates, 373 males and 83 females. In conducting an establishment of this class, one broad distinction to be made with reference to the patients naturally suggests itself. Broadmoor Hospital contains those who have become insane while undergoing penal servitude, and who, therefore, according to the nature of the crime for which they were suffering, and the number of previous convictions recorded against them, may be taken as more or less depraved in character. And again there are others who while insane have, under the influence of the disease, committed crime, usually of violence; and these should undoubtedly be treated with all the indulgence which their unhappy state admits of, since they were irresponsible at the time, and what happened to them might occur to any other lunatic carelessly looked after. As a matter of fact the last are often tractable and kindly-humoured to an extraordinary degree. We have thus to deal with insane convicts and criminal lunatics, but of the numbers of each class respectively the report gives no account. The first have, in some degree, the advantage of hope, of which the others are deprived. If a convict becomes insane, is cured at Broadmoor, and his term of imprisonment has meanwhile expired, he is a free man again; but it is generally supposed that a lunatic who has committed murder is never released, except in rare cases, and that to be imprisoned during Her Majesty's pleasure under these circumstances means imprisonment for the natural life. A very little consideration will show that the difficulties in the management of insane convicts are various and great; on the other hand, Broadmoor is not a private speculation, nor even a philanthropic institution, but a Government establishment, combining prison and hospital in one, and it ought, therefore, to lack neither accommodation nor funds to make it as perfect as it can be of its kind. The commissioners have, nevertheless, felt it their duty to write what we should on the whole consider an unfavourable report, not indeed with regard to the health of the inmates, for, though fever broke out in the early part of 1867, the number of deaths within the last ten months is exceptionally small, but in other respects they find a good deal of fault.

In regard to order and cleanliness it is admitted that the place is all that could be desired, but the attendance at chapel, concerts, amusements, &c., is very meagre, and the commissioners observe with regret that No. 1 and No. 6 blocks are "prison-like in all their arrangements;" the airing courts are narrow and have high walls; six or seven of the inmates take their exercise alone, and were within ten months "secluded," which we presume means locked up, for some portion of the day twelve or fourteen times. They were "isolated in separate cells or cages, receiving their meals through an aperture in the walls;" one had not even a chair or stool in his cage, and this, the commissioners allege, is not, in their opinion, a proper way of treating mental disease. They remark that—

If the withholding of indulgence were more likely than the concession of it to have a beneficial effect, there is nothing in the class of cases in this asylum which should intercept on any ground of personal consideration and sympathy an application of the repressive system to the fullest extent, but in other times there has been sufficient trial of that system on all descriptions of patients, and in every conceivable state of circumstances, and it has uniformly failed as completely as the other has succeeded in a more or less degree. . . . No attempts of the kind, i.e. non-restraint, are now made at Broadmoor.

Apart from the tendency, apparently quite irrepressible, in the commissioners to indulge in fine writing and long sentences, there is something in these remarks which calls for notice; the more so as they add, "The same remonstrance having been made unavailingly at every visit, it is with no expectation of any kind of present result that we repeat it now." Now, what has been said presents a picture sad and melancholy enough, and if it were to be taken as absolutely true we should be disposed to coincide with the commissioners. But on reading the letter from the Council of Supervision of Broadmoor to the Secretary of State, we find that document gives facts and dates which, supposing them of course to be correct, argue something disingenuous in the commissioners' report. "Nothing of this kind is now attempted at Broadmoor," they say. Now what is the real state of the case? Let us look at the history and antecedents of the seven men in question:

S. T. was admitted from Bethlehem in 1864. Had been repeatedly convicted of crime, and at the time of his becoming insane was undergoing ten years' penal servitude. He has since then three times tried to murder the medical attendant, has attacked and injured another officer, and openly expresses his regret that he has not killed Dr. G., and his intention of "caving in" the heads of others.

J. P., tried for murder and acquitted on the ground of insanity. Is stated to have been previously a thief. He has since 1864 made seven attempts to escape, accompanied with violent attacks on his warders. He has attempted and once succeeded in inducing other patients to co-operate with him. He is nevertheless now, and has been for some time in association with others.

F. H. has attempted to escape, attacked a fellow patient, also attacked the superintendent in chapel, and injured him so as nearly to kill him. The other lunatics are unwilling to work with him on account of the terror he inspires. He openly states that he will murder the doctors the first time he has the chance.

J. H., habitual criminal, admitted from Milbank while undergoing five years' penal servitude. His attacks of mania come on without any premonitory symptoms, when he is very destructive and dangerous.

T. C. had murdered a fellow-patient in Lancaster Asylum. Since then he has twice violently attacked other lunatics, and contends that he hears voices commanding him to "kill somebody." He has often attacked his attendants, but since June 1868, he seemed quieter, and is but rarely in seclusion.

W. T., habitual criminal, was undergoing fifteen years' penal servitude, when he became insane. His conduct in various prisons has been uniformly bad; at Woking, Dartmoor, and Portsmouth alike. Was convicted of a revolting crime while on board ship as a convict in Portland Roads. Since his reception at Broadmoor he has been very violent, strikes and bites those whom he attacks, and has induced some of the other lunatics to combine with him.

No. 7, who had neither chair nor table in his room, has injured two other lunatics and an attendant, uses disgusting language, and has twice escaped. During 1868 the list of breakages against him is as follows:—Three plates, three mugs, eight jugs, 112 panes of glass, one birdcage, five window sashes, four iron bars, and one door; and he destroyed eighteen sheets, three pillow cases, thirty-one blankets, eight counterpanes, eight pillows, eight mattresses, and one shirt.

Nevertheless, he has been tried within the last eighteen months with every possible indulgence; he has been allowed to have pigeons, a small garden, a concertina, books, pictures, paints, carpenter's tools, but without success; and it simply endangers the lives of others to place him in association. The "cages" alluded to by the commissioners are 29ft. by 7ft. 6in., and 36ft. by 13ft., are lighted by windows and warmed by stoves. Now it seems to us that, so far from "no attempt being made now at Broadmoor" in the direction of indulgence and non-restraint, that system has been carried out further than humanity demands or prudence suggests. Even the other patients are afraid of associating with these men, and it appears almost fatuous for the commissioners to go on year after year recommending that these lunatic convict should be allowed a few more chances for killing or maiming the warders and medical officers of the hospital. Is there anything so admirable in their previous characters as to make it desirable to offer up sundry innocent well-conducted men to their murderous fury? It is worth noting that in two instances they have induced other patients to co-operate with them. Now those who have had much experience with the insane know that, as a rule, they are almost absolutely deficient in the faculty of combination, and we should be greatly disposed to believe that the insanity, or what might appear like it, may be mostly ingrained ferocity unrestrained by fear of punishment, the insanity being assumed in order to obtain the privileges of a lunatic—i. e. seclusion, as against stripes. Again, insanity is a disease which usually excites great compassion, because it deprives the patient of liberty, of power to work or to do good, and destroys the pleasures of memory and of hope. But we need hardly pity the hardened and habitual criminal who becomes insane more than as if he had any other malady. His liberty he has already forfeited; he never does any honest work except in prison, and in his case the pleasures of memory and hope are simply the recollections of successful vice and crime, and the hope of returning to his ordinary habits as soon as possible. As the council truly observe, "in these cases the element of lunacy is not so much to be considered as the element of vice, low cunning, and the habits of convict life." Being declared lunatics, they are quite aware they will not be punished except by seclusion. Every means of reform has been tried and tried in vain. So far as they are insane it does but remove any restraint which they might have been made to practise, and only serves to expose the full and active depravity of their characters.

The result of all this is, to put it plainly, that we have preserved the lives of some half-dozen men in order to keep them caged up for life like wild beasts. And as they really are for all practical purposes wild beasts there is nothing else to be done. Now, we ask it in all seriousness and calmness, would it not have been more humane towards the unoffending officers who have been the sufferers, would it not have been more humane towards the men themselves, to have hung them at once in the first instance? Is it or is it not a false sentiment of mercy to persist in keeping them alive when we are compelled in self defence to deprive them of everything which makes life valuable or even endurable? Since they can be cured neither of their wickedness nor of their disease, and exist as centres of moral infection, and causes of crime, violence, misery, and danger to all around, would it not be better and wiser to put them out of the way altogether? Of course we shall have all the philanthropists down upon us, and, as the commissioners plaintively remark, "it is with no expectation of any kind of present result" that we make the proposition; but we lay particular stress on it because it bears upon a tendency which, if not checked, may bring about in the next few years a very unhappy state of things indeed. We refer to the present senseless craze which well-meaning people exhibit and weak-minded Home Secretaries encourage for commuting the sentence of capital punishment into imprisonment for life. Men are never sentenced to the gallows in these days except for crimes of exceeding atrocity, and in ten or twenty years we shall have collected in our prisons and criminal hospitals a sifted and assorted residuum of evil in the shape of a number of sullen desperate murderers whom we shall have condemned ourselves to watch over, feed, physic, and maintain in prison until the day when death comes to release them. They will be without hope themselves, and no one will have any hope about them except that they may never be let out again on society. They will be better fed, warmed, and clothed than our paupers, and on account of the hardened and ferocious character of these convicts we shall be obliged to select valuable servants and pay them highly to secure their attendance. The working of the Habitual Criminals Act will operate to keep a larger number of the most irreclaimable offenders in confinement, so that we shall have to enlarge our prisons, and probably construct new ones. Now we would just put the question to any thoughtful mind, Is this a result we ought to wish for? Of several murderers recently rescued from the gallows, would it not have been much better for society to have been rid of them for ever? and the next time a ruffian is sentenced to be hanged should we not reflect twice before we resolve to endanger the lives of our prison officials, and use the earnings of industrious ratepayers in order to preserve a hardened and worthless criminal in health, strength, and lifelong misery?

At any rate, we should gladly see it enacted that the man who, after being once consigned to the hangman, afterwards assaults a prison official, should forthwith be shot or otherwise put out of the way within the twenty-four hours. We have quite as high a respect for what is called the sacredness of human life as the sentiment deserves, so high, in fact, that we would unhesitatingly execute those who are given to take away the lives of others. By all means abolish the institution of violent death; but, as the Frenchman observed, "Que messieurs les assassins commencent."

JUDICIAL STATISTICS, 1868.

COMMON LAW COURTS.

JUDGMENTS.

The returns furnished by the masters of the three Superior Courts, after stating the number of writs of summons issued and the number of writs of capias to hold to bail, and the number of appearances entered, for each quarter of the year, next show the number of judgments, under the different terms, as given in the following summary, including those in the causes tried at Westminster and on circuit, without distinction. It rests with the parties for whom verdicts are given at Nisi Prius to make application for the return of the issues into the courts at Westminster, and in some cases a compromise is made after the verdict, and no further proceedings appear.

The following are the judgments entered up in the offices of the respective courts, as shown in the returns for 1868:—

	Q. B.	C. P.	Ex.	Total.
On judges' orders—
For default of service...	605	540	768	1,913
On affidavit of service...	6,565	5,114	8,265	19,944
On demurrers—
For plaintiff	11	7	11	29
For defendant	13	4	5	22
On postea, writ of trial, and writ of inquiry—
For plaintiff	625	523	683	1,831
For defendant or non-suit	143	117	169	429
By default for plaintiff	1,284	1,233	1,648	4,165
On non pros. for defendant	64	57	13	144
On special cases—
For plaintiff	7	13	11	31
For defendant	14	5	6	25
On judges' orders to stay proceedings—
Warrants of attorney, certificates of arbitrators, &c.	765	576	577	1,918
Total judgments	10,096	8,189	12,166	30,451

In the total number for 1868, there is a decrease of 11,253, or 26·9 per cent., as compared with the total for 1867, the total for 1867 having shown a decrease of 612, or 1·4 per cent. as compared with the total for 1866. As compared with the numbers for the three courts respectively in 1867, the decrease in 1868 amounts to 3567, or 26·1 per cent. for the Queen's Bench, to 3131, or 27·6 per cent. for the Common Pleas, and to 4555, or 27·2 per cent. for the Court of Exchequer.

FORMS OF VERDICT.

The returns furnished by the associates show the result of the causes tried in the courts at Westminster, in each description of suit. The returns made by the clerks of assize, and the clerks of the Crown for the counties Palatine, show the results in the causes tried on circuit. The following summary shows the results of the suits both at Westminster and on circuit for each of the courts in 1868, with the total numbers for 1867.

	1868	1867
Verdict for plaintiff	1781	1945
Verdict for plaintiff, subject to special case	89	139
Verdict by consent with reference	156	187
Verdict for defendant	296	404
Jury discharged without a verdict	41	32
Juror withdrawn	96	117
Nonsuit	83	132
Stet processus, venue changed, record withdrawn, &c.	390	504
Total	2932	3460

In the following summary are shown, as abstracted from the returns for 1868, made by the associates and the clerks of assize and clerks of the Crown, the number of cases under each class of amounts for which verdicts were obtained in the Courts of Westminster and upon circuit, with the total number for the preceding year, and the total amounts recovered:

Number of each Class of Amounts.	1867.	1868.
£3000	12	14
£2000	51	40
£1000	91	86
£500	86	86
£300	110	91
£200	204	206
£100	316	286
£50	532	491
£20 and under	388	266
Total amount recovered	£524,127	£527,966

EXECUTIONS.

The masters' returns next show the number of executions under the different forms of writs. The following were the numbers in the three courts in 1868:

Writs of fieri facias	14,386
" capias ad satisfaciendum	7,975
" possession	494
" elegit	121
" exegi facias	120
" capias utlagatum	12

Total executions 23,111

The total number of writs issued in 1868 shows a decrease of 6172, or 20·8 per cent., as compared with the number for 1867, the number for the latter year having been less by 770, or 2·5 per cent., than the number for 1866. The decrease in 1868 as compared with 1867 is—for the Queen's Bench, 1872, or 19·6 per cent.; for the Common Pleas, 1506, or 19·1 per cent.; and for the Court of Exchequer, 2794, or 23·5 per cent.

NEW TRIALS, &c.

The judgments being subject to revision by the courts sitting in Banco, on motions for new trials, or to enter or alter verdict, or for nonsuit, or arrest of judgment, or non obstante verdicto, the returns made by the masters show that there were applications of this nature in the courts, with the following results in 1868:

Refused	139
Rule nisi granted	244
Rule absolute granted on payment of costs	6
" " without costs	82
" " with question of costs reserved	19
Rule discharged	115
Where court divided	5

ISSUE OF THE PROCEEDINGS.

The number of writs of summons issued in 1868, as has been already seen, was 82,876. The number of appearances entered was 28,747. In 54,129 cases, therefore, or 65·3 per cent. of the summonses issued, no step towards a defence was taken. But in 21,857 cases judgment was given on the judge's order for default of service, or on affidavit of service of the writ of summons, and the cases were thus decided for the plaintiff. In the remainder of the 54,129 cases, viz., 32,272, or 38·9 per cent., of the writs of summons issued, it may be presumed that the plaintiff's claim was settled by the defendant within twelve days allowed after the issue of the writ of summons, and no further proceeding took place.

In the preceding year in 70·0 per cent. of the writs of summons issued, no defence was offered; in 45·1 per cent. of the writs of summons issued, no proceedings took place beyond the issue of the writ.

Further, in 1868, in 4165 of the cases in which appearances were entered, judgment was given for the plaintiff by default, the defendant failing to plead within eight days of the filing of the plaintiff's declaration. In 1918 cases judgment was given on judge's order to stay proceedings, on warrants of attorney, certificates of arbitration, &c.; and in 144 cases for the defendant, on non-prosecution by the plaintiff. Judgment was also given in court in 2367 cases, on demurrers, postea, &c., and on special cases, the total number of judgments entered up amounting, as shown in the table, to 30,451.

Of the 28,747 cases in which appearances were entered, 4292, or 14·9 per cent. only, were entered for trial; and of these only 2435, or 56·7 per cent., were brought to trial. In 344, or 1·4 per cent. of the number brought to trial, the trials were undefended.

The number of trials was 2·9 per cent. of the number of writs of summons issued. In the preceding year the proportion was above 2·1 per cent. For the enforcement of the judgments in 1868, 23,111 writs of execution were issued, of which 14,386, or 62·3 per cent., were to levy on the goods; 7975, or 34·5 per cent., were against the person; 494, or 2·1 per cent., for possession after recovery in ejectment; and 1·1 per cent. under the other forms stated in the table.

In the preceding year the proportions were 69·5 per cent. to levy on the goods; 27·8 per cent. against the person; 1·8 per cent. for possession; and 0·9 per cent. under the other forms.

The writs issued in 1868 were in the proportion of 75·9 per cent. to the number of judgments entered up. In the preceding year the proportion was 70·2 per cent. It is to be remembered that in many instances more than one writ of execution is issued in the same case.

COURT OF ERROR.

Returns of the proceedings into the Court of Error, Exchequer Chamber, have been made by the masters of each of the three Superior Courts of Common Law in the same forms as the returns furnished by them for each of the last six years, and show the proceedings from each court to have been as follows for 1868:

ELECTION LAW.

THE ELECTION COMMISSIONS.—The course taken by the Bridgwater Commissioners of making, without delay, a preliminary report, is for the purpose of enabling the Attorney-General to institute prosecutions within the twelvemonth after an election prescribed as the limit of time by the Corrupt Practices Prevention Acts. The other commissioners may, it is hoped, follow this good example. The delay which always takes place after a general election before a commission can begin to sit makes it at best but sharp work for an Attorney-General to get a chance of prosecuting on commissioners' designations; and this is the first instance of a report within a twelvemonth. Mr. Justice Blackburn, in his special report on the Stafford case, suggested a considerable extension of the time for prosecutions instituted by the Attorney-General or by the order of the House, so as to render it possible to proceed against parties found guilty by a judge as well as by a commission at antecedent elections. There is at present no possibility under the law of prosecutions for malpractices unearthed by the commissions which occurred before the elections of last November.

THERE was almost a panic a few days ago consequent upon rumours regarding the health of the Emperor of the French, whose death, come when it will, is expected to inaugurate a European convulsion. But more assuring reports have since somewhat subdued the alarm, though all anxiety is not yet vanished.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

PRACTICE—DEMURRER—OUSTER OF JURISDICTION—NECESSITY FOR ANSWER.—Three railway companies, under an Act of Parliament, being entitled to the joint use of a station, one of them, as it was alleged by one of the others, unfairly used the station to the detriment of such other company, who filed a bill to restrain the use of the station by the defendant company, except in accordance with the Act. A general demurrer was put in to this bill, on the ground chiefly that a committee of the three companies was, under the Act, the proper tribunal. Demurrer overruled: (The Mid-Wales Railway Company v. The Cambrian Railways Company, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 16. V. C. M.)

ALLEGED COLLUSION TO ASSIST A RIVAL COMPANY—PETITION—COSTS.—On a petition to wind-up the affairs of a limited liability company, on the ground of a misapplication of the funds by the directors, it must be conclusively shown that the interference of the court could be obtained under the Companies Act 1862, sect. 79. One set of costs only allowed as between the respondents to the petition: (Re The Anglo-Egyptian Navigation Company, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 19. V. C. J.)

COSTS—SECURITY FOR—BANKRUPTCY.—Where the assignee of a bankrupt with the sanction and by the directions of the Commissioner of the Court of Bankruptcy, brings an action for the benefit of the estate, he will not upon the allegation that he is without visible means of paying costs if unsuccessful, be required to give security for costs: (Denston (Assignee, &c.) v. Ashton and others, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 20. Q. B.)

THE CHIEF CLERKS IN CHANCERY.—Mr. Allen, the Chief Clerk of Vice-Chancellor James, had on Tuesday a list of more than eighty summonses before him, and concluded his sittings. Mr. Bloxam will attend on Tuesday next.

A "Lawyers' Congress," attended by some of the most eminent jurists of Germany, was held last week at Heidelberg, and passed several resolutions on important social and judicial questions. Among these were the following:—1. "Civil marriages should be recognised as a necessary principle of the relations between Church and State in the whole of Germany; and the State should make no objection to the marriage of persons of different religions." This was proposed by Dr. Gneist, and passed against a minority of one only. 2. "That Government sanction should not be required for the formation of joint-stock companies or other associations, but that the liability of each member of such a company should be unlimited." 3. "A written document acknowledging a debt should be taken as sufficient proof of such debt, independently of the circumstances under which the debt was incurred." 4. "As nearly all the objects of punishment are more effectually obtained by solitary confinement than by any other system of imprisonment, such confinement should be recognised by law as the regulated mode of executing sentences which involve the loss of liberty; exceptions to this rule might be made when necessary, either by the judge or the governor of the prison." This resolution was passed almost unanimously.

THE BENCH AND THE BAR.

THE TEMPLE CHURCH.—This church will be re-opened for Divine service on the 3rd Oct., by which time it is anticipated the alterations and renovations which are now being carried out in various parts of the building will be completed.

CHIEF JUSTICE COCKBURN.—It is reported that, in consequence of ill-health, Sir Alexander Cockburn will resign the Lord Chief Justiceship of the Court of Queen's Bench before the commencement of the Michaelmas term, and that he will be succeeded by Lord Penzance. His Lordship has arrived at Kingstown in his yacht Zouave. This is the first visit the Chief Justice has paid to Ireland.

SOCIAL SCIENCE CONGRESS.—The arrangements for the forthcoming annual congress of the Social Science Association, to be held at Bristol, from the 29th inst to the 6th Oct., are progressing rapidly and satisfactorily. The list of presidents has been completed. Sir Stafford Northcote, Bart., M.P., will preside over the whole association, and deliver his inaugural address on the first evening of the meeting. G. W. Hastings, Esq., takes the presidency of the Jurisprudence department, in which arrangements are being made for a thorough discussion of the questions of the relations between England and her colonies, charitable endowments, and the occupation and ownership of land. The Rev. Charles Kingsley, lately appointed a Canon of Chester, takes that of the Education department, where the subject of education, whether of the upper, middle, or lower classes of society, will be discussed. J. A. Symonds, Esq., M.D., of Bristol, will take the Health department, in which the spread of infectious and contagious diseases, dipsomania, and other health subjects will be considered. The Economy and Trade department will be presided over by the Right Hon. Stephen Cave, M.P., the three special questions for discussion being the administration of the poor laws, emigration, and the condition of the agricultural labourer. The vice-presidents of the various departments have also been appointed. The congress will be opened with a sermon, to be preached by the Lord Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. During the sitting there will be a conference of ladies interested in educational, sanitary, and other social subjects, under the superintendence of Miss Mary Carpenter. A working men's meeting is being organised, and in the evening soirées are to take place. There will be excursions to Cheddar, Tintern Abbey, and the training ship at the mouth of the river.

MAGISTRATE AND PARISH LAWYER.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

BENEFIT SOCIETY—WINDING-UP.—F. in 1853 paid up the full amount payable upon ten shares in the above-named society, and thereupon became a member of it. The rules provided that, any member not having received an advance might withdraw the balance to his credit on notice, but such withdrawal would be subject to his proportion of expenses and other deductions. In 1854 F., being entitled to do so, gave the notice, but the money was not repaid to him, and three years later a resolution was passed by the society which, in effect, left the losses to be exclusively borne by persons who were members antecedently to the resolution. The resolution was admitted to be bad, as being ultra vires of the society, but money was borrowed on the faith of it, and the claims of the lenders obtained of course a priority against the members. These claims were shown to exceed the value of the whole assets of the society. At the time F. was absent from England, but was aware of its position and proceedings, and twelve years afterwards presented a winding-up petition: Held (affirming the decision of Malins, V. C.), that the petition must be dismissed, as F. had no such substantial interest in the society's assets as would entitle him to support it, and had acquiesced in the resolution complained of: (Re The London Permanent Benefit Building Society, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 8. L.J.J.)

CORONER—ELECTION OF.—The legality of votes tendered to and received by the sheriff cannot be questioned on a quo warranto information: (Reg. v. Diplock, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 24. Q. B.)

READINGS OF RECENT DECISIONS.

BASTARDY—ORDER OF AFFILIATION—APPLICATION FOR A SUMMONS—PETTY SESSIONAL DIVISION—RESIDENCE OF A WANDERER.—To the very numerous decisions upon the law and practice of affiliations one more is to be added. The 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, which confers upon a woman the right to apply to a justice for a summons against the alleged father of her bastard child, confines her power of application to a justice of the petty sessional division in which she is residing. The words are the following: "Any single woman . . . who has been delivered of a bastard . . . may . . . at any time within twelve months from the birth of such child . . . make application to any one justice of the peace acting for the petty sessional division of the county, or for the city, borough, or place in which she may reside, for a summons to be served on the man alleged by her to be the father of such child," &c. The power to grant a summons is thus confined to a justice acting for the petty sessional division in which the woman resides, and consequently no other justice has any power to grant it. Upon these words there are several decisions. The first case was that of Reg. v. Hughes, 26 L. J. 133, M. C., and arose upon an indictment for perjury upon the hearing of an application for an order of affiliation, it being objected that the justices making the order had no jurisdiction, inasmuch as the application for the summons was not made to a justice acting for the petty sessional division in which the woman was residing. It appeared that the woman had been delivered of the child at the house of her parents, and continued to reside with them for many months, having no other home. She then went to lodge at Dolgelly for the purpose of affiliating the child. The petty sessional division to which she applied included Dolgelly, but did not include the residence of her parents. Her going to Dolgelly and lodging there was not fraudulent or for any improper reason, but because the magistrates met in the town, and it was more convenient for her than to go a distance from the home of her parents to the place of meeting of the magistrates for the division in which her parents resided. After the order of affiliation she went into service without returning to her parents. She stated that she could not go back to her parents, as they had nothing for her to do, but that she meant to leave immediately after the order was made, and that she did leave the next or the following day. The summons was applied for and issued three weeks after she first came to lodge at Dolgelly. The jury found that she had no other home than Dolgelly, and that she was residing at Dolgelly, if in point of law she could, under the circumstances, be considered to be so. The court were of opinion that the application for the summons by the woman was correct. In giving judgment, Cockburn, C. J. said: "I quite agree that it is not competent for a woman who seeks for an order upon the putative father of her child to go away from the place where she resides for the purpose of avoiding the jurisdiction of the magistrates of the district in which she resides, or for the purpose of harassing the man whom she alleges to be the putative father. But here it is expressly found that she did not go to Dolgelly fraudulently, but because that place was nearer than the place where the magistrates met for the division in which her parents' house is situated. She lived in Dolgelly for the whole period necessary to enable her to make this application, and during that time it is found that she had no other home. Under this state of facts, it seems to me that she was residing in Dolgelly within the meaning of the statute at the time of her application for the order. If she were not, women having no settled home, but moving about from place to place, would be deprived altogether of the remedy given them by the statute."

The next case decided upon the point is that of Reg. v. Myott, 32 L. J. 138, M. C., which was a case stated by the sessions, and in which the facts were as follows:—On the 29th Nov. 1861 the woman applied to a justice acting in and for the division of Pirchill North, in the county of Stafford, for a summons, she herself at the time living at the house of her father and mother within that division, and upon the hearing, there being no corroborative evidence, the justices refused to make an order. On the 19th of the ensuing month of Dec. she applied for another summons, which came on for hearing before the same justices, when they again refused to make an order. In the following February she took lodgings in Newcastle-under-Lyme, and after living there six weeks she took out another summons in that town, and the application accordingly came on for hearing before the borough justices. Upon her cross-examination she stated that she lived at home till the 20th Feb., she had no quarrel with her father and mother, she had some money of her own, and "I came to Newcastle because people said if I came there I should have a better chance." Wightman, J., in giving judgment, said: "It is clear that the woman did go to Newcastle with a view to getting into a new jurisdiction, having twice failed in obtaining an order in the old, in order to try 'if she could have a better chance' of succeeding. That clearly brings the case within the circumstances which in the opinion of the court in the Queen v. Hughes would have been ground for holding the justices had no jurisdiction. Here there had been two previous hearings on the merits, but in that case the application made after the change of residence was the first, and there was no evidence that the applicant went to the new place for the purpose of getting before one bench of magistrates in preference to another. The decision of the quarter sessions therefore cannot be upheld, and the orders must be quashed."

We now come to the very recent case of Lawrence, app. v. Inglire, resp., 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 391, which was a case stated by justices at petty sessions upon an order made by them upon the putative father, the ground of objection being that the justices at Margate had no jurisdiction, the woman's residence being in the petty sessional division of Ramsgate. The woman in her evidence stated that she had at that time no residence; that she resided at Margate some time since, and while there became acquainted with the putative father. She then detailed the circumstances of her intercourse with him, and upon cross-examination she said that she had no place of residence, and that she slept at Ramsgate the night before she took out the summons. Upon the argument in the court above, it was insisted that the justices had no jurisdiction, as the woman was not residing at the time in the petty sessional division (Margate) in which the justice who issued the summons was acting. Upon this, Lush, J. asked, "Where did she reside when she made the application?" To this it was replied, "At Ramsgate, at which place she slept the previous night." Lush, J.: "No; that was so the night before; but she had no home." Mr. White for the appellant: "If she had no permanent residence, it must be taken that her home is where she slept the night before." Lush, J.: "But she leaves, and goes away." Mr. White: "It is not because she is actually in a locality that therefore that is to be taken as her place of residence." Lush, J.: "The woman must not come to a place fraudulently. If your argument is correct, if she goes about from town to town as a wanderer, she could never get an order." Mr. White: "Where she last slept will be a convenient test of residence." Lush, J.: "In the absence of any evidence to show that the woman had a residence elsewhere, it must be taken that she was residing in Margate." The construction, therefore, put upon the words of the section "make application to any one justice of the peace acting for the petty sessional division of the county, or for the city, borough, or place in which she may reside, for a summons," is, First, that a summons is well issued by a justice in a division to which a woman has come and lodged in for the express purpose of applying for such summons, though she intends to leave the division as soon as she has got the order, provided she has no other residence at the time, and has gone into the division for no fraudulent or improper purpose. Secondly, that where a woman goes into a new jurisdiction for the purpose of avoiding an old jurisdiction where she had unsuccessfully endeavoured to obtain an order, such a purpose being fraudulent, a summons issued by a justice acting in such new jurisdiction will not be well issued. Thirdly, that a woman who has no settled habitation or place of residence may obtain a summons for a justice in any division in which for the time being she happens to be.

MIDDLESEX SESSIONS.

The September sessions were held on Monday last at Clerkenwell, before Mr. Serjeant Cox, Deputy-Assistant Judge.

The grand jury were sworn.

THE HABITUAL CRIMINALS ACT.

The learned judge, in his charge to the grand jury, said that the construction which he had put upon one provision of the Habitual Criminals Act in his charge to the grand jury at the last sessions having been questioned, it was necessary for him to say that, having carefully reconsidered the question that had thus been raised, he could find no reason for changing his opinion. The section relating to receivers of stolen goods provided that, if the defendant had been previously convicted of any of the offences named in the schedule, or such as involved fraud or dishonesty, the former conviction, contrary to the previous practice, might be put in evidence against him as part of the case for the prosecution. A provision followed that where it was intended to give such previous conviction in evidence, seven days' notice should be given to the defendant of such intention, and that he would be taken to have had guilty knowledge of such possession unless he should show to the contrary.

It was contended by the objectors to his view, that there was no express enactment changing the burden of proof in such cases, and that the provision as to the notice was merely surplusage, the consequence of an oversight in the amendment of the Bill in the House of Commons. But he could not so read it. The provision was in the plainest terms, and, indeed, but for such a provision, the required notice would have been wholly unnecessary. The defendant could derive no benefit from notice that a former conviction was about to be put in evidence against him; but it was of the last importance to him that he should have notice that he would be deemed to have had guilty knowledge unless he proved to the contrary, for how otherwise could he come to the trial prepared with such proof? Should the case arise in the course of their duties, they must take the law to be as he had interpreted it; but if the question should come before him in a formal shape, he should reserve it for the opinion of the Court of Criminal Appeal, for it ought to be determined as soon as possible. Having directed their attention to the provisions of the same Act relating to the harbouring of thieves and receipt of stolen goods by public houses, his Lordship dismissed them to their duties.

PORTSMOUTH PETTY SESSIONS.

Thursday, Sept. 2.

(Before A. NANCE and T. HODGKINSON, Esqrs.)
BARBER v. PEEL.

The assembling of prostitutes in public houses.

This was an information laid by Mr. Richard Barber, the superintendent of the Portsmouth police, against Mr. Edward Peel, of the Crown Inn, North End, in the borough of Portsmouth, for having knowingly suffered common prostitutes to assemble at and continue in his premises on the 27th Aug.

Cousins, solicitor, of Portsea, appeared for the defendant.

Savage, P.C. deposed to having visited the house first at eleven p.m. on the 27th Aug. There were seven women in a long smoking room, which is used for dancing; five of them were prostitutes. The women were in company with soldiers and civilians. At 12.20 he visited the house again, and found three of the same prostitutes standing at the bar. At 12.45 he visited again, and found two of the same prostitutes at the bar. He called the defendant's attention to the facts, and charged him with harbouring prostitutes.

Pollard, P.C., stated that he remained outside the house, and none of the prostitutes came out, excepting those who went away. The two who were seen at forty-five minutes past twelve were in the house from eleven up to that time.

Toomer, P.C., proved that five of the women were and had for years been common prostitutes.

Cousins, for the defence, contended that the statute under which the information was laid, being a penal one, must be construed strictly. There was no disturbance or disorder. No evidence had been given that the women were not in the house for the purpose of obtaining refreshments. Perhaps some of them were there for an unreasonable time, but this was not sufficient to sustain the information. There should be evidence that they were in the house for the purpose of carrying on their illicit calling. He quoted Belasco v. Hannant, 26 J. P. 435, S. C.; Whitfield v. Bambridge, 30 J. P. 308, S. C.

The magistrates said the law was in a very unsatisfactory state. In the present case there was no evidence that the women were not in the house for the purpose of refreshment. At any rate there was no proof that they were there for the purpose of carrying on their calling.

Information dismissed.

The Exeter list of municipal voters for the present year contains the names of 760 women. The total number of electors is 5,084.

The licensing sessions for Liverpool having concluded, we find the results of the magisterial investigations are that of sixty-six applications for new spirit licences thirteen were granted, of which nine were simply transfers. There were 742 applications under the Wine and Beerhouse Act 1869, and of these 330 certificates were granted without question. Inquiries were made respecting 290 persons who had violated the conditions of their licences, 228 certificates were granted with a caution, 11 applications were withdrawn, and 151 were refused certificates. The magistrates refused 108 applications for certificates for new beer licences. There are now 464 beerhouses in Liverpool against 652 last year, but taking into account the houses licensed for the sale of spirits, there is in the borough one public-house to every 209 persons.

COLONIAL LAW.—The weak impudence of the Government in releasing the Fenian prisoners appears likely, among other mischievous consequences, to bring about a conflict of jurisdiction between the Victorians and the mother country. In an Act, passed in 1854, "to prevent the influx of criminals into Victoria," it is distinctly specified that any person who has at any time been convicted of a capital or transportable felony by a court of justice in any part of the British dominions, and who forthwith comes into Victoria without a warrant permitting him to do so, shall be expelled from the colony, or punished with forfeiture of property, imprisonment, and hard labour if he remains therein after having received seven days' notice to depart. The pardon which the Fenians have received does not, it is held, exempt them from the provisions of this law; and it is quite clear that to make an exception in favour of those men, merely as Fenians, while enforcing the Act against all other liberated prisoners, would be to afford special countenance and encouragement to treason. The colonial mind, in its fresh vigour, has apparently no relish for those fine-drawn distinctions between one class of criminals and another, with which a certain school of philosophers in the mother country are doing their best to sap the public sense of order and respect for law. — Pall Mall Gazette.

FRIENDLY SOCIETIES.—The Registrar of Friendly Societies, Mr. Tidd Pratt, reports that in the year 1868 he examined and certified the rules of 1112 friendly societies. 190 co-operative societies were registered in the year. Notices of dissolution were received from 139 friendly societies, 77 of which were duly advertised in the London Gazette. Some few of these were transfers to new societies. In several instances the amount of funds in hand is not stated; where it is stated it appears that seven societies possessed at their dissolution an amount of funds less than 1*l.* per member; 41 had as much as 1*l.* per member, but less than 10*l.*; 12 had 10*l.* or more. One, a burial society of ten years' standing, reports 145 members, and only 11*l.* funds. One had 4*l.*; one 30*s.* Another, a "life and sick friendly society," established nine years, shows 14 members, but no funds at all left. The registrar recognises the justice of complaints that many societies, especially burial societies, allow country members who join the society through an agent or collector no means of recovering their claims, except by proceedings at the place where the society is established, a system which, in effect, amounts to a denial of justice, as the sum insured is generally small, and the expense would exceed the amount of the claim. The registrar advises the working classes not to join burial or friendly society through an agent or collector. He adverts to the Parliamentary debate on friendly societies, and expresses his opinion that, considering the very large number of members interested in these societies, particularly burial societies, it is most desirable that a commission should be issued by the Government to inquire into their condition and the manner of carrying on their business; the commission to have power to send assistant-commissioners to the large towns, as the Trades Union Commission did. In December last the registrar sent out 22,023 forms for the annual returns, which should give a general statement of the funds and effects of friendly societies; 12,263 were returned, but only 9464 gave both the funds and the number of members. These 9464 show 1,646,965 members, and 5,692,937*l.* funds, averaging rather more than 3*l.* 9*s.* per member. A statement of several of the returns is given. An old burial society shows 11,895 members, but only 887*l.* funds in hand. A second states that it has 6095 members, and 402*l.* funds in hand. Another has 1311 members, and 214*l.* funds in hand. Another received 202*l.* in the year, and the expenses of management were 68*l.* A mutual assurance society, five years old, shows a total of 2627 policies issued; the number still in force is not stated; the funds in hand are 237*l.*; the receipts of the year were 718*l.*; payments on death, 343*l.*; expenses of management, 277*l.* A funeral society reports 4500 families, 22,500 members; funds in hand 317*l.* Another 36,412 members; receipts of the year, 9452*l.*; paid on deaths, 4465*l.*; expenses of management, 3161*l.*, including 2232*l.* for commission; funds, 9813*l.* The Royal Liver Friendly Society had made no return when the report was sent in. The Liverpool Victoria Legal Friendly Society states the amount received in the year at 38,473*l.*, the deaths 8980; amount paid on deaths, 16,968*l.*; expenses of management, 17,815*l.*, including 9463*l.* collectors' commission; the funds (in May 1869) are 19,521*l.*; the number of members is not stated, but in Lord Devon's return they were given as 127,284. Another Liverpool society received 17,798*l.* in the year; the payments on deaths were 9234*l.*; expenses of management, 8604*l.*; funds, 18,158*l.*; the expenses of management include 4397*l.* for commission. Another Lancashire burial society, an old society, has 14,933 members and 2926*l.* funds; the year's payments on deaths were 2253*l.*; expenses, 592*l.*; year's receipts, 2857*l.* Another, with 1943 members, shows only 133*l.* funds. Another, 3442 members, year's receipts, 573*l.*; payments on death, 449*l.*; expenses, 98*l.*; funds, 197*l.* Again, "near 13,000 members," year's receipts, 147*l.*; payments on death, 129*l.*; expenses, 130*l.*, more than half going to collectors; funds, 765*l.* A London burial society, with less than 2000*l.* receipts of the year, shows 498*l.* paid for "discount on collections," members, 9000*l.*; funds, 448*l.*; payments of the year, 1068*l.* A Warwickshire society received 1362*l.* in the year, and paid 338*l.* for collectors' commission. None of the returns state the amount of the liabilities—that is, the amount of the assurances the society is liable to pay. The registrar can only do his best to enable the members of friendly societies to know the truth and the whole truth about them. He also collects in this annual octavo volume a number of documents of the year, including this year the Trades Unions Bill and the Parliamentary debate upon it; reports of legal proceedings relating to friendly societies; an account of the French system of life and accident insurance under State guarantee; and the substance of Parliamentary returns relating to loan societies, co-operative societies, and savings-banks.

NOTES ON NEW DECISIONS.

LEGACY DUTY—LEGACY PAYABLE AFTER DEATH OF AN ANNUITANT TO DIFFERENT PERSONS IN SUCCESSION.—J. G., by will, gave all his real and personal estates (not specifically bequeathed) to trustees, upon trust to pay an annuity of 100*l.* a year to his wife for life, and after her decease to pay to his natural daughter, M. S., the sum of 600*l.*; and after making several other bequests, then as to a certain freehold public-house, after the decease of his wife, upon trust to pay the rents and annual income to be derived therefrom unto his natural daughter E. M. for her life, and after her death to stand possessed of the same public-house, in trust for such of the children of the said E. M. as might be then living, and the issue of any that might be dead, share and share alike. And as to all the residue of his estates, after answering the several purposes aforesaid, he directed his said trustees to invest the same, and pay two-thirds of the dividends thereof unto the said E. M. during her life, and after her death the principal to be equally divided between her children on attaining twenty-one years; the remaining one-third to be paid unto the said M. S. during her life, and after her death the principal to be equally divided between her children. By a codicil to his will the testator stated that the said freehold public-house had been sold and realised 2200*l.*, and he therefore revoked the devise of the said public-house in his will mentioned in favour of the said E. M. and her children, and in lieu thereof he directed his said trustees to stand possessed of the sum of 2200*l.* and invest the same, and to pay the interest arising therefrom unto the said E. M. for her life, in manner in his said will expressed with reference to the rents of the said public house so sold as aforesaid; and after her death to stand possessed of the said sum of 2200*l.* for the benefit of the children of the said E. M. as in the said will mentioned, and he thereby gave and bequeathed the same to them accordingly. Upon the testator's death, his widow being still alive, the executor in the residuary account deducted from the net amount of the residue on which duty was now payable the sum of 2800*l.*, which he claimed to detain to answer the above outstanding legacies of 600*l.* and 2200*l.* The Commissioners of Inland Revenue, on the other hand, claimed payment of duty on the said two legacies as having fallen into the residue: Held, by the Court of Exchequer (Kelly, C. B., and Bramwell, Channell, and Cleasby, BB.), that legacy duty at the rate of 10*l.* per cent. was payable at once by the executor upon the two several sums of 600*l.* and 2200*l.* By Kelly, C. B. and Bramwell and Channell, BB., as to both sums, and by Cleasby, B. as to the 2200*l.*, under the express provisions of sect. 12 of the Legacy Duty Act (36 Geo. 3, c. 52), as "a legacy or residue, or part of any personal estate given over for the benefit of, or so that the same shall be enjoyed by, different persons in succession, chargeable with duties at one and the same rate;" and that, according to the provisions of that section, or of the 1st, 2nd, or 3rd sections of the Act, or of the whole of them taken together, the Crown was entitled to that amount of duty; and by Cleasby, B. as to the 600*l.* under sect. 6 of the same Act. In this case, which was a writ of summons from the Exchequer, calling on the executor to show cause why he should not deliver an account of the deceased's estate, and pay the legacy and succession duties chargeable thereon, the practice as to the right to begin being stated to have been varied, the court decided to hear counsel for the Crown in the first instance: (Re the Executors of Greenwood, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 25. Ex.)

RECITALS.

152. Recital of a dissolution of partnership.

Whereas by an indenture dated, &c., and made between the said A. B. of the one part, and the said C. D. of the other part, after reciting (among other things) that the said A. B., having determined to retire from the said partnership, all the partnership accounts, dealings, and transactions had been adjusted and settled between the said parties, it had been mutually agreed that the said partnership should be dissolved, and the said partnership was thereby dissolved accordingly, as from the day of 18; and that the said A. B. should, on the signing thereof, retire from the said concern, and a notice of such dissolution, signed by the said A. B. and C. D. had been or was intended to be inserted in the London Gazette. It was witnessed that for the consideration therein mentioned the said A. B. did assign unto the said C. D. the one equal half part or share, and all other the part share and interest of the said A. B., of and in all and singular the goods, wares, merchandises, stock-in-trade, capital, fixtures, goodwill, property, and effects belonging or due and owing to the said A. B. and C. D., as such partners as aforesaid, and all the estate and interest of the said A. B. therein, to hold the same unto the said C. D., his executors, administrators, and assigns, for his and their own use and benefit.

153. Recital of an agreement to accept surrender of leaseholds.

Whereas the said A. B., at the request of the said C. D., has agreed to grant to him a new lease of the said piece of land and premises for a term, at a rent and subject to certain terms and conditions already agreed upon between them, on having a surrender of the present lease made in manner hereinafter appearing.

153.* Recital of an assignment for benefit of creditors.

Whereas, by an indenture, dated, &c., executed, attested, and registered in manner required by the Bankruptcy Act 1861 and the Bankruptcy Amendment Act 1868, and made between A. B. of the first part, C. D. and E. F. of the second part, and the several persons, &c. [creditors] of the third part, the said A. B. did grant and convey unto the said C. D. and E. F., their heirs and assigns, all and singular the lands, messuages, tenements, hereditaments, and real estate, whatsoever and wheresoever situate, of or to which the said A. B. or any person or persons in trust for him was or were seised, possessed, or entitled, and all leasehold and copyhold estates, lands, messuages, buildings, and tenements whatsoever and wheresoever situate with all appurtenances whatsoever to the same belonging, and all reversions and remainders, rents, issues, and profits thereof, and all the estate and interest of him the said A. B. therein or thereto. And the said A. B. did assign unto the said C. D. and E. F., their executors, administrators, and assigns, all the goods, chattels, personal estate, substance and effects whatsoever and wheresoever of the said A. B. or wherein or thereto he or any person or persons in trust for him was or were interested. And it was by the indenture now in recital declared that the said grant and assignment thereinbefore contained were so made to the said C. D. and E. F., their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns respectively upon trust, that they or the survivor of them, his heirs, executors, or administrators, should at any time thereafter whenever they or he should in their or his absolute discretion think most advisable, sell, convey, transfer, assign and dispose of all the said hereditaments and real leasehold and copyhold estates, and all the personal estate thereinbefore respectively granted and assigned either by public auction or private contract, or partly by one and partly by the other mode, for such price or prices as they or he should in their or his discretion think proper; and to stand possessed of all moneys to be received by them or him under or by virtue of the now reciting indenture, upon the trusts therein mentioned; and it was thereby declared that the receipt of the said C. D. and E. F. should be a sufficient and effectual discharge to the purchaser or purchasers of the said hereditaments and premises thereby granted and assigned, or any part thereof, for his, her, or their purchase money; and that no purchaser, his, her, or their executors, administrators, or assigns, should afterwards be in anywise liable to see to the application of such purchase money, or be answerable or accountable for the misapplication or non-application thereof. (a)

154. Recital of an enfranchisement under Copyhold Acts.

Whereas, by an order of enfranchisement, dated, &c., under the hands and seals of the Copyhold Commissioners, the said commissioners, in pursuance of the powers vested in them by the Copyhold Acts, did, by that award of enfranchisement, duly enfranchise unto the said A. B., his heirs and assigns the piece of land and hereditaments to which the said A. B. was so admitted as aforesaid with the appurtenances [add here, if so, save and except all the rights reserved by the Copyhold Act 1852, sect. 48, or as the case may be]. To hold the same [save and except as aforesaid] unto and to the use of the said A. B., his heirs and assigns as freehold, thenceforth and for ever discharged from all fines, heriots, reliefs, quit rents, and all other incidents whatever of copyhold or customary tenure.

154*. Recital of a conveyance to uses to bar dower, and subject to restrictive covenants.

Whereas, by an indenture dated, &c., and made between A. B. of the one part, and C. D. of the other part, the [piece or parcel of land and] (b) hereditaments hereinafter described, and intended to be hereby [appointed and] granted, with the appurtenances, were assured and limited to such uses [for such estates and in such manner] as the said C. D. should by deed appoint, and in default of [and until and subject to] any such appointment, to the use of the said C. D. and his assigns, during his life, without impeachment of waste, with remainder to the use of Y. Z., his executors, and administrators, during the life of the said C. D., in trust for him and his assigns, with remainder to the use of the said C. D., his heirs and assigns. And in the indenture now in recital were contained certain covenants on the part of the said C. D., his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, restrictive of the mode of user and enjoyment of the said piece or parcel of land and hereditaments hereinafter described and intended to be hereby [appointed and] granted.

THE EARL OF GRANARD ON THE LAND QUESTION.—The Earl of Granard has written a letter in the Freeman's Journal on the necessity of an equitable settlement of the land question. In the many Bills brought before Parliament, both by Whig and Tory administrations, Lord Granard says the value of the Ulster custom of tenant right has been fully recognised. The proviso recurs in every one of them, "That nothing herein contained shall affect the custom of Ulster." To this custom he thinks the prosperity of the Northern province due, and as a system "tested by the experience of nearly three centuries," he prefers it to any "more theoretically perfect and untried system." The true solution of the land question, Lord Granard therefore thinks, "lies in the passing of an Act which would give the force of law to the custom of Ulster, extend its beneficial provisions to the whole of Ireland, and at the same time provide for a periodical Government valuation for letting purposes, with power of appeal in case of dispute to a local and inexpensive tribunal, such as the Court of Quarter Sessions." Lord Granard adds his conviction that if such an enactment became law, the southern and western counties, "with their milder climate and more fertile soil, would soon equal, if not outstrip, the prosperous condition of the north. Such outrages on humanity as the Cloneen evictions, and acts of a similar nature, would become impossible—agrarian disturbances would be a thing of the past, feelings of mutual confidence, hitherto held in abeyance by unjust laws, would revive between landlord and tenant, and each would find that their common interest lay in the improvement and regeneration of their common country."

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

PRIVATE BILL—LOCUS STANDI.—An improvement Bill promoted by the commissioners of M. for the extension of their borrowing powers, but without increase of rates, was petitioned against by the G. W. Railway Company, by whom the M. Railway, within the commissioners' limits,

(a) In order that trustees may be able to make title to a purchaser of real or leasehold estate after the lapse of three months from the execution of the assignment the provisions of the 68th section of the Act of 1849 must be complied with. (See Precedent 86 sup., p. 433, and note c.)

was worked under agreement, but of which they had not yet become statutory lessees, though a Bill for that purpose was before Parliament. The Act authorising the M. Railway was prior in point of date to the commissioners' original Act of 1857, and under those Acts the railway was liable to rating on its full value. The G. W. Co., who became the workers of the line since 1857, and paid the rates, now contended that the rating should be reduced to the usual scale of one-fourth: Held, that the petitioners had no locus standi: (Milford Improvement Bill, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 1. Court of Referees).

CONTRIBUTORY—NOTICE OF ALLOTMENT.—RATIFICATION OF ACTS OF AGENT.—B., applying for shares, requested that notice of allotment might be handed to C., one of the promoters of the company. The shares were allotted, and on C. applying for them a bundle containing numerous letters of allotment was handed to him. It was disputed if the allotment to B. was among them, but it was proved that when they were so handed to C., B.'s letter to the company had not been posted, but it was afterwards sent by B. to C., and by him produced to the company. B. had paid nothing in respect of the shares. Upon appeal he was held to be a contributory: (Rosaz's case, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 10. L. J.).

WINDING-UP—PRACTICE—PROOF.—The B. company gave to a bank as collateral security, certain debentures, containing a covenant to pay to C., his executors, or bearer, the sums mentioned. The debentures had been made out in C.'s name, with a view to a transaction between him and the company, which went off. They were handed to the bank, but not formally assigned. The bank was held to take them irrespective of any equities existing between C. and the company, and that it was not entitled to prove upon them having already proved for the debt: (Re Blakely Ordnance Company, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 12. M. R.).

DIRECTORS—PROMOTERS—PROMOTION MONEY.—A limited company was incorporated in 1863 for the purpose of establishing an international bank under a concession to be obtained by a foreign Government. The nominal capital of the company was 1,200,000*l.* in 60,000 shares, of which the first issue was to be 30,000*l.* It was provided by the articles of association that as soon as the allotment of shares under the first issue should take place, the directors should pay 10,000*l.* to the promoters. Before the concession was obtained so as to place the company in a position to begin business, and only when about 5000 shares had been subscribed for, the directors allotted the shares, and paid 5000*l.* to the promoters, who on the same day paid 500*l.* a-piece to four of the directors. This payment to the promoters almost exhausted the funds of the company, and it was soon afterwards ordered to be wound-up. On a bill by the company and its official liquidator against the directors to render them liable for a breach of trust in thus misapplying the moneys of the company and to compel repayment thereof: Held, that no decree could be made as to the 5000*l.*, as the persons who had received the money had not been made parties to the suit, but that each of the directors must refund to the company the 500*l.* received by him from the promoters: Held, also, that when costs are given against a company in the process of winding-up, they are to be paid by the liquidator out of the assets, and are not to be proved for: (The Madrid Bank v. Pelly, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 13. M. R.).

RAILWAY—ARBITRATION—LANDS CLAUSES ACT.—C. agreed with a railway company, that, in consideration of the stipulations of the company, he should withdraw his opposition to the Bill in Parliament, and it was agreed that if such Act passed in any form, the company should purchase the plaintiff's interest, and the contract contained various stipulations as to price, drainage, roads, &c., the value of the property, compensation, &c., in case of difference, to be referred to a surveyor. It was, inter alia, provided that the plaintiff should cease building. The Act passed, and the plaintiff sent in a claim for 46,000*l.*, and the matter being referred to a surveyor, he awarded 16,675*l.*, but was silent as to interest and costs; and added a statutory declaration that he made the award under the Lands Clauses Act. A dispute then arose, the plaintiff claiming against the company interest on the purchase-money and the costs of the reference, and filing a bill for the specific performance of the agreement. The plaintiff had ceased building, but the company had never taken possession:

Held, that, although the company never had possession, it was the same thing, as the plaintiff was deprived of it, and the proceeding was as much under the Lands Clauses Act as if the royal assent to the Special Act had been obtained before the agreement, and as putting into motion the compulsory powers, and therefore in substance under that statute. The company were therefore liable for interest, and as the award was silent as to costs, it must be assumed that the surveyor intended the company to pay them, and they were therefore liable: (Catling v. The Great Northern Railway Company, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 17. V. C. M.).

WINDING-UP—PETITION—PRACTICE.—On a petition to wind-up on the ground of a misapplication of the funds by the directors, it must be conclusively shown that the court may interfere under sect. 79 of the Bankruptcy Act 1862: (Re The Anglo-Egyptian Navigation Company, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 19. V. C. J.).

LIABILITY OF TELEGRAPH COMPANY FOR ERROR IN MESSAGE.—When a message is sent by a telegraph company the contract is one alone with the sender and not with the sendee of such message. Where, therefore, A., resident in London, informed B., resident at Hull, that he had a cargo of ice at Grimsby, and requested an offer from them for the same by telegraph, and B. thereupon sent a telegraphic message by the defendants making an offer of 23*s.* per ton, which was erroneously read off by the defendants' servants at London as 27*s.* per ton; whereupon A. caused the ice to be tendered to B. at Hull at this price, and B. refused to receive it, as not being the price he had offered: Held, upon an action brought by A. against the company for the loss he had sustained by their error, that the contract was between B. and the defendants, and that there was no relationship between A. and B., of principal and agent, and so the action could not be maintained: (Playford v. The United Kingdom Electric Telegraph Company, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 21. Q. B.).

THE ALBERT AMALGAMATIONS.—Mr. J. Winn Knight, M.P., writes:—"I see it stated in your paper, in the account of the affairs of the Albert Insurance Office, that on the amalgamation of the Bank of London and National Provincial Association with the Albert Company the directors of the association received 200*l.* each. I was a director of that association during its short existence (my only experience in such a capacity), and a cheque for 200*l.* was actually sent to me on that occasion, which I refused to accept and returned to the office. At the same time I wrote a circular to my co-directors to say that I took this step because I considered that the money belonged to the share or policy-holders, and not to the directors. I hope you will kindly allow me to make this explanation in your columns."

THE TELEGRAPH ACT.—On the 9th ult. an Act to alter and amend the Telegraph Act of 1868 received the Royal assent, and arrangements are being made, and are expected shortly to be perfected, to transfer the telegraphs to the Postmaster-General. By the new Act the Treasury is empowered to raise 7,000,000*l.* The gross revenue received by the Postmaster-General for the transmission of messages by means of electric telegraphs is to be paid into the Exchequer to the account of the Consolidated Fund, and the expenses incurred with the sanction of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury in working, maintaining, or extending telegraphs to be paid out of moneys to be voted by Parliament. By the recited Act (31 & 32 Vict. c. 110) the Postmaster-General was empowered to purchase the whole or part of the undertaking of any telegraph company except the Atlantic Telegraph Company and the Anglo-American Telegraph Company. The Postmaster-General was required by the former Act to make one uniform charge for the transmission of telegraphic messages throughout the United Kingdom, and it is declared in the present statute that in order to protect the public revenue it is expedient that similar powers to those conferred upon the Postmaster-General with respect to the exclusive privilege of conveying letters should be enacted with reference to the transmission of public telegraphic messages within the United Kingdom. Agreements have been made with certain telegraph companies to pay them 5,715,048*l.* 8*s.* 11*d.*, and it is estimated that the amount which will be required for the other purposes of the recited Act and of the new Act will not exceed 300,000*l.*, besides 700,000*l.* with railway companies, and the chief object of the present Act is to give authority to the Commissioners of the Treasury to raise the funds which will be required to enable the Postmaster-General to carry into effect the arrangements. There are a few exceptions mentioned to the exclusive privilege of the Postmaster-General sending telegraphic messages, and he is also empowered to transmit foreign messages. The Treasury may raise sums not exceeding 7,000,000*l.*, for the purposes of the Act either by terminable annuities or by the creation of Exchequer bills or bonds, and the moneys raised are to be placed at the disposal of the Postmaster-General under certain regulations. Annual accounts are to be laid before Parliament, as also the regulations made under the new Act. No deed or instrument executed by, to, or with the Postmaster-General is to be liable to stamp duty. Messages are to be deemed post letters, and the provisions of the Telegraph Acts of last year and the present year to be considered as "Post-office laws."

MARITIME LAW.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

SALVAGE—CORPORATIONS FOR WRECKING PURPOSES—COSTS.—Where a vessel and her cargo, worth 250,000 dollars, was towed off the Bomer shoal at the entrance to the harbour of New York, on which she had touched, the service occupying six hours, and being performed by two tugs which were owned by a corporation, incorporated for wrecking purposes, the masters and crews being hired on regular monthly wages, with an agreement that they should not share in any salvage awarded for services rendered by the tugs, and a suit was brought against the ship and her cargo in the names of the masters of the two tugs and the corporation which owned them, for themselves and the crews of the tugs, claiming to recover 25,000 dollars salvage. Held, that under the agreement by which the masters and crews were hired, they must be left out of the case altogether. That the corporation could not claim, as assignees in advance, of what might otherwise be the claims of the masters and crews for salvage, and as the latter had cut themselves off by their contract with the company from making any claim for salvage, such claim never had any existence, so as to be capable of assignment after the fact. That the corporation itself could not be a salvor. That the corporation was entitled to a proper compensation for the use of the two steamers and the appliances on board them for the service rendered, and that the case was to be considered as one of contract for work and labour, without reference to the value of the ship and her cargo. That the hazard to the tugs was also to be taken into consideration, but not the expense to the corporation of keeping the tugs in readiness to perform such work and labour. That on the evidence, 1500 dollars was a sufficient compensation, and as an offer of 2000 dollars had been made as a compromise before suit, no costs were allowed: (The Stratton Audley, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 31. New York Adm. Ct.)

SHIP—STOPPAGE IN TRANSIT—CONTINUANCE OF TRANSITUS—ASSIGNMENT BY INSOLVENT CONSIGNEES TO SECURE ANTECEDENT DEBT BEFORE ARRIVAL OF BILLS OF LADING.—A mercantile firm carried on business at London and Hong Kong. The London firm purchased goods of merchants in Manchester for the firm at Hong Kong. The goods were forwarded to London to the shipping agents of the firm there, and were shipped for Hong Kong on the latter's instructions. The bills of lading were in the ordinary form, but the invoices relating to the greater part of the goods contained the stipulation that the Hong Kong firm should remit the proceeds of sales to the London firm to meet acceptances given to the vendors of the latter. The Hong Kong partner and consignee of the goods had had bill transactions with banking firms there, resulting in a large unsecured debt. Being pressed for payment, the consignee on behalf of the firm executed to the banks an assignment of various other property and all goods and bills of lading to arrive within a certain period. This assignment included the goods mentioned above. Afterwards, on the arrival of the goods, the consignee indorsed and handed over the bills of lading, in performance of the agreement in the assignment. The Hong Kong branch of the firm was at this time insolvent, and had been so at the date of the assignment: The owners of the vessel in which the goods were shipped refused to deliver the goods to the indorsees of the bills of lading, in consequence of notices to stop given them by the unpaid vendors, and the indorsees thereupon brought an action for conversion against the ship owners: On appeal to the judicial committee: Held, first, that the transitus did not terminate till the arrival of the goods at Hong Kong, for the general rule is that where goods are sold to be sent to a particular destination, named by the vendor, the right of the unpaid vendor continues until they arrive and are delivered there according to the bills of lading; and, second, that as the assignors had not, at the date of the assignment, possession of the bills of lading, and, as nothing was advanced on the faith of them, the effect of the assignment could only be to transfer the interest that the assignors had in the goods expected; this interest being subject to special stipulations as to remittances in the case of part of the goods, and in all to the lien of the unpaid vendors: The general rule is that the assignee of any security stands in the same position as the assignor as to the equities arising upon it. An exception, founded on the negotiable quality of the document, is made in the case of the holder of an indorsed bill of lading, who may, in the course of commercial dealing, transfer a greater right than he himself has. But this exception is confined to the case where the transferee is himself in actual and authorised possession of the bill of lading, and the transferee gives value on the faith of it, without having notice of any circumstance which would render the transaction neither fair nor honest: (Rodger v. The Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 33. Priv. Co.)

MERCANTILE LAW.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT—INSURANCE TO SECURE RUNNING ACCOUNT—RECEIPT OF SUM INSURED—OVERPLUS.—The defendant was the agent for an officer in the army, and supplied him from time to time with goods as an army accoutrement maker. Policies of insurance were effected on the officer's life to secure any amount that might be due from him at his death. The premiums paid were carried to the debit of his account. At the death of the officer the debt due to the principal was about 1800*l.* The moneys received from the insurance office were about 3550*l.*: Held, that the difference between the debt and the money received was a balance due to the estate of the deceased officer: (Bruce v. Garden, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 1002. V.C. J.)

DOMICIL IN FRANCE.—A judgment of interest to foreign families of which members have contracted matrimonial alliances in France has been given in the Civil Court of Paris. The facts of the case were these:—M. de Brimont married, about two years ago, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Penniman, American subjects. No contract was drawn up, but the parents of the lady promised verbally, according to M. de Brimont, to make the young couple an annual allowance of 50,000*fr.* as a marriage portion. The young wife died a few months back, leaving an infant daughter, and Mr. Penniman, who until then had paid regularly the money, refused to continue it to the son-in-law. The last named now brought a suit to enforce the continuance of the payment, as alimony for himself and daughter. The parents of the deceased lady, while offering to bring up the child, resisted the demand, on the ground that the plaintiff was a spendthrift; that he had concealed numerous debts when he married, and had since contracted new ones, and moreover that he was young, and might by his labour procure for himself sufficient resources. The tribunal, however, decided that, as De Brimont was without means of existence, and that as his own mother was not in a position of fortune to assist her son and granddaughter, the plaintiff had a right to an alimentary pension from his wife's parents; and consequently condemned them to pay an annual sum of 18,000*fr.*, of which 6000*fr.* is for M. de Brimont, and 12,000*fr.* for his infant daughter.

LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATIONS.

BEFORE ENTERING INTO ARTICLES OF CLERKSHIP TO ATTORNEYS AND SOLICITORS.

Pursuant to the Judges' Orders, the Preliminary Examination in General Knowledge will take place on Wednesday the 9th and Thursday the 10th February 1870, and will comprise—

1. Reading aloud a passage from some English Author.
2. Writing from dictation.
3. English Grammar.
4. Writing a short English composition.
5. Arithmetic.—A competent knowledge of the first four rules, simple and compound.

6. Geography of Europe and of the British Isles.
 7. History.—Questions on English History.
 8. Latin.—Elementary knowledge of Latin.
 9. 1. Latin. 2. Greek, Ancient or Modern. 3. French. 4. German. 5. Spanish. 6. Italian.
- The Special Examiners have selected the following books, in which candidates will be examined in the subjects numbered 9 at the Examination on the 9th and 10th February 1870:—
- In Latin—Cæsar, De Bello Gallico, I. II., or Virgil, Æneid, book vi.
- In Greek—Sophocles, Edipus Tyrannus.
- In Modern Greek—Bivvαrης, Ἱστορία τῆς Ἀρχαίας Βυβλίου.
- In French—Xavier de Maistre, La jeune Sibérienne; or, Corneille, Le Cid.
- In German—Goethe, Goetz von Berlichingen; or, Wieland, Oberon, Gesang I bis 6.
- In Spanish—Cervantes, Don Quixote, cap. xv. to xxx. both inclusive; or Moratin, El Sí de las Niñas.
- In Italian—Manzoni's I Promessi Sposi, cap. i. to viii. both inclusive; or Tasso's Gerusalemme, 4, 5, and 6 cantos; and Volpe's Eton Italian Grammar.

With reference to the subjects numbered 9, each candidate will be examined in one language only, according to his selection. Candidates will have the choice of either of the above-mentioned works.

The Examinations will be held at the Incorporated Law Society's Hall, Chancery Lane, London, and at some of the following Towns:—Birmingham, Brighton, Bristol, Cambridge, Cardiff, Carlisle, Carmarthen, Chester, Durham, Exeter, Lancaster, Leeds, Lincoln, Liverpool, Maidstone, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Oxford, Plymouth, Salisbury, Shrewsbury, Swansea, Worcester, York.

Candidates are required by the Judges' Orders to give one calendar month's notice to the Incorporated Law Society, before the day appointed for the Examination, of the language in which they propose to be examined, the place at which they wish to be examined, and their age and place of education. All notices should be addressed to the Secretary of the Incorporated Law Society, Chancery-lane, W.C.

E. W. WILLIAMSON, Secretary.

COUNTY COURTS.

THE COUNTY COURTS AND MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS.

The County Court Judges ought to feel highly flattered. They are Judges in equity, common law, admiralty and bankruptcy. It is now proposed to add to this trifling jurisdiction over municipal elections. The Select Committee on Elections say in their draft report that "it is difficult to find any more simple or inexpensive tribunal before which such cases could be tried than the County Court." And, again they say, "We see no reason why power to take proceedings in the nature of a petition against the return of a town councillor before the judge of a County Court should not be given."

We observe that this subject has been discussed in the daily press, and the jurisdiction objected to on two grounds, first, that the courts are already overloaded, and secondly that the courts are not properly constituted for the purpose. On the first point there cannot be two opinions. On the second point many will agree with the daily press. It has been said that a single Common Law Judge is not a satisfactory tribunal, and the grounds of objection to the higher jurisdiction apply with greater force to the lower. In all probability there is a stronger political element amongst the County Court Judges, than amongst the Judges of the Superior Courts. Then again County Court Judges of boroughs with corporations are more or less known to the leading inhabitants, and might not be so free from local feeling as to be able to dispose of their new business with satisfaction to themselves and the persons affected by their decision.

But apart from these considerations we question whether the Judges of the Inferior Courts would accept with any better grace than their brethren of the Superior Courts this invidious jurisdiction. It is eminently desirable that judges of all kinds should stand neutral in cases affecting communities in which probably there is a balance of delinquency. In municipal contests there is frequently much bitterness and party spirit, and all investigations into the elections would require great care, and the exercise of the most cautious impartiality; and we say, without hesitation, that the addition of this jurisdiction to the others already thrust upon the County Courts would weaken their administrative power.

There is a further consideration. The judges are asking for more salary, and with every right to receive it. One thing at a time. First let them be paid properly for what they are doing and then new jurisdictions might be considered, and perhaps imposed accompanied by appropriate pecuniary considerations.—County Courts Chronicle for September.

LEYBURN COUNTY COURT.

Thursday, Aug. 19.

(Before E. R. TURNER, Esq., Judge.)

Assault upon a County Court bailiff.

An application was made by Mr. Herring, the high bailiff, for an order against Joseph Hammond, of Ilton-cum-Pott, farmer, for an assault upon Joseph Lee, the assistant-bailiff of the County Court of Ripon, whilst levying an execution issued out of this court upon the goods of Joseph Hammond. It appeared that on the 2nd Aug. Mr. Lee went to defendant's house with the execution to levy the sum of 21. 13s. Defendant stated that he had paid the debt and costs to a debt collecting "chap" from Darlington about a week after the court day, which was held in February. This man said that if he did not pay he should go to Leyburn and take out an execution. Hammond was told that the person to whom he had paid the debt had not handed the money over, consequently he must pay it over again. Defendant said he would not believe the laws of England would make him pay the money over again, and in this view he was supported by Verity, his son-in-law. Finding Hammond was determined not to pay, Mr. Lee proceeded to levy and searched for something portable to realise the amount. For this purpose he went into a bedroom, and whilst opening a closet door Verity seized him from behind and prevented him from going near the closet, asking him if he intended to rob them. Hammond then came into the room and attempted to strike the officer with a stick, but was prevented by Verity, and whilst they were scuffling the officer went down stairs, followed by Hammond and Verity, when Hammond put him out of the house by force. The offence was admitted, and his Honour expressed his intention of making the order applied for under the powers of the 14th section of the 9 & 10 Vict., c. 96.

Mr. Herring interposed, and said there was no doubt there were extenuating circumstances, defendant having paid the money to a person who signed J. Dargue, pro W. Place, who is represented to be the manager of the Victoria Trade Protection Society Debt Collecting Offices, 50, Dean-street, Newcastle-on-Tyne, and 5, Station-terrace, Darlington. The parties had also agreed to give a public apology for their conduct. He would therefore ask his Honour to mitigate the amount of penalty.

His Honour said if Mr. Herring had not interceded he should have made an order for the full penalty of 5*l*. From defendant's admission the officer had been assaulted, and it was no excuse paying the money to an unauthorised person. He should order them to pay 10*s*. each and costs.

BANKRUPTCY LAW.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

BANKRUPTCY—CONTINGENT DEBT NOT PROVABLE UNDER.—The M. Insurance Company had, in Jan. 1866, lent a large sum in Consols to be deposited by the promoter of a Bill then before Parliament. The plaintiffs, the defendant, and others, six in all, entered into an undertaking with the company, that if the Bill was thrown out the Consols should be returned, and that if it passed (which was the event that happened), an equal amount of stock should be transferred to the company, and that a sum in the nature of interest on the value of the Consols (at the time they were lent) from the end of six months to the date of the transfer should be repaid to the company. In June 1866 the defendant was adjudicated a bankrupt. In July he obtained his certificate. In August the Bill passed, but the Consols were not transferred till the 8th July 1867, and the plaintiffs were compelled to pay under the undertaking 500*l*. as an equivalent for interest. Upon an action brought against the defendant to recover his contribution for one-sixth part of the above sum, he pleaded his bankruptcy: Held, that this claim was not provable under his bankruptcy, and so his bankruptcy was no answer to the action: (Cary v. Dawson, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 23. Q. B.)

JOINT AND SEPARATE CREDITORS.—The case, Re Evans and Evans, which was lately before the Bankruptcy Court, is another illustration of the absurdity of bankruptcy law as to joint and separate creditors. The distinction becomes, under the clauses of the Bankruptcy Acts, a reason for upsetting an arrangement to which the only creditors who ought to be concerned had assented, and which on the face of it appears perfectly fair. The case was as to the validity of a deed by which, under subsequent arrangements for the sale of the property, including the sale of a portion of it to the bankrupts, the creditors on the joint estate were to receive 5*s*. in the pound, although the assets only showed 3*s*., while the separate creditors would only receive 4*s*. 6*d*. in the one case, and 1*s*. 6*d*. in the other. The arrangement was in short in the nature of a composition, by which the bankrupts in exchange for a portion of the joint estate agreed to make up the joint dividend to 5*s*. Upon these facts advantage was taken by the separate creditors who had not assented to contend that they ought to be counted as among the "creditors," joint and separate; creditors being spoken of indiscriminately in the Act, and that the arrangement being equivalent to a bonus to the joint creditors, the consent of the latter went for nothing, and the deed was invalid, not being agreed to by the requisite number of creditors. Mr. Commissioner Winslow decided that this view was correct, and dismissed the motion of the joint creditors against a petition for adjudication of bankruptcy. Yet it is plain that only the joint creditors should have anything to do with the joint estate, and that under a proper law no harm could come to the separate estates, as the joint creditors should also be entitled to prove against them till they were paid in full. Proceedings have been stayed for the opportunity of appeal, but under the present law it is to be feared such cases of injustice must be unavoidable.

CORRESPONDENCE OF THE PROFESSION.

[NOTE.—This department of the LAW TIMES being open to free discussion on all professional topics, the Editor is not responsible for any opinions or statements contained in it.]

LARCENY BY SERVANT—EMBEZZLEMENT.—In your last number, under title "Notes of New Decisions," two heads appear as "Larceny by Servant," and "Embezzlement," and reference is made to the reported case of Reg. v. Dartnell, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 1020. On referring to the first case, your readers will observe that the case Reg. v. Low, cited by Mr. Perkins for the prosecution, is reported as "doubted" by Mr. Justice Byles. As that case and that against Dartnell are very important, and, I believe, of not uncommon occurrence, allow me to explain that the judge asked to see the report of Reg. v. Low, but it was not to be had in Huntingdon, and hence his Lordship (as the point was new to him) declined to act upon it; but it can hardly be said that as he never saw it he doubted its authority; and, considering that it was decided by the Court of Criminal Appeal, at which five judges presided (although neither the Lord Chief Justice Cockburn nor Mr. Justice Byles were present), who were unanimous in their judgment, I cannot but think that if the report had been forthcoming, it would have removed all doubt at the assizes. Now, as to the case of "embezzlement," which is reported, "Mr. Justice Byles dubitante," allow me to explain that when it appeared in evidence that the accused had no authority to receive money "by virtue of his employment" on behalf of Mr. Story, his master, the judge was about to stop the case, when his attention was called by Mr. Heathcote to the purported omission (see Greaves on the Consolidation Acts, 2nd edit., p. 156) of those words in the new statute, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 68, that his Lordship sent for, and perused the statutes 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 47; and 9 Geo. 4, c. 55, s. 40, and that of Victoria; and after doing so, thanked Mr. Heathcote for having called his attention to the point, and added that his doubts were removed, and therefore the trial proceeded, and the prisoner was found guilty and sentenced as reported by you. NOTES AND QUERIES ON POINTS OF PRACTICE.

[N.B.—None are inserted unless the name and address of the writers are sent, not necessarily for publication, but as a guarantee for bona fides.]

Queries.

81. ATTORNEY—CHANGE OF NAME.—What steps must be taken by an attorney, in addition to those taken by other persons, before he can change his name, and the probable expense attendant thereon? ATTORNEY.

82. CALL TO THE BAR—ATTORNEY.—How must an attorney proceed before he can be called to the Bar, and the time that must elapse from the taking of the first step (which is I believe to apply to be struck off the Rolls), before he can be so called? AN ASPIRANT.

83. COUNTY COURTS ACT 1867, s. 2—REGISTRARS' AND HIGH BAILIFFS' DUTIES.—1st. Is it the duty of the high bailiff on service of a summons under this section in the home court to return to the registrar (with the duplicate summons), an affidavit of such service; or is it his duty to wait until required by the plaintiff to furnish such affidavit? 2nd. Is an affidavit of service by the high bailiff of a foreign court sufficient proof of service for all purposes in the cause: e. g., sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to sign judgment without being required to procure from such high bailiff, and produce a further affidavit? Vide s. 2. REGISTRAR.

84. THE BANKRUPTCY ACT 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 184).—Will any of your numerous correspondents kindly inform me whether any decision has been given in a Superior Court affecting the following section, and if so, the case? Sect. 184: "That no creditor having security for his debt, or having made any attachment in London or in any other place by virtue of any custom there used, of the goods and chattels of the bankrupt, shall receive upon any such security or attachment more than a rateable part of such debt, except in respect of any execution or extent served and levied by seizure, and sale upon, or any mortgage of, or lien upon, any part of the property of such bankrupt before the date of the fiat, or the filing of a petition for adjudication of bankruptcy." A. holds a bill of sale of B's chattels, he enters and takes possession, but before sale B. files his petition. Is not the assignee of B. entitled under this clause, to recover the goods or their value? AN OLD SUBSCRIBER.

85. WINE AND BEERHOUSE ACT 1869.—A person holding a licence for sale of beer to be drunk on the premises omitted to give twenty-one days' notice to the overseers, &c., of his intention to apply at the annual licensing meeting for a certificate for renewal of his licence as required by the above Act. The meeting was duly adjourned for a month under the Alehouse Licensing Act (9 Geo. 4, c. 61), and the beer seller has given the twenty-one days' notice of application at the adjournment. May I trouble you to give your opinion whether the certificate can be legally granted at the adjournment? A SUBSCRIBER.

86. TEN YEARS' CLERKS.—Would some of your numerous readers kindly say if it is absolutely necessary for a ten years' clerk to pass a preliminary examination, and, if so, what are the subjects he is to be examined upon? A. B.

87. MARITIME LAW.—A. holds nine shares of a vessel, and mortgages them to B. B. is entered on the register as mortgagee of these shares. The ship has been insured. A. dies, and the vessel gets lost about the same time. The mortgagee calls up A.'s share of the insurance money, but is refused it by the ship's husband on the ground that his receipt for it would not be a valid one, and that A.'s administrators are the proper parties to receive it. Question: Would the ship's husband, under the circumstances, be safe in taking a receipt from B. for A.'s share of the insurance money without his indemnifying him against any future claim that might be made by A.'s administrators? An answer in your next by a correspondent would oblige. I. H. E.

Answers.

(Q. 76.) MORTGAGE.—It appears to me that B. can only assign the residue of the term of 500 years. The fee simple was not conveyed to him; by what means, therefore can he grant that? Certainly the power of sale seems to favour that idea, but the assignment and the power are two repugnant clauses, and the rule is that if there be a repugnancy, the first words in a deed and the last words in a will shall prevail. I. H. C.

—Allow me to call the attention of S. Z. R. and W. P. to the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145, ss. 15, 16, and 32, which seem to have escaped their consideration, and to leave this query in a state of considerable doubt. ADVOCATE.

(Q. 77.) LANDLORD AND TENANT.—The question in cases like this is quo animo the rent and keys were received, and what the real intention of both parties was. In the case of Phene v. Popplewell, 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 247, it was held, that acceptance of the keys by the landlord, together with the other acts therein specified, "amounted to a surrender by operation of law, and, therefore, no rent could be recovered which might become due after the keys were left with him." I think the landlord could not succeed with a plea ignorancia legis. I. H. C.

(Q. 78.) ARTICLED CLERK.—I beg to refer "W. O." to the case of Ex parte Walter Peppercorn, 14 L. T. Rep. N. S. 252, which is the only case I can find relating to the subject of his query: (See also the 10th section of 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127). I. H. C.

(Q. 79.) REPAIRING FENCES.—If B. had, by user, obtained a prescriptive right to the use of the wall, I think an action might be maintained against A. for the damage. In the absence of that right, the case of Churchill v. Evans, 1 Taunt. 529, decides that "where two persons are possessed of adjoining closes, neither being in any obligation to fence, each must take care that his cattle do not enter the land of the other." Which leads one to presume that he should fence his own land. I. H. C.

(Q. 80.) EXECUTION.—A's remedy, if the company could not pay its debts, would be by petition to have the company wound-up; or perhaps he might proceed under the 61st section of the Common Law Procedure Act 1854, and obtain an attachment of all rent due from the lessees. I. H. C.

(Q. 81.) CRIMINAL LAW.—According to the facts stated in this query, C. D. is not liable to any criminal proceeding at the instance of A. B. It should always be borne in mind that concealment and secrecy constitute the very essence of the offence of embezzlement. The bare nonpayment of money received on behalf of another would not be considered in law as an act of embezzlement, if its receipt were accounted for in the ordinary and usual manner, and there was no denial or concealment of the fact: (Sleigh's Criminal Law, p. 61.) W. H. F.

(Q. 82.) SALE BY SHERIFF.—In the table of fees to be taken by sheriffs, under sheriffs, sheriff's agents, bailiffs and others, the officers or ministers of sheriffs in England and Wales, pursuant to the statute, 1 Vict. c. 55, is the following item:—"For every sale by auction, notwithstanding the defendant should become bankrupt or insolvent, where the property sold does not produce more than 300*l.*, 5 per cent., 400*l.* 4 per cent., 500*l.* 3 per cent., and where it exceeds 500*l.*, 2*½* per cent. LAW LIBRARY.

An Historical Sketch of the French Bar, from its Origin to the Present Day. By ARCHIBALD YOUNG, Advocate. Edinburgh: Edmonston and Douglas.

Numerous anecdotes are related by Mr. Young of the great advocates who appeared in the first history of the Bar. From the very earliest times they were distinguished for their independence and courage, never fearing to face the sovereign in defence of the rights of the subject. Here is one of Louis Servin in 1620:

Louis Servin, first simple advocate and subsequently Advocate-General, was highly distinguished for his eloquence and for his resolute and independent spirit. When Louis XIII. came to hold a lit de justice in Feb. 1620, in order to compel the registration of certain edicts which the Parliament had declined to register, Servin addressed him in the following plain-spoken terms: "Sire, we hold it very strange that your Majesty proceeds to the registration of our edicts by so extraordinary a method as to come to your Court of Parliament, contrary to the ancient forms preserved from time immemorial. . . . To-day, seduced by evil councils, you come into your court, to deprive us of the means of deliberating with freedom of conscience. . . . If the presence of your Majesty compels us to pass beyond all these considerations, it shall be under protestation." Six years after Louis held another lit de justice, to procure the registration of eight edicts which had in view the creation and revocation of certain offices, and the establishment of taxes upon a number of articles of consumption. Cardinal Richelieu, the author of the edicts, was present; but Servin, who spoke for the Procureur-General, was not on that account the less free in his remonstrances. He had just pronounced the words, "You will acquire a more desirable glory by gaining the hearts of your subjects, than by subduing your enemies," when he was seized with apoplexy, and fell expiring at the feet of the king, and in the presence of the Parliament, on whose behalf he was protesting against the royal edicts. He died on the field of honour in March, 1626.

Among the most famous of the names that distinguished the French Bar previously to the Revolution is that of D'Aguesseau, who was born at Limoges in 1668, and appointed King's Advocate at the early age of twenty-one. He was Advocate-General at thirty-two, and Chancellor at forty-eight. Of him it is reported, that his first discourse as Advocate-General had for its subject the independence of the Bar, of which he is a magnificent eulogiser.

In it occur these words, so often quoted: "It is an order as ancient as the magistracy, as noble as virtue, as necessary as justice; it is distinguished by a character which is peculiar to itself, and it alone always maintains the happy and peaceful possession of independence." Of the advocate he says: "Free, without being useless to his country, he devotes himself to the public without being a slave to it, and condemning the indifference of the philosopher who seeks independence in indolence, he laments the misfortune of those who only enter upon public duties at the expense of their liberty." D'Aguesseau pronounced another famous oration in 1699, on "The Causes of the Decay of Eloquence," which is deserving of attentive perusal; and, in 1716, composed instructions for the use of his son, which treat specially of the science of law, and in which he particularly recommends the study of the pleadings of the most eminent counsel, and attendance at the conferences of the order of advocates, as the best means of forming a young orator and a young magistrate.

Of Normand, another great name, it is reported that nothing could persuade him to take up a cause which he believed to be unjust, and his scrupulous accuracy with regard to what he asserted was so well known that the judges used to say of him, "Believe a fact at once when Normand attests it." Still more celebrated was his contemporary Cochin, who was numbered on the roll of advocates at the age of nineteen. After one of his great speeches, Normand remarked to him that he had never heard anything so eloquent, to which Cochin, with true French grace, replied, "It is evident, sir, that you do not belong to the number of those who hear themselves."

Of Gerbier, another great advocate of the eighteenth century, it is said that he once received a fee of 4000*l.* from the company of the Indies, and a fee of 20,000*l.* from a Sieur cadet whose cause he had successfully pleaded.

The Bar, as an order of the State, was swept away in the torrent of the Revolution, its last defender being, strangely enough, no less a personage than Robespierre, whose speech may at no distant future be applicable to ourselves.

The resolution putting an end to it was passed upon the report of an advocate of Lyon named Bergasse, who had previously acquired considerable reputation at the Bar. His report of 17th Aug. 1789, concludes in the following terms: "Every one shall have the right of pleading his own cause himself, if he thinks proper; and in order that the office of advocate may be as free as it ought to be, advocates shall cease to form a corporation or an order, and every citizen having made the necessary studies and submitted to the necessary examinations, shall have the right to exercise that profession: he shall be bound to answer for his conduct only to the law." Strange to say, none of the advocates in the Constituent Assembly stood up in defence of the Bar, and the laws of 16th Aug. and 2nd Sept. 1790, abolished the order of advocates. One orator only defended them in the Assembly, and that orator was Robespierre, with whose true and prophetic, as well as eloquent words, we close the present chapter. "The Bar," he said, "seems still to display liberty exiled from the rest of the world; it is there that we still find the courage of truth which dares to proclaim the rights of the weak and oppressed against the powerful oppressor. The exclusive power of defending citizens shall be conferred by three judges and by three lawyers. In that case you will no longer behold in the sanctuary of justice those men of deep feeling capable of rising to enthusiasm in behalf of the cause of the unfortunate, those independent and eloquent men, the support of innocence and the scourge of crime. They will be repelled, but you will have welcomed lawyers without delicacy, without enthusiasm for their duties, and only urged on in a noble career by sordid considerations of interest. You mistake, you degrade functions precious to humanity, essential to the progress of public order; you close that school of civic virtues where talent and merit learned, while pleading the cause of citizens before the judge, to defend thereafter that of the people in the legislative assemblies."

Many members of the Bar were prominent in the Revolution itself. Foremost among them was M. Giraud, who belonged to the provincial bar—that of Bordeaux. His public career, brilliant as it was, lasted only four years. He led the Revolution, but was speedily trodden down by it when he was reluctant to go on. So it will doubtless be with the revolution now in progress among ourselves. He advocated extreme counsels until it was too late to fall back upon moderate measures. The result is thus described:

After the passing of the laws abolishing their order, the former advocates endeavoured to maintain some bond of union among themselves, in hope of better times. But of the 600 names on the roll of 1789, many gave up the Profession, about forty-six accepted some of the newly constituted judicial appointments; and others were elected members of the National Assembly, among whom were Tronchet, Target, Camus, Martineau, Hutteau, Sanson, and Treillard. There remained about 150, who, while accepting the new designation of hommes de loi, were yet united into a sort of voluntary association, preserving the ancient customs and discipline. They carefully avoided mixing themselves up with the intruders, without talent, and often without morality, who came forward to practise before the new tribunals. Among the most distinguished in this group of former advocates we find the names of Delamalle, Bellart, Berryer, Billecoq, Delacroix-Frainville, Gairal, and Gicquel.

Here we must pause. Perhaps, if leisure should permit, we may resume this interesting book, to trace the fortunes of the French Bar from its re-establishment by Napoleon the Great to the present time.

A Treatise on the Law and Practice as to Receivers appointed by the Court of Chancery. By WM. WILLIAMSON KERR, Barrister-at-Law. London: Maxwell.

It will probably surprise the reader to learn that the law relating to receivers in the Court of Chancery is sufficiently large to fill a volume exceeding two hundred pages, and still more that a number of persons are to be found interested in that law sufficient to justify the dedication to their service of a distinct treatise. Those of the Profession who are dealing practically with the law of receivers will thank Mr. Kerr for the great assistance he has in these pages given to them, and it may be safely prophesied that no receiver or person having to advise the appointment of a receiver, or to be the legal adviser of the receiver when appointed, will fail to possess himself of a work which gives such careful and minute instructions what is to be done and to be avoided.

Mr. Kerr commences by a brief statement, which we will cite as a good specimen of his composition, of

THE PRINCIPLES ON WHICH A RECEIVER IS APPOINTED BY THE COURT OF CHANCERY.

The jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery to appoint a receiver has been assumed for the advancement of justice, and is founded on the inadequacy of the remedy to be obtained in the courts of ordinary jurisdiction. There are few cases that can be stated in which the court has not jurisdiction where it is essential to the justice of the case to interfere by appointing a receiver. If the remedy afforded by the courts of ordinary jurisdiction is inadequate for the purposes of justice, the Court of Chancery will, on a proper case being made out, ex debito justitiæ, appoint a receiver.

A receiver is an indifferent person between the parties appointed by the court to collect and receive the rents, issues, and profits of land, or the produce of personal estate, or other things in question pending the suit, which it does not seem reasonable to the court that either party should do; or where a party is incompetent to do so as in the case of an infant. A receiver can only be properly granted for the purpose of getting in and securing funds which this court at the hearing, or in the course of the cause, will have the means of distributing among the persons entitled to those funds.

The object sought by the appointment of a receiver may be generally described to be to provide for the safety of property, pending the litigation which is to decide the right of litigant parties, or during the minority of infants, or to preserve property in danger of being dissipated or destroyed by those to whom it is by law entrusted, or by persons having immediate but partial interests therein.

The appointment of a receiver is a matter resting in the sound discretion of the court. In exercising its discretion the court proceeds with caution, and is governed by a view of the whole circumstances of the case. No positive or unvarying rule can be laid down as to whether the court will, or will not interfere by this kind of interim protection of the property. Where, indeed, the property is as it were in medio, in the enjoyment of no one, the court can hardly do wrong in taking possession. It is the common interest of all parties that the court should prevent a scramble. Such is the case where the receiver of property of a deceased person is appointed pending a litigation as to the right of probate or administration. No one is in the actual enjoyment of property, so circumstanced, and no wrong can be done to anyone by taking and preserving it for the benefit of the successful litigant. But where the object of the plaintiff is to assert a right to property of which the defendant is in enjoyment, the case is necessarily involved in farther questions. The court, by taking possession at the instance of the plaintiff, may be doing a wrong to the defendant; in some cases an irreparable wrong. If the plaintiff should eventually fail in establishing his right against the defendant, the court may, by its interim interference, have caused mischief to the defendant for which the subsequent restoration of the property may afford no adequate compensation. In all cases therefore where the court interferes by appointing a receiver of property in the possession of the defendant, before the title of the plaintiff is established by decree, it exercises a discretion to be governed by all the circumstances of the case. Where the evidence on which the court is to act is very clear in favour of the plaintiff, there the risk of eventual injury to the defendant is very small, and the court does not hesitate to interfere. Where there is more of doubt, there is of course more of difficulty. The question is one of degree, as to which, therefore, it is impossible to lay down any precise or unvarying rule.

The duty of the court upon a motion for a receiver is merely to protect the property in the meantime for the benefit of those persons to whom the court at the hearing of the cause, when it will have before it all the evidence and materials necessary for a determination, shall think it properly belongs. On motion for a receiver the court will not prejudice the cause. The court does not in appointing a receiver say what view it shall take at the hearing. On motion for a receiver the court has not to consider the question of what may be the result at the hearing, nor whether the time may not come when on a different state of things the court would appoint a receiver. In dealing with the applications the court is bound not to go out of its way in order to give the plaintiff an opportunity of obtaining previously to the hearing the opinion of the court upon the subject-matter of the suit. The court is bound to express its opinion only so far as it is necessary to show the grounds on which the interlocutory motion is disposed of. It is the duty of the court to confine itself strictly to the point upon which it is called upon to decide, and not to go into the merits of the case. The court will give no encouragement to any attempt to obtain its decision on important questions before the hearing. The court, will not, indeed, appoint a receiver at the instance of a person whose right is disputed, where the effect of the order would be to establish the right, even if the court be satisfied that the person against whom the demand is made is fencing off the claim.

In determining whether it shall appoint a receiver, the court deals with the case as it appears upon the pleadings and evidence, and stands on the record. If the court is satisfied upon the materials it has before it that the relief prayed by the bill will be given when a decree is pronounced, and that it is necessary or expedient to secure the property until the hearing, there is a case for the appointment of a receiver. If it appears to the court that the plaintiff has established a good prima facie equitable title, and that the property, the subject-matter of the suit, is in danger if left in the possession of the party against whom the receiver is prayed until the hearing, or, at least that there is reason to apprehend that the plaintiff will be in a worse situation, if the appointment of a receiver be delayed, the appointment of a receiver is almost a matter of course. If there is no danger to the property, and no fact is in evidence to show the necessity or expediency of appointing a receiver, a receiver will not be appointed, unless there be some other equity in the case to support the application. The mere allegation of danger to the property is not sufficient, if the court is satisfied that no loss need be apprehended. If, however, it be the true and necessary result of the pleadings as they stand, that the property is in danger, or that loss may be apprehended, there is a case for a receiver.

It is not, however, necessary, to entitle a party to the appointment of a receiver, that the property in question should appear to be in danger unless the appointment be made. It is enough that a good equitable title be made to appear, and that the remedy at law should not fulfil the requisitions of justice. A receiver accordingly may, on a proper case being made out, be appointed to raise the arrears of an annuity, or a rentcharge; so, also, an equitable mortgagee may have a receiver appointed if the payment of interest on his security be in arrear; so, also, if a person takes the conveyance of a legal estate, subject to equitable interests, he must satisfy these equitable interests, or submit to the appointment of a receiver.

The court, on the application for a receiver, always looks to the conduct of the party who makes the application, and will refuse to interfere unless his conduct has been free from blame. Parties who have acquiesced in property being enjoyed against their own alleged rights cannot come to the court for a receiver.

The record should be in such a state as will enable the judge to determine who is to take out of court the fund which the appointment of the receiver shall have brought into court. But if the court sees that there is a case upon the record for the appointment of a receiver, it is no sufficient answer that the record is not perfect as to particulars, and is not in the shape in which the court may find it necessary that it should be placed in order to administer complete justice. If the objection is a formal one, and such as may be removed by amendment, it will not stay its hand on account of any such objections. Objections to the bill on the ground of misjoinder, multifariousness, or want of parties, are no answer on the application for a receiver, if a case for the appointment of a receiver be shown.

If the subject of the suit in respect of which a receiver is sought is a matter of public interest, the Attorney-General should be made a party.

When the original bill had been answered, it was held that the pendency of a plea to the amended bill did not prevent a motion for a receiver.

If certain statements in the bill and affidavits are relevant to the relief asked, the court will not on motion, allow exceptions to be taken to them. Where, for instance, on bill for a receiver alleging that the executor was of bad character and drunken habits, the court would not, on the motion for a receiver, allow exceptions for scandal and impertinence.

If a receiver is asked for generally, the court may grant the prayer as far as is proper, or in a limited form.

The court has jurisdiction to appoint a receiver, pending litigation in a foreign court.

The appointment of a receiver operates as an injunction. An order for an injunction is always more or less included in an order for a receiver. It is not necessary, if a receiver be appointed, to go on and grant an injunction in terms; but in cases where persons in a fiduciary character have miscondacted themselves, the court will often grant an injunction as well as a receiver, not because an injunction is necessary to prevent a party from receiving when a receiver is once appointed, but for the purpose of marking its sense of the conduct of the parties who have miscondacted themselves.

The court may abstain from appointing a receiver on the submission of the defendant to submit to a certain order to pay the moneys into court, or to deal with the moneys as the court shall direct.

The order appointing a receiver should state distinctly on the face of it over what property the receiver is appointed, or else refer to the pleadings or some document in the cause which describes the property. It usually directs the receiver to pass his accounts from time to time, and to pay the balance found due from him into court to the credit of the cause, to be there invested and accumulated, or otherwise, as may be directed.

If the appointment of a receiver is over real or leasehold estate, the order usually directs the parties to the record who are in possession, not as tenants but as owners, to deliver up to him the possession.

If tenants are in possession of real or leasehold estates over which a receiver is appointed, the order should direct them to attorn, and pay their rents in arrear and the growing rents to the receiver, but this direction should be omitted when the estates are out of England.

If the property over which a receiver is appointed is outstanding personal estate, the order should direct the parties in possession of such estate to deliver over to the receiver all such estate, and also all securities in their hands for such estate or property, together with all books and papers relating thereto.

The court may, at its discretion, deal with the costs of the motion for a receiver at the time of the application, or the costs of the application may be ordered to be costs in the cause.

The costs of the motion for a receiver are sometimes reserved until the hearing, even although the application is refused.

He proceeds then to set forth succinctly the cases in which a receiver will be appointed: that is to say in the case of infants, of executors and trustees; pending litigation as to probate; between mortgagor and mortgagee; debtor and creditor; vendor and purchaser; covenantor and covenantee; public companies; tenant for life and remainderman; partnership; bankruptcy; lunacy; tenants in common; and, lastly, of parties in possession of real estate under a legal title.

The 3rd chapter sets forth over what property a receiver may be appointed; the next, who may be appointed a receiver; and then successive chapters treat of the mode of appointment; its effect; the powers and duties of the receiver; his salary and allowance; his accounts; his discharges; his liabilities and rights; and a final chapter states the law relating to managers and consignees.

To all lawyers interested in its subject-matter it will be an invaluable work.

LEGAL OBITUARY.

E. C. EGERTON, ESQ., M.P.

THE late Edward Christopher Egerton, Esq., M.P., of Mountfield Court, Sussex, barrister-at-law, who died at Baveno, in Italy, on the 27th ult., in the fifty-fourth year of his age, was the fourth son of the late Wilbraham Egerton, Esq. (many years M.P. for Cheshire) by Elizabeth, second daughter of the late Sir Christopher Sykes, Bart., M.P., and brother of William, first Lord Egerton of Tatton. He was born at Tatton Park, Cheshire, in July 1816, and was educated at Harrow and at Christ Church, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1837; he afterwards obtained a fellowship at All Souls College, and graduated B.C.L. in 1841. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1840, and was a magistrate for Hants and Sussex, and a deputy-lieutenant for the county of Chester. In July 1850 he was an unsuccessful candidate for Chester; but in 1852 he was returned for Macclesfield, and continued its representative until the general election in 1868, when he was returned in the Conservative interest for East Cheshire without opposition. When Lord Derby formed his third Government in July 1866, Mr. Egerton was appointed Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs, and this office he retained until Mr. Disraeli resigned the Premiership in Dec. 1868. The deceased gentleman, who was a director of the Great Northern Railway Company, married in 1845 Lady Mary Frances, daughter of Charles Herbert, second Earl Manvers, and has left issue two sons and four daughters.

R. W. BENNETT, ESQ.

(Of Altrincham and Manchester).

We have to record the death of the above-named gentleman, who had for many years been very prominent in public matters connected with Mid-Cheshire and with Manchester. Mr. Bennett died on Sunday, Aug. 22nd 1869, at the age of 56. He took his certificate as a solicitor in Easter Term 1836, and went into partnership with his brother, Mr. Edward Bennett. On the death of the latter in 1850, Mr. R. W. Bennett continued to practise as a solicitor in Manchester on his own account, and has continued up to the present time in the old offices in Kennedy-street. Somewhat more than twenty years ago he went to reside in Timperley, and after a few years removed to the Poplars, in Norman's Place, Altrincham, where he died. In connection with Altrincham and district, he not only practised as a solicitor at the local courts, but took an active part in various public affairs. He was a member of the Local Board of Health for several years, soon after it was first created. He took a prominent part in getting up a requisition to Government for an enquiry into the means of supplying Altrincham with water. Mr. Rawlinson, C. E., was sent down, and it was found that the water which was proposed to be taken from the Moss was not good enough. A scheme was then projected for the erection of reservoirs, but before it had made much progress Mr. Bennett brought out the scheme of the North Cheshire Water Company to procure a supply from Manchester, which speedily superseded the more costly reservoir scheme. This was in 1857. In Feb. 1858 the North Cheshire Company supplied Ashton-on-Mersey and Sale. In a few months afterwards the supply was extended to Altrincham, Bowdon, Timperley, and Dunham Massey. To that scheme is due an abundant supply of good water at a moderate price, whilst at the same time, the company has been prosperous and the shareholders have realised good dividends. Subsequently, Mr. Bennett was the leading spirit in forming the Knutsford Water Company, which ultimately in 1864 was incorporated with the Gas Company. Mr. Bennett was extensively employed in connection with the promotion of various railway lines. He was the solicitor employed in connection with the establishment of the Cheshire Midland Railway, and in procuring their bills of 1859, 1860-61. He was also successful in obtaining the bills for West Cheshire Railway in 1861-2, and for the Macclesfield and Warrington Railway in 1864-5. In 1864 he procured the Act for the North Cheshire Water Company, which up to that time had been conducted under the Limited Liability Act. Mr. Bennett had the respect of a large circle of friends.

LEGAL NEWS.

The Prussian Minister of Justice, M. Leonhardt, has decided on the scheme for a penal code, which he has just published, to retain the penalty of death for three categories of crimes—high treason, serious violence against a sovereign, and assassination. This proposition will excite considerable antagonism among the Liberal party. The great majority of the people (at least the educated portion) incline to the entire suppression of capital punishment. M. Leonhardt himself is not a strong advocate of this punishment, but he fears to wound the susceptibilities of a powerful party by breaking away from old traditions.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.—The will of Lord Justice Selwyn, P.C., LL.D., was proved in the London Court under 100,000l. personality.—The will of John Druce, Esq., solicitor, of 10, Billiter-square and Dulwich-common, was proved under 60,000l.—The will of Richard William Jennings, Esq., proctor and notary, 18, Bennett's-hill, Doctors'-commons, was proved under 10,000l.—The will of Ebenezer Ball Brown, Esq., money dealer, bill and discount broker, was proved under 50,000l.—The will of Mr. Garcia, fruit salesman, Centre-row, Covent-garden Market, was proved under 10,000l.—The will of Mr. Jesse Lee, meat salesman, Leadenhall-market and Forest-hill, was proved under 12,000l.—The will of Mr. Walter Smith, tanner, Bermondsey and Hemel Hempstead, was proved under 40,000l.—The will of the Right Hon. Edward John, Baron Stanley of Alderley, P.C., was proved, in the London Court, on the 19th inst., under 70,000l. personality. The will is dated Jan. 6, 1864. The testator has bequeathed his moneys, stocks, funds, and certain other securities, to his wife for her life, and afterwards to her children (except the eldest son), as she may appoint. He bequeaths to his relict, who is the daughter of the thirteenth Viscount Dillon, beyond the jointure under settlement, two annuities amounting to 1000l. a year; and to each of his younger children, in addition to any provision under settlement, a legacy of 3000l., and an annuity of 200l. He bequeaths to his agent, Mr. Simpson, 200l., and to his butler, John Rose, 30l. a-year. He leaves to his relict for her life the freehold premises in Dover-street, Piccadilly, and, after her decease, to his eldest son and his issue; and bequeaths all other his freeholds in like manner. The residue of his personal estate he leaves to his son, the present baron, absolutely.—The will of Lieut.-Gen. Sir Robert Garrett, K.C.B., K.H., colonel of the 43rd Foot, of 40, Pall Mall, and Ellington, Isle of Thanet, was proved in London, under 25,000l. personality, by his son, Alexander R. Garrett, Esq., and Lieut.-col. John Williamson, his son-in-law. He leaves to his stepdaughter, Louisa Amelia Wilhelmina Williamson, a legacy of 1000l.; to his brother, the Rev. Thomas Garrett, 1000l.; to his executors, 100l. each; and to his said son Alexander a legacy of 1000l., and leaves him his real estate and the residue of his personal estate, and to his children, as his said son may appoint.—The will of Sir Charles Hay Seton, Bart., of Abercorn, Linlithgow, was proved, in London, under 60,000l., by his only son and successor, Sir Bruce Maxwell Seton, Bart.—The will and two codicils of Mrs. Sophia Deacon, late of Mableton, near Tonbridge, widow, deceased, were proved in the Court of Probate on the 20th ult. The effects are sworn under 140,000l.—The will of the late Mr. Daniel Meinertzhagen, of Wimbledon, was proved, at London, by his brothers-in-law, Mr. G. S. Walters and Mr. Alfred Castellain, two of the executors. The will is dated in 1858, and the personality in England is sworn under 140,000l.—The wills of the under-mentioned have just been proved, viz.:—Thomas Bottrill, Esq. (London Court), under 20,000l.; he has left charitable bequests to several schools belonging to the Church of England; Robert Heywood, Esq. (Manchester), under 140,000l.; John Firth, Esq., Wakefield, under 140,000l.; William Moore, Esq. (Staffordshire), under 70,000l.—Irish probate of the will of the Right Hon. Arthur James Plunkett, Earl of Fingal, K.P., P.C., of Killeen Castle, Meath, Ireland, and of Woolhampton Lodge, Berks, was sealed in Her Majesty's Court of Probate, in London on the 14th ult., the personality being sworn under 70,000l. His Lordship died on April 21 last, at his London residence, 47, Montague-square, aged seventy-eight, leaving five sons and one daughter.—The will of the Right Hon. Sir John Cam Hobhouse, Baron Broughton, G.C.B., P.C., F.R.S., of Broughton Gifford, Wiltshire, and 42, Berkeley-square, was proved in London on the 29th ult., and the personality sworn under 250,000l. The executors are the Right Hon. William Nathaniel Massey, one of the members of the Supreme Council of India, Henry Danby Seymour, Esq., and William Phelps, Esq., solicitor, London. To Mr. Massey he leaves 500l.; Mr. Seymour and Mr. Phelps, each 200l.; and to Mr. Phelps a further legacy of 3000l. The will bears date April 11, 1865; a codicil July 28, following; and a second codicil Jan. 28, 1867. His Lordship died June 3 last, aged eighty-three, without male issue; and the barony becomes extinct. He is succeeded in the baronetcy by his nephew, now Sir Charles Parry Hobhouse, Bart. His Lordship had held many Ministerial appointments. He has by his will directed that his diaries, manuscripts, correspondence, and other papers, both official and private, may be delivered to the trustees of the British Museum, to be kept without examination until the year 1900, when, if desirable, they may be published; and, by a codicil, he desires that such as relate to the business of the State, and more particularly to the sovereign under whose orders they were written, shall not be made public without the sanction of the reigning sovereign. The testator has made a liberal provision for his two daughters, Charlotte, wife of Col. Dudley Wilmet Carleton (Coldstream Guards), and Sophia, wife of the Hon. John S. Jocelyn, second son of the present Earl of Roden. His books and plate and the residue of his property are to be held as heirlooms by the person beneficially entitled to the real estate.

PATERSON'S PRACTICAL STATUTES.—

The Volume containing the STATUTES of the last SESSION (1868) is in the press. N.B.—This Pocket Edition of all the Statutes required for practical use in Courts and Offices has been issued regularly for the last twenty years. It contains Explanatory Notes and a copious Index, by W. PATERSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. It will be forwarded by post on the day of publication to any person sending a Post-office Order for 10s. to the LAW TIMES Office.

THE COUNTY COURTS CHRONICLE,

Monthly, devotes a distinct Department to the new Admiralty Jurisdiction. It will do the like with the new Bankruptcy Jurisdiction, in addition to the Reports of County Courts Law, and all other information useful to practitioners in the County Courts. Price 1s. 6d. Office: 10, Wellington-street, Strand.

THE Law and the Lawyers.

THE registrations have commenced and are throwing additional light on the operation of the Act of 1867, particularly as to lodgers. It is quite necessary that all the forms provided by the Act of Parliament should be complied with. It was objected at Marylebone on Thursday that if personal attendance were enforced the lodger franchise would in most cases turn out a farce. The barrister said that experience must have shown anyone acquainted with what took place at the registrations last year that the parties who made claims by means of declaration in many cases had moved from room to room within the twelvemonth; but he believed that in making their claims they thought they were qualified. Clearly, personal attendance cannot be dispensed with, and it is equally clear, consequently, that lodgers will to a very large extent remain unenfranchised.

MUNICIPAL AND PARLIAMENTARY ELECTIONS.

No. I.

This is an appropriate time at which to review the present law as it affects our electoral system. The law, indeed, as regards the statute-book, remains the same, but the Judges have thrown a great deal of light upon the mode of construing statutes, and upon the general effect of corrupt practices upon candidates and voters. In pursuing our investigation into the judicial decisions we will notice in what way the Select Committee on Elections propose to deal with the subject of the amendment of our electoral system, and see to what extent their conclusions are consistent with the views of the Judges.

MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS.

We will deal first with municipal elections, which undoubtedly are very frequently at the root of corruption at Parliamentary elections. There were two or three cases in which municipal corruption came forward very conspicuously as affecting borough elections; and in one instance the practices at a municipal contest were held to invalidate the election for the borough. It is not very often, however, that the circumstances are such as to connect a municipal with a Parliamentary election; but it is desirable that it should be well understood what those circumstances are. As a first example we will take the case of Beverley (20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 792), where all that related to the municipal as linked with the Parliamentary election is stated by the Judge. He pointed out that it was known in the summer that the general election would take place as soon as the register was completed, which would be about the time of the municipal elections. Then it was proved that agents of the sitting members had bribed at the municipal election, and that the money did its work early in the day. But it was proved, moreover, that after that was effected man after man was bribed with sums varying from 15s. to 1*l.*; and it was proved and not disputed that the ordinary bribe at municipal elections did not exceed 5s., but ranged from 2s. to 5s.; so that at the period of this municipal contest bribes rose to three times their customary amount. In this way 800*l.* were distributed amongst the voters, so as to corrupt one-third of the entire constituency. And Baron Martin's conclusion was, of course, inevitable. "When," he said, "I find the actual bribers, the persons who paid this money, active in support of the two candidates, and going about with them in their canvass; when I find bribes four times as much as the ordinary bribe, and when I find such an enormous sum of money spent, what conclusion can I or can anyone possibly draw from these facts? The conclusion, as it seems to me, is inevitable, that it was spent for the purpose of influencing the borough election as well as the municipal one."

To take a second example, Mr. Justice Willes in the Blackburn petition, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 823, laid down a distinct rule on the subject—the rule that if a municipal contest is merely personal, and not political, there must be very clear evidence indeed to connect corrupt practices at the one with the result arrived at in the other. Reviewing the evidence his Lordship said, "If it were made out upon this evidence that the municipal contest was merely personal, and not political; if, for instance, the municipal contest had taken place three months before, as it was put, and the question was, whether some Act of Parliament should be adopted for the government of the borough, or whether some rate should be imposed as to which both Tories and Liberals were divided, it had been really a local question, or even if it had been a question only of whether some quiet people who were very much liked and admired, and thought well of as men of sense and benevolence should be elected, or whether some stirring politicians, having nothing else to recommend them, were to be put in the place of town councillor or other municipal office, I should have thought that would have divided the municipal election from the Parliamentary, and that no notice ought to be taken in reference to the Parliamentary election, of what was done with respect to the municipal election; and I should say the same if such a municipal election had taken place three days before, instead of a fortnight before the Parliamentary election." Therefore it would appear that there must be a political element in a municipal election in order that illegal acts done at that election may be brought to bear effectually upon the Parliamentary election. Then as to the evidence in the Blackburn case. The municipal contest in Blackburn was shown to be political, although personal interests were allowed to have had something to do with it. The political colours of the Parliamentary election were identical with those used at the municipal election. Further, a circular was addressed by partisans of the respondents to the petition to the overlookers, managers, and tradesmen in the month of October, which combined the municipal and Parliamentary elections; and the learned Judge came to the conclusion that the municipal contest was made a sort of skirmish before the great battle of the Parliamentary election, and consequently that illegal acts done at the former affected the latter.

Before proceeding to another branch of the subject, we will here notice the conclusions arrived at by the Select Committee on Elections upon the evidence called before them. In the draft report prepared by the chairman, it is stated to be proved that in many boroughs in England and Ireland great corruption prevails; that in some boroughs a considerable class of voters will not vote unless they are paid. Treating, it is found, is also practised at municipal elections to a great extent; and "more frequently the election is accompanied by an amount of drunkenness which is described as demoralising the towns." Rioting is found to have taken place in some towns, but intimidation is not shown to exist in the case of individual voters. And whilst it is said that unscrupulous partisans find the municipal election safer ground on which to "build up a corrupt influence among the lower class of voters," it is considered that in many cases party spirit, without any ulterior object, is sufficient to cause an extensive use of corrupt practices.

The remedies which the committee have considered with reference to these corrupt municipal practices are four in number: first, the adoption of some simple form of procedure for detection and punishment; secondly, the appointment of a public prosecutor; thirdly, the assimilation of the laws relating to corrupt practices at a municipal election, and that relating to the same practices at the Parliamentary election, and the adoption of a procedure by which a member of the council, owing his election to corrupt practices on the part of his agent, should lose his seat; and, fourthly the adoption of secret voting. Upon these points the committee appear to consider the County Court the best available tribunal; they believe the appointment of a public prosecutor a matter of doubtful expediency; they seem to favour the assimilation of the law, which would merely give a right to petition against the seat of a councillor; and lastly, they come to the safe conclusion that the operation of secret voting upon bribery cannot be positively declared until the experiment has been tried.

We observe that a contemporary has suggested that an inspector of elections should be appointed, and that proceedings should be taken in the first instance against corrupt voters before the recorders of the various cities and boroughs. We think this suggestion a good one. The unseating of a councillor would have even less effect in purifying a borough than has the unseating of a member of Parliament. If corruption is to be checked the source of the supply must be closed, and the indictment of venial voters, arraigned upon the report of the inspector of elections, would more certainly close it than any petition against the individual elected. We have often had occasion to express our views with regard to the ballot; and here, therefore, we leave the subject of municipal elections.

Proceeding to the Parliamentary election we will first examine the view taken by the Judges of

THE NATURE OF THE CONTEST.

By one or more of the Judges a Parliamentary election has been compared with a race in which qui non legitime certaverit non coronabitur. There could not possibly be a better illustration, for a candidate stands exactly in the position of the owner of a yacht which he is compelled to entrust to the management of others. Mr. Justice Willes observed upon this in the Tamworth Petition, in which he said (20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 182), "If a race were to take place between two vessels for a prize, and the steersman aboard one of those vessels was to thwart his opponent by declining to give way to the vessel that had a right to keep her wind; or if one of the crew hoisted an extra sail not allowed by the rules of the race, and the vessel aboard which that foul play took place was to come in first, the owner could not claim the prize, even by showing that he was away, that he had nothing to do with the misconduct of his servants, or even that he forbade them to be guilty of such conduct; nor could he mend his position by showing that if no such misconduct had taken place, the vessel would, nevertheless, have been sure to come in first."

Nothing more need be said on this head. Everyone will for the future more easily understand the conditions upon which a contest must be conducted if it is to be held valid by the Judges. And the next point is that of

STATUS.

Baron Martin, in the Norwich Petition, 19 L. T. Rep. N. S. 615, was the first to state explicitly in what way the status of a candidate is affected by illegal acts for which he is responsible. But what the learned Judge states is obvious common sense as well as sound law, namely, that if a candidate by himself or his agents be guilty of bribery, he is from that moment incapable of being elected; and that it matters not that nine-tenths of the electors voted for him. The act of bribery incapacitates a candidate from sitting in Parliament. Although there might be, we are not aware that there ever has been, a question whether bribery did not merely destroy the status of the voter, and render the vote of a bribee bad on a scrutiny. Had this idea existed, notwithstanding the terms of the Corrupt Practices Prevention Act, it would have been of the very first importance to lay it down expressly that the status of a candidate is also destroyed, and that a bribed vote cannot be struck off, and the election stand.

RELATION OF CANDIDATE AND AGENT.

We do not intend to confuse this subject with the larger question of what constitutes agency. That most difficult consideration we leave for future discussion. Some doubt appears to have existed at first in the minds of the Judges whether the relation between a candidate and his agent ought to be considered that of principal and agent or of master and servant. Any such doubt, however, was speedily set at rest, and the relation was declared to be that of master and servant. But if there is to be any legislation on this head it may be as well to record here the remarks of Baron Martin in the Westminster Petition: (19 L. T. Rep. N. S. 245.) Referring to the Act making a candidate liable for the bribery of his agent, his Lordship said: "It is a harsh law; it makes a man responsible who has directly forbidden a thing to be done, when that thing is done by a subordinate agent. It is in point of fact, making the relation between a candidate and his agent, the relation of master and servant, and not the relation of principal and agent." This view, it appears, was unanimously arrived at by the judges in consultation; but the operation of the law is to be modified as far as possible, as Baron Martin observes in the same case, by requiring evidence beyond all reasonable doubt that the act of bribery was done, and he adds, "unless the proof is strong and cogent, I should say very strong and very cogent, I ought not to affect the seat of an honest and well-intentioned man by the act of a third person." His Lordship further defines what he should require to induce him to apply the law strictly. "I should require to see, in the first place, that there is agency; in the second place, I should require to be satisfied and certain that there could be no mistake with respect to the alleged act of bribery."

A question was put to Mr. Justice Willes in the Westbury case, whether, if an agent acted wilfully and spitefully for his own purposes, the principal would be responsible. There it was a case of intimidation, and it was argued that the person intimidating did not intimidate as agent, but in order to keep out the rival candidate to whom he had personal objections. But it was held that this did not relieve the principal from the consequences of the acts of the agent, and he was unseated by reason of them. The element of personal spite did not take the proceedings out of the ordinary employment of the agent. Therefore the relation of candidate and agent is precisely that of master and servant, and it is difficult to conceive in what way during an election, and for the purposes of the election, an agent could so depart from the ordinary course of his employment as to relieve the candidate from responsibility as regards the validity of the return.

LAND LAW REFORM.

As we ventured to anticipate, this question has decidedly "come to the fore," especially in its application to Ireland, and every extra-Parliamentary utterance is full of it. Plainly now, it will be the question of the next session, and it is so little understood, it is so full of difficulty in itself, it involves so many conflicting interests and enlists such opposite principles and opinions, that no apology is necessary for having thus early invited to it the attention of the readers of the LAW TIMES, who are peculiarly qualified to pass a judgment upon it, and to make objections to, and suggest improvements in, the several plans proposed by powerful parties and influential persons. The time that must elapse between the present and the meeting of Parliament could not be spent more profitably than in collating and sifting the various projects that are put forth, extracting what is good in them, and refuting whatever may be insecure, dangerous, or dishonest.

For it cannot be disguised that there are powerful parties bent upon changes that are subversive of property. PRUDHON'S famous maxim, "Propriété est vol," is the foundation of the faith of a very large and influential party in the United Kingdom. The representatives of that party are now at Basle, taking part in an International Congress of Labour, at which doctrines have been proclaimed that are not reform but revolution. The delegates of British labour have concurred in an address which carries into practice the principle that "landlords and capitalists must be eliminated from the social organisation;" only that the representatives at the Congress are not content with resolving what ought to be, but they proclaim openly how it is to be done. They have no hesitation about it. The aristocracy and the middle classes are to be destroyed, their property confiscated, and labour only is to be permitted to live and reign. This is not a jest, as the reader may be inclined to suppose, but a deliberate declaration to which the delegates, and among them men who call themselves, and are admitted to be, the representatives of some of the Trades Unions of the United Kingdom. It lies before us in the original French. We give it in translation:

This is a war between the poor and the rich; everywhere labour is in an inferior condition; everywhere alike capital is a tyrant. We have declared war against it and we are resolved to obtain the victory. We will seek it first through universal suffrage. If that fails us we will have recourse to more efficacious means. A little bleeding is necessary in a desperate case.

And this is what they seek to obtain by the process of "bleeding:"

It is clearly understood that between the working class and the middle class there is an irreconcilable antagonism, because such is the necessary consequence of their respective positions. That the prosperity of the middle class is incompatible with the well being and the liberty of the labourers, because that exclusive prosperity is not and cannot be based but upon the profits of their labour, and that for the same reason the prosperity and human dignity of the labouring men require absolutely the abolition of the middle classes as a separate class. Consequently that the strife between the working class and the middle class is mortal, and cannot end but by the destruction of the latter.

It is this plain speaking that gives significance to a few remarks on Irish Land Law Reform that fell from the MARQUIS OF HARTINGTON at a recent public meeting at Dublin, when, speaking of the expected Irish land measure, he warned his audience of the dangers with which the question would be encompassed. "It is," he said, "not only the property of Irish landlords, it is not only the property of English landlords, it is property of all kinds which will be at stake. For do not suppose for a moment that any discussion will arise next year, or that any measure can be passed, without principles and doctrines being enunciated equally hostile, not only to the interests of landlords, but of capitalists of every description." And with this emphatic warning he entreated his hearers not to make of land law reform a party question—an entreaty in which all who desire reform and dread revolution will heartily join.

But almost at the same time Sir JOHN GRAY, M.P., was announcing, amid enthusiastic cheers, a plan of Land Law Reform which would almost satisfy the Congress at Basle, but which must have taken the breath away from the noble marquis. He rejected all half measures. It was idle now to talk of compensation for improvements, or thirty-one years' leases. "Why should we ask for it?" he said, "We want property, not compensation. We want that the man who is born on the land, we want that the Irishman who gets possession as a tenant farmer, should be allowed to work the land, the sweat of whose brow alone makes it valuable to his landlord, and that no power on earth shall be able to remove him so long as he pays the rent. We ask no thirty-one years' leases. We ask fixity of tenure. We want the man who has laid out the labour on the land rooted to that land, so that nothing but the hand of God should be ever able to remove him." And he stated his plan to be that a tenant should be permitted to make any improvements he pleases without the consent of the owner, and then that he shall be entitled to an extended term at the same rent, according to the value of such improvements, so that, if he improves the property by twenty per cent. he shall be entitled to possession of it for 180 years!

However veiled under gentle phrases, the actual effect of this scheme is to transfer the property from the present owners to their tenants; to deprive the parties of all liberty of contract; to convert the freehold into something in the nature of copyhold. It would operate in practice thus: The tenant of such a lease would underlet at a higher rent, and so a new race of landlords would be created infinitely more exacting and less improving than the present landlords. If the land continued to rise in value, so there would be a succession of underleases and successive races of landlords until the present evil, if evil it be, will be multiplied tenfold.

Although it would be impossible, with justice to the owner of a house or land, to give to the tenant fixity of tenure in it, as is the demand in Ireland, much may be done to improve the legal relationship of the parties. The law could not fairly control contracts deliberately entered into; but the law may justly provide that, in the absence of a written contract, tenancy shall in itself imply certain rights as secured to the tenant. Foremost of these is, that he shall not be turned out at disadvantageous times, as when the crop he had sown was yet uncut; and that he should have a notice to quit of such length as would enable him to make due arrangements for removal. The tenant should also in such case have a legal claim to full compensation for unexhausted improvements, as for dressings and half dressings, land ploughed, seed sown, and such like, to be paid to him by his landlord, who would, of course, be repaid by the incoming tenant. So, likewise, he should receive the value of buildings or other erections, if erected with the landlord's consent, and, if without his consent, where they have really increased the letting value of the premises. To such provisions no serious objection is likely to be raised, for they are entirely consistent with justice. The real difficulty arises upon the question of positive contracts. It would be a startling novelty for the law to prescribe the number of years and the conditions on which the owner of a house or of land shall allow the use of it to another. Freedom of contract is a first principle of political economy; and a law that prescribed to the parties to a private bargain what they shall or shall not agree to, would be a flagrant violation of individual liberty, and almost impossible in a country calling itself free.

The law may properly prohibit and declare void covenants in themselves iniquitous or injurious to the State; but in no civilised country has it yet been proposed to dictate to the owners of property the terms on which they shall lend it to others, much less to say, "you shall part with it for so many years at so much rent, whether you desire to do so or not."

It is conceivable that, in certain contingencies, the State might deem it expedient to deprive certain persons of all or a portion of their property, the public advantage requiring it. But, in such case, an honest Legislature would make compensation for the property so taken. We do not find in any of the speeches or newspaper articles advocating the confiscation of real property any suggestion for compensation. It would indeed be idle talk, for the taxpayers would never endure the burden it would impose upon them. But it is said by some that the propositions put forth would not diminish the value of the property affected by them. They may readily satisfy themselves if they are right in this. Would they give as much for an estate subject to such a law as for an estate held according to the existing law? Certainly they would not.

MISREPRESENTATION AND FRAUD IN EQUITY.

It would appear somewhat singular that it should have been open to question whether a court of equity could or could not give redress in a case where money had been obtained upon representation false to the knowledge of the person making it; but here we find one of those singular refinements which we must all hope to see soon swept away. The case in which the question arose was that of Rumshire v. Bolton, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 50, before Vice-Chancellor Malins, and the facts are short. The defendant, desiring to obtain money for his own purposes, negotiated bills bearing the names of two persons whom he knew to be unable to meet their engagements, but whom he represented as solvent. As the Vice-Chancellor said, it amounted to this, that the defendant, being desirous of obtaining money from the plaintiff, made untrue representations that a bill was given for value when he knew it was not; that the whole transaction was bond fide, when he knew it was a concocted scheme.

There were two arguments on the question of jurisdiction. It was urged for the defendant that the question was one of pure law, and that an action ought to be brought to recover the money; and that if it were otherwise a suit could be instituted in every case of obtaining money by false pretences. On the other hand it was urged successfully that the element of fraud gave the court jurisdiction. It is rather important at this time that distinctions between innocent and fraudulent misrepresentations should be understood, and the words of the Vice-Chancellor are these:—"If it were a simple case of borrowing money, although the borrower may say he shall be able to repay, that is still a fraud, because he knew that he could not do so. Yet the claim for that money is not sustainable in this court. But where he obtained money on a security which he knows to be bad that is a different case."

This would seem to be an accurate though a nice distinction, and was adopted in an analogous case of Slim v. Croucher, 1 L. T. Rep. N. S. 396. There A. agreed to lend B. a sum of money upon the security of certain houses, to a lease of which B. represented himself to be entitled, if an assurance could be obtained from C. that he would grant a lease of the same to B. This C. did, and under-leases were granted, and the money advanced. A. then discovered that the underleases related to houses already leased by C. to B. A. filed his bill against B. and C., and C. set up his forgetfulness of the former lease. Vice-Chancellor Stuart, in giving judgment, said: "The defendant says he did not know that he had not the property, because he forgot that he had demised it before. But the circumstance that he had forgotten the fact is no justification in this case. There was a misrepresentation to the effect that he had the property. He must be held to have known that the plaintiff was parting with his money upon an illusory grant. The case is one within the recognised doctrine of the court."

In Burrowes v. Locke, 10 Ves. 470, a similar defence was set up, but the misrepresentation was held by Sir William Grant to be a constructive fraud, although it seemed to have been allowed that there had been an innocent mistake.

We are not going to discuss the relative merits of the common law and equity jurisdiction; all that can be desired is that plausible misrepresentations should be punished rapidly, and a judge is to be congratulated who assumes jurisdiction where there is a doubt, if by so doing he secures substantial justice to the parties. And further it is useful to remember the Vice-Chancellor's remarks with reference to the argument that in every case of false pretences a suit will be preferred in equity. He said:—"No doubt a party may in such a case be amenable to the criminal jurisdiction, but that will not exonerate him from having a bill filed against him in this court. The bill is rested on the ordinary, valuable, and well-established jurisdiction of this court, that where on representations which a man knows to be false another is induced to advance money, or do some other act, that is a fraud which will be taken cognizance of as within the jurisdiction of a court of equity."

LEGAL CUSTOMS IN ENGLAND AND AMERICA.

ONE feature about the English Bar is an apparent absence of cohesion among its members. It has no customs worth mentioning, save such as relate to etiquette, and those are treated with something like contempt. The Bar has no benefit society, as solicitors have. The inns are mere bits of administrative machinery and excite no sympathy by anyone towards anyone else. If a struggling young advocate expires at an early age of want and disappointment, he is buried quietly, and the Profession know nothing about it. If old age and domestic difficulties weigh down one who has done his work, he is left to go mad, and be sent to a county asylum. And this is the result of pride on the part of the members of the Bar. They all strive to make a show of progress and competency, and the last thing a man will do is to admit failure.

Now America contrasts very favourably with England in this respect; and a strong illustration has recently come to our notice. Mr. ARNOLD, of the Milwaukee Bar, died last June. "On the day following" Mr. RYAN stated to the court, "in accordance with a pious custom, largely due to Mr. ARNOLD's own influence, the Bar Association of Milwaukee county met, and passed the resolutions which I have now the honour of submitting to the court." The two first of these resolutions we think worth preserving, as evidence of the feeling pervading a portion at any rate of the Profession in America. They run thus:

Resolved, that the customary forms of respect and condolence become, on the present occasion, sincere and sorrowful tributes of the heart, since many of us, for more than a quarter of a century, have witnessed and enjoyed the social qualities, the courteous demeanour, the manly bearing, and the splendid abilities exhibited in the professional career of our deceased president, the Hon. Jonathan E. Arnold.

Resolved, that while we know, as a matter of history, that Mr. Arnold was one of the pioneer members of the Milwaukee Bar, and from the beginning took foremost rank, alike in the court, the legislative hall, and the popular assembly, yet he is particularly endeared to this association, because, in all his professional life, he was a model of professional conduct, and contributed, not merely by his brilliant intellect and polished eloquence, but by his professional honour and admirable professional manner, to elevate the Bar of this city; to produce and preserve its fraternity, and to give to it that desirable reputation for which it has so long been distinguished.

And the remarks of Mr. Justice PAINE, bear out our notions of what a splendid collection of educated men like the Bar ought to feel within themselves. Speaking in reply to Mr. RYAN, he said: "I have also had frequent occasion to note how justly Mr. ARNOLD was entitled to the tribute awarded to him by Mr. RYAN, for the influence he exerted in establishing and cherishing the strong fraternal feeling that exists among the members of the Milwaukee Bar. Many who are willing enough to furnish substantial aid when called on, are often, from mere thoughtlessness, apt to neglect those little attentions and observances of respect, that are really of much more importance than they seem. Not so with Mr. ARNOLD. He was always prompt and attentive, either to relieve real wants, or to observe every ceremony of respect, as well for the humblest as the highest member of the Bar—circulating with his own hand subscriptions for the relief of those whom misfortune had overtaken, and performing the last sad offices for those who had passed beyond misfortune's reach. I confess that I had myself never duly appreciated the importance of those observances until I was made to realise how grateful to my own feelings was the knowledge of the manner in which the Milwaukee Bar, under the leadership of Mr. ARNOLD, had performed those offices for a member of my own family during my absence. The same sad rites that Bar has now performed for him; and, as one of its members, as well as a member of this court, I join in their tribute to his professional memory."

PERSONAL DISFRANCHISEMENT.

A CORRESPONDENT of a contemporary, writing on the operations of the Bribery Commissioners asks whether it would not be within the range of possibility to instruct the commissioners in these cases to ascertain, by a thorough examination of the electoral roll, who were the corrupt persons in a constituency; and these having been marked and disfranchised, there and elsewhere, for ever, so to purify the constituency by the personal punishment of the guilty?

This plan would raise up all the objections which are urged against the appointment of a public prosecutor. Evidence would be most difficult to obtain if it were to be directed against particular individuals for the purpose of their political extinction. Moreover, it is to be remembered that a borough has its behaviour pretty much in its own hands, and we cannot help thinking that solicitors would find it much more to their advantage to maintain purity than to encourage corruption by being its agents, as they certainly too frequently are. Bridgwater affords evidence that as much remuneration would be attainable without bribery as with. Candidates are rarely inclined to stint their agents when the prospect of a fair election is before them. It would be perfectly vain to exterminate particular voters, against whom the commissioners might happen to obtain evidence; because every one must know that convicted cases form a small proportion of the whole mass of corruption.

We recognise as true what the correspondent in question states, namely, that the pure-minded men of the disfranchised borough are rewarded for their efforts to support their principles by being placed in a position which, by implication, renders them in the eye of the law no less than political outlaws. But these are cases in which a private individual must suffer for the benefit of the community.

The only plan which we could approve for the purpose of extinguishing the politically corrupt would be one which should be efficient to punish all. There must be a system of detection as nearly perfect as possible. The improbability of ever attaining to such a system makes us doubt whether the punishment of personal disfranchisement could ever work.

INSURANCE AGAINST ACCIDENTS.

SOME time since we fully investigated the cases relating to insurance against accidents, embracing questions as to the meaning of the term accident. We have now before us an American case, decided in the Supreme Court of Wisconsin, which, without throwing much new light upon the subject, may be usefully considered. In this case the policy contained a clause that the company should not be liable for any injury happening to the assured by reason of his "wilfully and wantonly exposing himself to any unnecessary danger or peril." The fact was that the assured attempted to get on a train of cars after it had started—too common a practice in this country—fell, and was killed. The real question was, whether the negligence of the assured having contributed to the accident it could be called an accident at all within the meaning of the policy. PAINE, J. most sensibly laid it down that whereas the definition of an accident is "an event that takes place without one's foresight or expectation; an event which proceeds from an unknown cause; or is an unusual effect of a known cause, and therefore not expected," there is nothing in it that excludes the negligence of the assured as one of the elements contributing to produce the result.

Our readers will remember the English cases, Theobald v. The Railway Passengers' Assurance Company, Sinclair v. The Maritime Passengers' Assurance Company, and Trew v. The Railway Passengers' Assurance Company. In the first the accident giving rise to the action was held to be a railway accident, and no negligence was proved against the assured. In Sinclair's case a sun-stroke was held not to be an accidental visitation. Whilst in Trew's case death by drowning was held to be accidental, the court saying, "We think it ought to be submitted to the jury to say whether the deceased died from the action of the water, or natural causes. If they are of the opinion that he died from the action of the water, causing asphyxia, that is a death from external violence within the meaning of the policy, whether he swam to a distance and had not strength enough to regain the shore, or on going into the water got out of his depth."

Looking at these cases, and the cited remarks of the Judges, Paine, J. came to the conclusion that the attempt to get upon the train did not constitute a "wilful and wanton exposure" of the assured to unnecessary danger. But there are peculiarities about this particular case which would make us reluctant to recognise it as a precedent. According to the learned Judge, the evidence showed that the train having once been to the platform, had backed so that the cars stood at some little distance from it; while it was waiting there the deceased was walking back and forth on the platform (of the depot). It came along, and while moving at a slow rate, or as fast as a man could walk, he attempted to get on, and by some means fell either under or by the side of the cars and was crushed to death. The deceased was in the regular prosecution of his business.

We need not pause to point out that there are different questions to be considered in actions against insurance companies, and in actions for damages for negligence on the part of a company. Negligence bringing about an accident might be held to be contributory where negligence is alleged against another party, but yet not relieve an insurer from his contract.

DIGEST OF SHIPPING LAW CASES
FROM 1860 TO 1864.

Edited by F. O. CRUMP, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

BILL OF SALE.

1. Purchaser of shares—Liability for expenses incurred before becoming owner.—A purchaser of shares in a ship is not liable for expenses incurred on behalf of the ship before the vendor became owner. The vendor contracted to purchase the shares in July, but did not execute the bill of sale until September. The transferee of his share was exempted from liability for any expenses incurred before the execution of the bill of sale: (Chapman v. Callis, C. B., Feb. 8, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 37; 3 L. T. Rep. N. S. 890; 7 Jur. N. S. 995; 9 C. B., N. S., 769.)

2. Sale of barge to a minor—Purchaser's right of action against assignees of bankrupt owner for seizing and selling barge.—Merchant Shipping Act 1854—Act 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63.—The purchaser of a barge by bill of sale duly executed was unable to obtain a certificate of registry, as he was under twenty-one years of age, and he continued in the possession and use of the barge under the registry in the name of the former owner. The latter having become bankrupt, the purchaser was held to have a right of action against the assignees of the bankrupt for seizing and selling the barge. Merchant Shipping Act, sect. 55; Act 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 3; The Liverpool Borough Bank v. Turner, in 1860, held not to apply: (Stapleton v. Haymen, &c., C. E., Jan. 12, 1864; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 416; 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 655; 33 L. J. 170.)

3. Registration.—The registration of an assignment of an agreement for the purchase of a ship is not required under the Bills of Sale Act (17 & 18 Vict. c. 36): (Swainston v. Clay, C. A. Ch., April 22 and June 11, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 343; 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 563; 9 Jur. N. S. 401; 32 L. J. 338, 503; 4 Giff. 187.)

1. Agency commission on value of ship and cargo—Custom—Scrutiny of accounts—Practice of Admiralty Court—Suit in default.—Bond given at Elsinore for 433l. with 15 per cent. premium. Ship bound for Londonderry. Agency commission charged on value of ship and cargo, including an undefined amount for commission on advances reduced by the court to an allowance of 50l. No reason assigned or custom alleged in favour of a commission on value being charged. Practice of court not to scrutinise accounts too rigidly. In default of the appearance of the owners the ship is the real defendant: (The Fortuna, A. C. Ireland 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 123.)

2. Communication with owners of cargo—Validity of bond—The Gratitude, The Bonaparte, The Oriental, Glascott v. Lang—Evidence of master as to execution of bottomry bond on ship, freight, and cargo, where the bond is impeached by the owners of cargo.—A French ship was laden at St. Marc, in the island of Hayti, for a voyage to Liverpool, with a cargo consisting of 630 logs of mahogany, thirty bales of cotton, and twenty-five tons of logwood. She sailed from Hayti in Oct. 1860, sustained considerable damage at sea, and on 3rd Nov. put into Horta, a port in Fayal. The master communicated with the shipowners but received no answer; and not being able to obtain funds on personal credit of the shipowners to liquidate the expenses of the repairs necessary to enable the ship to proceed on her voyage, he, on 14th Dec. and on 2nd and 10th March 1861, with the sanction of the vice-consul of France, executed bottomry bonds on ship, freight, and cargo. Notice was not given to the owners of the cargo. All probability forbade the court to assume that the communication with Hayti was either certain or rapid. A letter to Liverpool could not have been dispatched sooner than the end of November, and an answer could not have been received sooner than early in Feb. 1861. The port of Horta being exposed to the W.S.W. winds, the ship could not have remained during that time with any degree of safety, exposed to the certain consequences of a winter, without any attempt to repair the ship or protect the cargo. While detained, the vessel came into collision with another ship; and in the month of January there were only three days when the state of the weather allowed the repairs to be carried on. The ship left Horta in the beginning of the month of March, and arrived at Liverpool on the 25th of that month. No opposition to the bottomry bonds was offered on the part of the shipowner. The transaction was in no degree to the benefit of the ship and it was to the disadvantage of the cargo. Bonds pronounced valid against the cargo with costs. Dr. Lushington in commenting upon and explaining the cases of the Bonaparte, 8 Moo. P. C. C. 460; 3 W. Rob. 308; 7 Notes of Cas. 22; see Digest of Maritime Law Cases, 1837 to 1860, No. 238; Glascott v. Lang, 2 Phill. 310; 11 Jur. 179, 643; 16 L. J., N. S., 323n, Ch.; 3 Myl. & Cr. 463; and the Oriental, 7 Moo. P. C. C. 409; 3 W. Rob. 254; 14 Jur. 336; 7 Notes of Cas. 476, said that the case of Glascott v. Lang, decided in 1847, was not noticed either in the Oriental or the Bonaparte, and it was his confident belief that the important case was not known to the Judicial Committee at the time, and Lord Cottenham was perfectly right in his observations as to the absence of previous authority, but the Judicial Committee being a court of the last resort, and the court of appeal, he was bound to adopt the rule prescribed by them regarding the necessity of endeavouring to communicate with the owners of the cargo; the decision, however, was not applicable to the present case. At the same time he remarked that if the ship were a British ship, the owners of the cargo might, as decided in Duncan v. Benson, recover the (excess of) expenses to which they may be put through the hypothecation of the cargo. He adverted to the difficulties (as depicted by Lord Stowell in the case of the Gratitude) that may arise from a master being compelled to communicate with the owners of the ship and the shippers and consignees of the cargo, who may give different instructions; and he observed that the Admiralty Court is in the constant habit of considering not only the technical rules, but all the circumstances, in order to protect the owners of ship and cargo from the unjustifiable imposition of a bottomry bond, to afford due facility for the security of the lender on bottomry in cases of necessity, and to advance the mercantile interests not of England merely, but of all the countries engaged in commerce: (The Olivier, A. C., March 12 and 18, 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 214.)

3. Priority—Wages of seamen and master—Claim of bondholder.—The captain of a ship being himself liable for seamen's wages cannot, under the 191st section of the Merchant Shipping Act, claim to be paid rateably with them either in respect of wages or of advances by him on account of wages where the proceeds of a ship sold at the instance of a bottomry bondholder are only sufficient to pay the seamen's wages. The seamen have a prior claim to the bondholder, and the captain has also a right to his wages in priority to the bondholder where the bottomry bond does not stipulate that the master shall be personally liable for the amount of the bond: (The Salacia, A. C. Nov. 11, 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 261; 7 L. T. Rep. N. S. 440; 9 Jur. N. S. 27; 32 L. J. 41.)

4. Advance of freight—Claim for cargo sold to pay expenses—Lien—Disbursements—Campbell v. Thompson.—In accordance with the Standard (Swa. 267), advance of freight made after the date of a bottomry bond, but according to the terms of a charter-party entered into before that date is not attachable by the bondholder. The proprietor of a cargo sold in the course of a voyage to pay expenses has a claim against the shipowner, but no lien for the value of the cargo sold, upon the amount of freight due upon other portions of the cargo. Campbell v. Thompson, 1 Stark. 290, considered to be in error. What is an advance of freight under a special stipulation in a charter-party, considered. Ordinary and extraordinary disbursements distinguished; extraordinary disbursements being described as expenses not included within the terms of the charter-party: (The Salacia, A. C. Nov. 25 and Dec. 18, 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 322; 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 91; 32 L. J. 43.)

5. Law governing such questions—Master communicating with owners of cargo—The Bonaparte.—The Admiralty Court, in questions of bottomry is guided by principles of general maritime law unless other law be distinctly pleaded and proved as the governing law. The master of a vessel driven into port in distress is not bound to trans ship cargo. It is generally the duty of the master to communicate, or attempt to communicate, with owners of cargo before hypothecating it. Case of The Bonaparte, 8 Moo. P. C. C. 460, fully asounded. Bond held invalid against cargo. The amount of the bond exceeded the value of ship and freight by 1392l., and the cargo had sold for only 895l.: (The Hamburg, A. C. March 24 and 31 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 327; 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 175; 9 Jur. N. S. 445; 32 L. J. 161.)

6. Necessaries supplied to foreign ship reimbursed by Lloyd's Association—Jurisdiction—Priority.—A foreign ship was bound from the Mauritius to this country, and while she was in the East bottomry bonds were executed. Afterwards she put into Malaga, where expenses were incurred for repairs and refitting, and for discharging and re shipping cargo. These expenses for necessaries were reimbursed by the secretary of Lloyd's Assoc cation. On arriving in this country proceedings were instituted by the bondholder, and the ship was sold. It was held that Lloyd's Association could not make a claim as having supplied necessities; and that neither under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, nor under the 4th or 5th section of The Admiralty Court Act 1861, has the Admiralty Court jurisdiction to entertain a claim for necessities supplied to a foreign ship at a foreign port. Bottomry bond entitled to priority of payment: (The India, A.C. March 26, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 390; 9 Jur. N. S. 417; 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 234; 32 L. J. 185.)

7. Advances on personal credit—Validity of bond—Agency—Commission—Custom.—Advances made to ship on personal credit cannot, when the ship may be arrested, be converted into a bottomry transaction. But if the advances are made under an agreement for bottomry, the bond is valid though granted long afterwards. The law of all or nearly all foreign countries sanctions the arrest of ship for advances, and renders any bottomry bond therefore valid; but in this country the foreign law sanctioning arrest can be pleaded only as evidence to support the presumption that the advances were intended to be made on the security of the ship: The Augusta, 1 Dod. 283, and The Vibilia, 1 W. Rob. 1, cited as authorities to this effect. The value of ship and cargo does not altogether depend upon the custom of the place where the bond was given; but the custom of such a charge being made is to be considered in ascertaining whether the charge is fair. With respect to the commissions, the court will not be bound by the custom of any place. A plea as to the fairness of the charges is admissible, but the party failing in proof will be condemned in costs: (The Laurel, A.C. Nov. 3 and 10, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 405; 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 457; 33 L. J. 17.)

8. Lien—General average—Bottomry—Transshipment.—Lien on cargo for freight on transshipping and forwarding it to its destination, and for general average, was held to have priority to a bottomry bond. A ship called the Galani, bound from Hayti to Europe, calling at Palmonth for orders, put into the port of Angra in Terceira under average, and was there condemned. The cargo was transhipped into a vessel called the Mary Jane, and the expenses were secured by a bottomry or respondentia bond on the cargo payable at Palmonth. The Mary Jane was wrecked at Scilly, and the owners settled with their underwriters for a total loss of that ship and her freight. The cargo was ordered to Hamburg, but was arrested in the Admiralty Court by the bottomry bondholder, and brought to London, where it was sold. The underwriters on freight per Mary Jane did not abandon their right to forward the cargo to its destination. It was held, reversing the judgment of the Admiralty Court, that there was a lien for freight and for general average per Mary Jane upon the proceeds of the cargo in preference to the bottomry bond. The Constanca, 2 W. Rob. 287, and the North Star, 1 Lush. 45, as to the Admiralty Court not having jurisdiction in questions of general average, or in claims for loss on cargo sold to pay expenses, considered not applicable to the present case. The expense of transshipping and forwarding the cargo of the Galani was in the nature of a salvage charge whereby the cargo was rendered available for the bottomry bondholder or anyone else. Suits in the Admiralty Court or at common law are made in the name of the master (or owner) as trustee for the underwriters where his claim has been satisfied by them: (Cleary v. Macandrew, Cargo ex Galani, J. C. P. C. Dec. 9, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 488; 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 550; 10 Jur. N. S. 477; 33 L. J. 97.)

1. Construction of letter—Refusal to accept bill drawn for loss on re-charter—Charter-party.—Ship chartered from Taganros at 60s. per ton. Contract with a London firm to re-charter her on speculation. When she loaded at Taganros, freights had fallen to 40s. a ton. Goods were shipped by the re-charterers on their own account. Charterers held liable for the loss on value of cargo by being shipped at 60s. instead of 40s.: (Yeames, &c. v. Lindsay, &c., C. B. Jan. 23, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 33; 3 L. T. Rep. N. S. 855.)

2. Sale of cargo free on board, including freight and insurance—Sufficiency of insurance—Whether it should cover freight.—A contract in respect of a cargo of wheat contained the clause "payment cash in London in exchange for usual shipping documents." The amount of the provisional invoice, less freight, was 3624l. One of the shipping documents was a valid policy for 3600l., and it was held that the policy was of sufficient amount. The value of the cargo for the purpose of insurance is to be taken with reference to the port of shipment, not that of discharge. It was further decided that it was a question for the jury whether the policy tendered was a shipping document within the contract: (Tamvaco and others v. Lucas and others, Q. B. May 4, 1861; E. C. June 19, 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 66; 231; 7 Jur. N. S. 1100; 1 B. & S. 185; 30 L. J. N. S., 234; 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 697; 31 L. J. 296, in error.)

3. Sailing of ship—Shipment of packages.—Construction of letter undertaking to ship by the Warrior Queen, guaranteeing "that she sails not later than the first week in July, or forfeit 2s. 6d. per ton, 300 or 400 packages of goods." Held, that this meant to forfeit 2s. 6d. not only if the vessel did not sail within the time specified, but also if the stipulated number of packages were not shipped, or at all events that the clause referred to the non-shipment of packages. The clause considered exceedingly ambiguous: (Heugh v. Escombe, Court of Ex. Jan. 16 and 17, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 79.)

4. Contract to receive goods on board—Repudiation of agreement.—Where before the time for performing the contract arrives, the party who has made a promise expressly renounces the agreement, the other, not being in fault, may in his option treat the renunciation as a breach of contract: (The Danube and Black Sea Railway and Kustendjie Company v. Xenos, C. B. Nov. 21, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 172.)

JUDICIAL STATISTICS, 1868.

COMMON LAW COURTS.

In the following summary the totals of the proceedings in the chambers of the six judges of each court are given for 1868 under each head of proceedings for all the chambers:—

Summons	57,531
Common orders	47,992
Special orders	18,119
Certificates, special cases, special verdicts, flats, &c.	2042
Affidavits, affirmations, &c.	17,511
Affidavits filed	24,797
Approbations for taking affidavits or special bail	559
Acknowledgments by married women	299
Office copies (number of folios)	13,985
Recognisances	175
Writs of error	—
Bail	24
Committals	—

COURT OF EXCHEQUER, REVENUE SIDE.

The proceedings at the sittings in Banco of the Court of Exchequer in the year 1868, relating to business on the revenue side of the court, are shown in a return furnished by the Queen's Remembrancer, and were as follows, viz.:—

Motions in court, 8.
Do. (without argument, 114, touching legacy and succession.
Special cases, 3 (2 judgment against the Crown, and 1 judgment for the Crown).
Demurrer, 1 (withdrawn by consent. Special case to be stated).
Cause in equity by English information, 1 (argument occupied three days. Adjourned for judgment).
Court of Error.—Error brought by the Crown, 1 (judgment for defendants).

COUNTY COURTS.

The proceedings in the County Courts in the year 1868 for the recovery of debts, the proceedings under the Charitable Trusts Act of 16 & 17 Vict. c. 137, and the proceedings under the Act of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, for the protection of wives deserted by their husbands, are shown in the table in the usual form; also, now for the first time under bankruptcy, the number of adjudications in bankruptcy, and the gross produce realised, for each of the fifty-nine County Court circuits, as abstracted from the returns obtained through the treasurers from the registrars of the different County Courts.

County Courts are held at 521 different places in England and Wales, including metropolitan courts which have no jurisdiction in bankruptcy; 324 of the courts are held monthly; the remaining 197 once in two months. The number of places at which courts are held in each circuit, and the number of days of sitting on each circuit in 1868, are shown in the table. For Circuit No. 6, in which Liverpool is situated, there are two judges. For each of the other circuits there is one judge only.

The following are the number of plaintiffs in the whole of the County Courts, and the totals under each heading in the returns with reference to the recovery of debts for the year 1868, in comparison with the numbers, for the preceding year:—

Plaints entered	1868.	1867.
Cases from the Superior Courts	975,373	941,388
Cases determined:
With a jury	895	856
Without a jury	569,832	541,704

Total amount of fees on all proceedings	£354,575	£311,535

Proceedings in case of absconding debtors—	1868.	1867.
Warrants to arrest	52	69
Bail given	1	2
Debt and costs paid	9	20
Warrants suspended	1	7
Proceedings under the Charitable Trusts Act—
Matters heard	—	—
Orders made	—	—
Proceedings for protection of wives deserted—
Orders registered	587	637
Orders discharged	2	—
Bankruptcy—
Number of adjudications by County Courts in 1868	—	4,141
Gross produce realised	—	£62,906

In the number of plaintiffs entered in 1868 the increase as shown above amounts to 33,485, or 3·5 per cent., as compared with the number in 1867, the number in 1867 having exceeded the number in 1866 (exclusive of cases sent from the Superior Courts) by 69,342, or nearly 8 per cent. The number in 1866 exceeded the number in 1865 by 89,733, or 11·4 per cent. In three years, therefore, there has been an increase of 192,560 in the number of plaintiffs entered in the County Courts.

The number of days of sitting for the whole of the circuits was 7987 in 1868, exceeding the number in 1867 by 94, and exceeding the number in 1865 by 366. The number for 1868 gives 71·7 causes for each day of sitting, calculating on the total number of causes determined. This average for 1867 was 68·7; for 1866, 62·1; for 1865, 57·1. The greatest number of days of sitting on any circuit in 1868 was 268, on Circuit No. 6; the lowest 89, on Circuit No. 5. The highest average number of causes determined on each day of sitting was 175, on Circuit No. 13; the lowest was 29, on Circuit No. 28.

The causes determined in court were in the proportion of 58·5 per cent. to the total number of plaintiffs entered, leaving 41·5 per cent. as the proportion settled out of court. In 1867 these proportions were 57·5 and 42·5; in 1866, 55·9 and 44·1; in 1865, 55·4 and 44·6; in 1864, 56·4 and 43·6; in 1863, 55·3 and 44·7, respectively.

Of the judgments given, 96·9 per cent. were for the plaintiff, 1·5 per cent. were nonsuits, and 1·6 per cent. were for the defendant. In 1867 these proportions were 96·6, 1·7, and 1·7; in each of the years 1866 and 1865, 96·2, 1·9 and 1·9; in 1864, 95·9, 2·1, and 2·0 per cent.

The number of debtors imprisoned gives one for 101 of the number of plaintiffs entered with the cases sent from the Superior Courts included. In 1867 the proportion was one for 112; in 1866, one for 115; in 1865, one for 123; in 1864, one for 113; for the average of the years 1859–63, one for 95.

The total amount for which plaintiffs were entered in 1868 shows an increase of 382,297l., or 17·4 per cent., on the amount for the preceding year, following an increase of 142,121l., or 6·0 per cent., in 1867 on the amount for 1866, and of 205,605l. or 11·1 per cent., in 1866 on the amount for 1865. The average for each plaintiff entered in 1868 is 2l. 1s. 3d., against 2l. 6s. 7d., in 1867; 2l. 7s. in 1866, and 2l. 7s. 2d. in 1865.

The amount of debt for which judgment was obtained on original hearings is little more than half (51·3 per cent.) of the total amount for which plaints were entered.

In 1867 this proportion was 52·2 per cent.; in 1866, 51·1 per cent.; in 1865, 50·2 per cent.; in 1864, 55·7 per cent.

The amount of costs shows an increase of 11,435*l.*, or 24·2 per cent., upon the amount for 1867, following an increase of 3,725*l.* or 8·5 per cent., in 1867, upon the amount for 1866, and of 5,742*l.* or 15·2 per cent., in 1866, upon the amount in 1865. The costs are 4·4 per cent. of the amount of debt for which judgment was obtained; on original hearings, against 4·1 per cent. in each of the two preceding years.

The amount of fees shows an increase of 42,740*l.*, or 13·7 per cent., upon the amount in 1867, following an increase of 23,382*l.*, or 8·1 per cent., in 1867, upon the amount for 1866, and of 30,578*l.*, or 11·8 per cent. in 1866, upon the amount for 1865.

EQUITY JURISDICTION.

The following are the totals, under the different headings in the returns, of the proceedings in equity of the whole of the County Courts, for each of the years 1868 and 1867, with the totals of the proceedings from the commencement of the operation of the Act on Oct. 1, 1865 to Dec. 31, 1866:

	1868.	1867.
Total number of equitable suits or proceedings—	679	613
Number of plaints entered—
For administration of estates	236	189
For the execution of trusts	54	48
For foreclosure or redemption, or enforcing any charge or lien	104	112
For specific performance	87	105
For delivering up or cancelling any agreement for sale or purchase	8	9
For the dissolution or winding-up of a partnership	54	55
	543	518
Number of petitions or notices filed—
For the appointment or removal of trustees	30	35
For any other purpose under Trustee Acts	55	28
For the maintenance or advancement of infants	15	11
For partitions	2	—
For injunctions	13	21
	115	95
Number of instances of payments by trustees under sect. 24 of 30 & 31 Vict. c. 142	21	—
Amount of subject matter in dispute or otherwise	£87,101	£82,622
Amount of attorney's costs allowed	£5,191	£6,003
Amount of fees—
Payable to Consolidated Fund	£1,012	£1,052
Registrars	£1,807	£2,089
High Bailiffs	£599	£655
Number of suits or proceedings pending on Dec. 31	254	202
Number of appeals	6	8
Numbers committed for contempt	4	2
Number of warrants of execution, possession, &c.	8	13

CITY OF LONDON COURT.

Under the Act of 30 & 31 Vict. c. 142, which came into operation on the 1st Jan. 1868, the Sheriffs' Court of London was assimilated with the County Courts under the title of the City of London Court.

The number of plaints entered in this court in 1868 was 14,933, against 11,739 in the preceding year, showing an increase of 3194, or 27·2 per cent. There were further, in 1868, 78 cases sent for trial from the Superior Courts. The number of causes determined in 1868 was—with a jury, 46; without a jury, 6749; against 58, and 5574 in 1867. The number of judgments was 6825, against 5632. There were 1223 judgment summonses issued, and 509 heard, against 1021 and 418 in 1867. There were 279 warrants of commitment issued, and 33 debtors imprisoned, against 231 and 50; 1861 executions against goods issued, and 30 sales made, against 1386, and 19. The total amount for which plaints were entered was 63,392*l.*, against 42,651*l.*. The amounts for which judgments were obtained by plaintiffs on original hearings were, debts 27,786*l.*, costs 2367*l.*. The total amount of fees 7800*l.*, against 18,858*l.*, 1532*l.*, and 5400*l.*, respectively, in 1867.

BARRISTERS AND ATTORNEYS.

(From the Spectator.)

THE project of fusing the two branches of the Legal Profession, which has often been started, and which has been lately brought into more active discussion by the Liverpool Law Society, seems likely to lead to some practical results, though of an indirect rather than of a direct nature. Some time ago we gave a short sketch of Mr. JEVONS's proposal. We have now before us the report of a committee which was formed for the consideration of the subject, and a scheme for the formation of a Legal University in London as the first step towards such an end.

The committee report that the Profession generally approves the suggestion of a Central Law University, but is by no means unanimous with regard to "an amalgamation of the two branches or the combination in the same individual of the duties of both branches." This, however, is what in our opinion the public interest demands. It is, no doubt, highly useful to barristers themselves that there should be some means of testing their capacity, and that those who are the most capable should have an opportunity of distinguishing themselves without waiting on the sons and brothers of attorneys. The attorneys, in like manner, may justly complain that as things stand they have to go through a regular apprenticeship and pass examinations, while the barrister has only to eat a few bad dinners and attend as many unprofitable lectures. But these evils, though they may be felt in turn by both branches of the Profession, do not at all exhaust the list. There is the further complaint on the part of the barrister that he is wholly dependent on the attorney for the materials of his case, that he is forbidden by the rules of his profession to see his client, to volunteer information which may be necessary for success, to test the credibility of witnesses for whom he must vouch to the jury. On the other hand, the attorney complains that when he has done his utmost with a case he must transfer it to some one who has no interest in it, who perhaps does not read it through, who sometimes makes a compromise without authority, and who is not responsible for the grossest negligence. Between the two complaints the public suffers. In either case it is the client that is sacrificed. The man who is made to pay the two fees falls between the two stools. The injustice of excluding attorneys from all the chief legal appointments is no doubt felt by them alone, but it is none the less real, and it carries with it a diminution of social status which is a clog upon the whole of that branch of the profession. It is said that the attorney makes up for this by earning money more quickly than the barrister, and that the barrister ought to be rewarded for his early disappointments by "high patronage late in life." No doubt there are compensations in all the troubles of life, but that does not prove that life is perfect. It might be better if the barrister could also earn money when he was young, and yet there would be no reason why he should forfeit his subsequent chance of patronage. If a man is fit for both, why is he to be restricted to one? Why is he to remain idle in youth, or be incapable of a rise in manhood, unless it be for the public interest that tried ability should not have the stimulus of hope, and growing ability should be pressed down under the load of disappointment? It is said that a division of labour is necessary in the legal profession, that an attorney in large practice keeps different clerks for different kinds of work, and that barristers also devote themselves to special subjects. If, therefore, the distinction between barristers and attorneys is to be abolished, a fortiori all these minor distinctions must go with it. But this is just what will not follow. At present there are arbitrary distinctions as well as necessary distinctions, the first being the creatures of law, the second those of practical convenience. It cannot be thought that if barristers were to be allowed to take their instructions from clients, and attorneys were to be allowed to practise in court, the next step would be for Chancery barristers to be defending prisoners at the Old Bailey, and for the Bar of the Middlesex Sessions to migrate in a body to the House of Lords. There might be other inconveniences in a simple fusion of the two branches of the Profession as they stand at present. The change would be too sweeping to be unaccompanied with matters of grave doubt and difficulty. But we hope before long to see the principle conceded. The details may be worked out more slowly.

The report to which we have alluded proposes that there should be a Central University of Law for both branches of the Profession. No one should be entitled to practise either as attorney or barrister without taking the degree of Associate of Laws for the first, and of Bachelor of Laws for the second. We think that in this we may trace the germ of a future amalgamation of the two branches. If the education of both is to be the same, but the one which is higher in the social scale and in the rewards reserved for it is to entail a longer course of study and a severer test, the rise from one to the other becomes more natural. At present, there is no connection between the two. If an attorney wishes to become a barrister he must first have his name struck off the rolls, and must then qualify for a call by keeping terms for three years, and attending either chambers or lectures, or passing an examination. In the same way a barrister must be disbarred before he can be articulated. None of the time passed in studying for one branch is counted by the other. According to the present scheme, a course of study in an attorney's office is to be recognised as part of a barrister's qualification. This, again, gives us a point of contact between the two branches. It has already been found that a year or two with an attorney is an extremely serviceable part of a barrister's training. We believe one of our present Judges started as an attorney. A late Attorney-General was articulated in his father's office. One of the leading juniors on the Home Circuit owes much of his success to the same cause. The insight into the mechanism of law as a business which is thus gained, has its effects on the subsequent practice of law as a science. This may be but a very gradual convergence of the two branches, and, indeed, the committee have altogether postponed the consideration of any actual fusion. But when lines cease to be parallel, they must meet some time or other if prolonged at both ends, and the ultimate tendency of the present scheme is to bring the two branches together. No doubt, long before they actually join, many other distinctions will have to be abolished. The attorneys will not always be tied down by such strict rules as to their fees, and the barristers will not always be limited to a honorarium. The payment of both ought to be arranged on a different scale. At present neither of them make their incomes by their real work, for that is insufficiently remunerated. The attorney gets the same fee for signing a cheque or reading a letter as for answering a difficult question of mixed law and fact which needs all his learning and experience. The barrister earns as much by going before a Judge in Chambers and obtaining leave to plead several matters, as by waiting in court for ten days while the cases that stand before him are being disposed of. We hear occasionally of immense charges for marriage settlements, and exorbitant fees in heavy cases. But if lawyers were able to bargain, could charge the real value of their work in one case, and do without any fee in another, such payments would be more evenly distributed. Lord Westbury's Bill to enable attorneys to dispense with the regular scale would have this effect so far as they were concerned. Unfortunately, the Profession was against that scheme, and nothing has yet been devised to touch the sacred honorarium of barristers.

There can be little doubt that whatever may be done with a view to the fusion of the two branches, the present division of labour will continue. Perhaps the effect of a change will be to extend it. The preparation of a case will still rest with the man who is versed in business details, but he will not think it necessary to carry the case himself through all its stages. Indeed, if by accident the business details were to be entrusted to the wrong man, he would have the simple remedy of transferring them to another. Barristers in large practice could not count on having the greater part of their work done for nothing, as is so much the case at present, but they will be able to make over a minimum of the gains together with the maximum of the business. We question if this would not be a more healthy system, as far as the Profession is concerned, than the one which is now in vogue. But the real point to be considered is the public interest. Would the legal work of the country be better or worse done if these arbitrary distinctions were abolished? We think it would be done better. As things stand, the work is portioned out, not with regard to practical difficulty, but to theoretical fitness. An attorney can conduct the case against the Overend and Gurney directors before the LORD MAYOR, and can be highly complimented on the skill with which he has presented it to the court, but when the very same case comes on before the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE, Mr. LEWIS can be heard no longer. An immense amount of Chancery business is transacted by the chief clerks, and as barristers will not go before those who were originally solicitors, solicitors have to appear and argue. But should any case be referred from the chief clerk to the Vice-Chancellor, the argument has to be taken up by counsel, not because Vice-Chancellors are more difficult to move than chief clerks, but because barristers have an exclusive audience. Of course, a solicitor may feel that he is unfitted to argue a case, just as a barrister may feel that he is unfitted to get up the necessary evidence. But the converse may sometimes occur. An attorney may learn by experience that he is more fitted for work in court than for office work, and a barrister may find that his presence of mind always deserts him as soon as he is on his legs. Under present circumstances, the first can only practise in County Courts and before magistrates; the other must restrict himself to chamber practice, which is not always of a very lucrative order. There is no other remedy. It is all very well to say that both branches of the Profession are open to all the world, but a man who has committed himself to one does not care to throw away all his time and money and start afresh in the other. If there was even a simple and ready means of transition from one to the other, some improvement would be made. Yet here again the interests of the Profession would be advanced, rather than those of the public, though the public would benefit indirectly from anything that rendered the Profession more practically useful. A simple and economical division of labour would serve the public best, and the Profession need hardly fear an injury to itself from a scheme nursed in its own bosom, and countenanced by the ablest of its leaders.

ELECTION LAW.

THE REGISTRATION COURTS.

LAMBETH.

Mr. P. Le Breton, the revising barrister for the borough of Lambeth, opened his court on Wednesday at the Vestry-hall, Kennington.

Mr. T. Gilbert, Victoria-street, appeared on behalf of the Conservative Registration Society; and Mr. R. Hartwell appeared on behalf of the Lambeth Lodger Registration Committee.

There were only 67 householders' claims, 176 Conservative objections, and 294 lodger claims.

The Revising Barrister remarked that there was little to do to all appearance, the number of claims and objections being very considerably under that of last year. He was desirous to give every facility for lodgers to establish their claims; and, therefore, he had determined to hold a special court on Saturday afternoon next, at three o'clock. He would, however, take any lodgers' claims who attended during the day.

Mr. Hartwell expressed satisfaction at the revising barrister's consideration for the lodgers; but he thought that the lodger franchise under the present system was a delusion and a sham. The clauses in the Reform Bill relating to the lodgers required extensive alteration to render them of much use or advantage.

The court then proceeded with the lists of householders, the first taken being that of St. Giles's, Camberwell, in which there were 41 claims and 3 objections. Of the claims 36 were sustained, and the three persons objected to were struck out. The overseers' objections from deaths, removals, and non-payment of rates were then disposed of, and the list passed as correct. The list for St. Mary's, Newington, in which there were 173 objections taken by the Conservative agent was next taken. Of these 160 were sustained, there being no agent present on the Liberal side to defend the retaining of the names. Out of 15 Conservative claims, 14 were sustained. The overseers' objections and alterations were then taken, and a few names having been struck out from deaths, removals, or non-payment of rates, the list was declared complete. The list of St. Mary's, Lambeth, was next taken, containing the names of 16,000 voters. There were only 11 claims, and no objections by agents. Six of the claims were allowed. The overseers' objections from deaths, removals, and non-payment of rates were then taken and disposed of, occupying some time, and the list was declared complete. The barrister complimented the overseers of the different parishes on the excellent manner in which they had prepared the lists of voters, which had been a considerable saving to the time of the court. Having been enabled to get through the householders' lists in one day, he should adjourn the court until Saturday afternoon at three o'clock, when he would take the lodger lists. The number of lodger claims during the day was 20, and all were allowed.

MARYLEBONE.

Mr. F. H. Bacon, the revising barrister for the borough of Marylebone, attended at the Vestry-hall, Harrow-road, Paddington, for the purpose of visiting the list of voters for that parish.

Mr. R. H. Bristowe Macmullen, the hon. secretary and solicitor of the Paddington District Conservative Association, attended to watch the proceedings on behalf of the Conservative interest. The Liberal and Radical parties in the borough were not represented.

Mr. Macmullen inquired of the revising barrister what course he proposed to adopt with reference to the lodger claimants.

Mr. Bacon, in reply, stated that he should carry out the same principle as he had adopted in Chelsea at the revision last year, and if the lodger claimants did not attend to support their claims, or send some one with whom they were well acquainted, he should, on proceeding with the list, strike off their names.

After some further conversation, the revising barrister proceeded to hear the claims of those lodgers who were then present.

The revision of the voters' list for the county of Sussex has been fixed to take place as follows:—For East Sussex, before Mr. Charles Edward Jemmett: At Uckfield, on the 29th inst.; Mayfield, 30th inst.; East Grinstead, 1st Oct.; Battle, 4th; Hastings, 5th; Hailsham, 8th; Rye, 12th; Lewes, 14th; Cuckfield, 18th; Brighton 20th. For West Sussex, before Mr. Chas. Hanco: Horsham, 21st inst.; Petworth, 23rd; Midhurst 24th; Chichester, 27th; Arundel, 28th; Worthing, 29th; and Steyning, 30th.

FEMALE VOTERS AT LEICESTER.—The borough of Leicester (the population of which numbers about 80,000 inhabitants) has a Burgess roll of over 16,000 persons, of whom between 2000 and 3000 were female voters. Having in view the forthcoming municipal elections, at which females will be allowed to vote for the first time, the ladies have already begun to bestir themselves, and in one of the large wards a females' association has been formed with one of the fair sex as president. The political creed of the association is said to be "thoroughly independent."

LODGER CLAIMS.—It is remarkable how very few claims have been made in the metropolis by lodgers renting apartments of the value of 10l. per annum to be registered under the provisions of the Reform Act of 1867. In some parishes there have been no claims at all. In Mile-end Old Town, containing 65,000 inhabitants, and in which there are at least 3000 lodgers qualified to vote, only twenty-two claims have been sent in, although Mr. Southwell, the town clerk of the hamlet, published self-explanatory printed forms, and they were liberally supplied to anyone applying for them. In the adjoining hamlet of Ratcliff, with a population of 17,000, and with 1000 or more qualified lodgers, only two claims have been forwarded to the overseers, one by a Conservative, the other by a Radical Registration Association. In the parish of St. George-in-the-East, with a population of 40,000, and 2000 of them qualified to vote as lodgers, only nine claims have been made. Thus, in three parishes, containing a population of 142,000 souls and 6000 lodger voters, only thirty-three claims have been made.

Monmouthshire.—An ordinary dividend at the rate of four per cent. per annum.

Sambre and Meuse.—A dividend of 4s. per share payable on the 1st Oct.

West Cornwall.—A dividend of 2½ per cent. on the ordinary stock.

BANKS.

Hong Kong and Shanghai.—A dividend at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum.

London and Middlesex Bank (Limited).—A final distribution of 5s. per share, making 2l. 5s. per 10l. share, has been made by the liquidators.

Merchant of London.—An interim dividend at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum.

Oriental Commercial Bank (Limited).—An eighth dividend of 1s. 6d. in the pound (making 13s.) is payable to the creditors at the offices of Messrs. Cooper Brothers and Co.

FINANCE, CREDIT, AND DISCOUNT COMPANY.

City Discount (Limited and Reduced).—A first dividend of 4s. in the pound is announced.

ASSURANCE COMPANIES.

Albert Life Assurance.—Mr. Price has issued a memorandum to the policy-holders denying that the proposed arrangement is unduly favourable to the shareholders. He believes the assets would not be increased if the shareholders' liability were unlimited; and there is a strong feeling in favour of a transfer of the business. He also suggests that a committee should be formed to give him counsel and assistance.

International Life Assurance.—A call of 5l. per share is announced by the official liquidator.

Rock Life.—A dividend and bonus together of 4s. per share.

MISCELLANEOUS COMPANIES.

Lower Assam Company.—A call of 5s. per share is payable on the 1st Oct.

Monarch Building Society.—5 per cent. interest has been paid, and a further 5 per cent. bonus is recommended.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

PRACTICE — JURISDICTION — DEMURRER — OBTAINING MONEY ON FALSE REPRESENTATIONS.—B. told R. that he was going to advance money to two persons on the security of a bill at three months, and represented them to be perfectly solvent and the bill a good security, knowing at the time that they were insolvent, and that the bill would be dishonoured, which it was. R. having advanced money on the faith of such representations, filed a bill alleging that he was induced to advance it on representations made by B., which he knew to be untrue, the transaction being part of a scheme to apply, as he had applied, the money for purposes of his own. A general demurrer to this bill overruled, on the ground that, although there was a legal remedy, there was concurrent jurisdiction in equity: (Ramshead v. Bolton, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 50. V.C. M.)

ADMINISTRATION — INSUFFICIENT ESTATE.—Where there are contingent annuities given by a testator's will, and his estate turns out to be insufficient for the due payment of them, and some of the annuitants have died, the amount of the several annuities is to be estimated at the value of the respective annuities at the death of the testator, and the sums subsequently paid to the annuitants on account of the annuities to be deducted from that amount. The rule as adopted in Todd v. Beilly, 27 Beav. 353, followed: (Potts v. Smith, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 54. V.C. J.)

ARTICLES EXEMPT FROM SEIZURE IN EXECUTION.

The following remarks by an American judge on an American statute are of interest:—"Although I was inclined to think at first that the words ordinarily used in the debtor's occupation was intended to exempt merely such goods as were in actual and daily use, and that when he had manifested an intention to abandon their use by selling them, that they ipso facto became subject to seizure for the payment of his debts, I am, however, now inclined to think that those words in the sixth paragraph of the 4th section are merely descriptive, intended by general language to take in articles of various kinds suited to the debtor's occupation, as the anvil, bellows, hammers, &c., of a blacksmith; the bench, planes, saws, &c., of a carpenter; the horse of a pedler, the loom, shuttles, &c., of a weaver, and such like. The words ordinarily used should be read ordinarily required or employed in the particular occupation. I do not think now that they have reference to the actual employment of the chattels by the debtor. That their use is to restrict the sense of the broad term chattels; if the word 'chattels' were not used the 6th head of the 4th section would read thus, 'tools and implements of the debtor's occupation to the value of 60 dols.,' and that, as respects tools is the proper reading of the section, the words ordinarily used in being solely applicable with the words or chattels. If exempt then from seizure the execution could not bind them in the debtor's hands or in the hands of the claimant, as he could (without, i.e. in the absence of, intentional fraud) make a valid sale of them to whomsoever he pleased, for he was free to sell them, and a bona fide purchaser is protected. A workman, of course, is not bound to keep the same tools all the days of his life, nor a pedler the same horse which would be exempted, after he is broken down, or if he for any reason thinks, as pedlers do sometimes think, he could better himself by an exchange or sale: indeed, a man might be so necessitous as to require to pawn or sell his tools to procure food for his family, and a hundred things might occur to show that this view is correct.

THE BENCH AND THE BAR.

THE LAST OF THE KNIGHTS.—The chivalry of the United Kingdom has received a distinguished addition. Her Majesty has been pleased to direct letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal, granting the dignity of a knight of the United Kingdom to William Richard Drake, of Oatlands-lodge, in the county of Surrey, Esq. Nothing could be more gratifying to a branch of the legal profession on which titles seldom descend. Mr. W. R. Drake is a solicitor, and solicitors are seldom knighted, as for other reasons so perhaps because the judges, often including the chief justices, as at this moment, never attain higher civil honours. But there is no reason in the nature of things why a highly respectable solicitor should not be knighted. It was in the City considered a breach of social or civic etiquette when two aldermen who had been lord mayors recently accepted a mere knighthood. But if anybody likes to be knighted, considering who are often knighted, we may perhaps admire the taste of those who receive, yet we should scarcely question the discretion of those who bestow, this somewhat doubtful honour. As we have said, we rather like the notion of a solicitor winning spurs; and Mr. Drake is as good a solicitor, for aught we know, as any other gentleman one &c. on the Law List. To say the truth, we never heard of Mr. Drake or of the respectable firm of Birch, Dalrymple, Drake, and Co., of which the new knight is the junior partner. That is to say, we were not bound to know his merits. We are told that "Mr. Drake has done great services to the Liberal party." Though of the Liberal party ourselves, we do not profess to be initiated in, or familiar with, the secrets of that party. Perhaps we are not worthy to know them; so much the better for us. We therefore look at Sir W. R. Drake and the Liberal party, and the services rendered to them by Sir William, or by anybody else, very much ab extra. We can only wonder what those services are. As a public man Mr. Drake was perfectly unknown to us, and we believe to the outside world. Orator, publicist, statistician, drafter of bills, collector of social facts, skilled in foreign or domestic policy, Mr. Drake may be, and we dare say is. But this fame of his has not reached us. Mr. Drake may have served his country; but his country, in this case as in other cases, knows not of its hidden heroes, its secret benefactors. The authorised journals tell us that "it is understood that this honour has been conferred at the instance of Mr. Gladstone as a personal recognition of the services rendered to the Liberal party by Mr. Drake during the several years of close and confidential relations which have existed between him and its recognised representatives." Here we recognise not only "Mr. Gladstone's instance," whatever that may be, but the grand Gladstonian style in all its sonorous superabundance of sesquipedalian words—to take a feather from Mr. Gladstone's wing. And we recognise something else—Mr. Gladstone's earnest outspokenness. We dare say that the Liberal party does owe a great deal to Mr. Drake. The Liberal party owed a great deal to Mr. Coppock. Not that we have the least reason to suppose that Mr. Drake is in any special sense a successor to Mr. Coppock; only, if there is a difference, it might be well to have it explained. Every party owes a great deal to its confidential agents. There must be a good deal of party work done by active partisans, which work requires special instruments. Those instruments must be peculiar; the work to be done is, as they say, delicate and difficult, and to do it requires peculiar qualities. Sometimes the work approaches the confines of the shaky; sometimes, it is thought of the dirty. As far as we have heard, this sort of work is commonly supposed to mean electioneering work, which is not always clean work; it means also dealing with doubtful allies, staving off unpleasant contingencies, coaxing and manipulating and arranging and so on. Services rendered to a great political party are often confused in popular estimation with the Man in the Moon and that sort of thing. In Sir W. R. Drake's case any such association or confusion of ideas would be very unjust, we make no doubt. But still the popular opinion remains; and in its teeth it reflects great credit on Mr. Gladstone's hatred of reticence, and of course on his discretion, not only that he gets a confidential agent and servant of his party knighted, but at once says why he is knighted. That Mr. Drake deserves his honours, though not perhaps so much as the first knightly Drake, we make no doubt. But it is awkward that the Queen's name should be introduced into the matter. The Queen is the fountain of honour, and from the Queen that honour flows into the channel which the present Drake, Knt., adorns. But then, it comes to this, that services rendered to the Liberal party include private services, and from the nature of the case, secret services are not to be considered equivalent to services rendered to the Crown and State and public weal. This is not the right use to make of the Sovereign's prerogative of conferring titles. By theory every title is conferred for services rendered either to the great body politic or to the Crown personally. Costa is knighted because he is supposed to have done service to the whole people, Whig and Tory alike, i.e. he is knighted in recognition of his public service. A provincial mayor is knighted because he has exhibited great diligence and circumspection in the discharge of public and official duties. A valuable servant or physician of the court is knighted or baronetted for services rendered to the Sovereign personally. Into none of these categories can we force Sir W. R. Drake. And as he at present forms the only precedent for his own special honours, we are obliged to Mr. Gladstone for announcing his qualifications. The announcement is well fitted to encourage the activity of a class which we had begun to think was quite active enough. We can only regret that Mr. Gladstone has not instructed his organs to obviate possible misconception by explaining more precisely the nature of those "services rendered to the Liberal party" which have been deemed worthy of this very exceptional, and perhaps exceptionable, recognition.—Saturday Review.

NOTES ON NEW DECISIONS.

NUISANCE—POLLUTION OF STREAM—ABATEMENT.—A corporation had erected certain works so that the sewage of the town flowed into an ancient brook, which passed the mills of a manufactory, and thereby the brook or stream was so far polluted as to affect the health of the workmen and others in the manufactories residing in the neighbourhood of the stream, and also affected the property of the manufacturers. The balance of the scientific evidence proving that what had been done by the corporation caused a nuisance and was injurious to the public health: Held, that the relators were entitled to an immediate injunction to restrain any further extension of the works by which the pollution of the stream had been caused, and a further injunction (to commence the 1st June 1870) to allow time to the corporation to apply to Parliament for additional powers if so advised, against causing the sewage to pass by or through the present outfalls; (Attorney-General v. The Corporation of Halifax, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 52. V.C.J.)

MUNICIPAL ELECTION—BRIBERY.—Sec. 2 of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 102, extended by 22 Vict. c. 35, to municipal elections. A person is to be deemed guilty of bribery who shall give, lend, &c. or shall offer, promise, or promise to procure, or to endeavour to procure any money or valuable consideration to or for any voter, in order to induce any voter to vote or refrain from voting, &c. On the morning of an election B. went to C., a voter, who told him that he did not intend to vote, when B. said he should be remunerated for loss of time. This was held to be bribery within the above cited clause: (Simpson v. Veend, 11 L. T. Rep. N. S. 56. Q. B.)

The Manchester magistrates have suspended not less than 388 beerhouse licences. These suspended cases will, of course, come on for reconsideration at a future sessions.

The first conviction under the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act took place on Saturday, before the Guildford magistrates. Mr. J. M. Molyneux, a farmer, was fined 5*l.* and costs for turning out a heifer on Rushetts Common, while suffering from the foot and mouth disease.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.—A Sheffield paper states that the burgess list for that town, just issued, contains among the 34,000 names those of between 300 and 400 women.

The resolution lately adopted at a public meeting at Mile-end, calling upon the board of guardians not to enforce the Vaccination Act, has been presented to that body. The chairman stated that the guardians had never exercised any of the powers conferred by the Act, for they held it to be their duty to do nothing obnoxious to the feelings of the ratepayers. The board petitioned against the measure when it was before Parliament, as an "uncalled-for interference with the liberty of the subject."

One of the magistrates of the county Sligo has been dismissed from the commission of the peace by the Lord Chancellor, notice to that effect having been served on him on Saturday by the clerk of the Crown. A correspondent of Saunders's News Letter says that the gentleman so deprived is Mr. Robert Faussett, of Union Lodge, Colloney. The cause of his removal is his having, at a meeting of the town and harbour commissioners of Sligo, of which body he was a life-elected member, given a sort of challenge to fight a duel to a brother magistrate; and having called another member of the bench a "low chap." The corporation, as a public body, brought his conduct under the notice of the Lord Chancellor, and the result is that he has been superseded.

Lord Stanley presided at the annual general session of the magistrates of Lancashire, held at Preston. Mr. Aspland submitted a report from the Standing Reformatory Schools Committee, and said that during the past year the increase of adult crime in the country had been 9 per cent., while in the county of Lancaster the increase had been 29 per cent. In England and Wales there had been an advance of 4·6 in juvenile crime, while in Lancashire the advance had been 20·7. There was a very extraordinary difference between Lancashire and the rest of England, and it perhaps might be explained by the want of reformatory accommodation which now existed. A considerable number of children had been sent to reformatories. Lancashire paid only 20 per cent. of the maintenance as compared with other counties paying 24. In Lancashire there were some 24 per cent. of children sent to reformatories who never reached them—firstly, through want of accommodation; and next through the unacquaintance of magistrates with the provisions of the Act of Parliament and requirements of reformatory managers. Lord Stanley said there could be no doubt as to the increase of crime, and it certainly was the duty of the magistrates to consider the report when it was printed. The report was ordered to be printed and circulated. The Rev. J. Shepherd Birley, as chairman of the Finance Committee, made a very serious charge against some members of the legal profession. In proposing that the table of fees to magistrates' clerks be revised by a committee of the court, he said the reason for the revision was that on looking over the returns of fines and penalties due to the county (which are sent into the treasurer's office by the magistrates' clerks), the Finance Committee found that the greatest discrepancies existed in the way in which those gentlemen chose to interpret the scale of fees, which was intended to be uniform throughout the county. In one petty sessional division the charges on drunken cases, besides the ordinary fine of 5*s.*, ranged from 4*s.* 6*d.* to 8*s.* 6*d.*; but in another division the very lowest charge was 1*l.*, and sometimes it was as high as 27*s.* In beerhouse cases, in one division, the charges ranged from 10*s.* to 25*s.*; in another from 4*s.* 6*d.* to 12*s.* 6*d.*; and in another the lowest charge was 15*s.* 6*d.*, and the highest 37*s.* The magistrates would be surprised to learn that in certain petty sessional divisions 2*s.* was charged on every drunken conviction. In one case he had been at the trouble to inquire whether those convictions for which 2*s.* was charged were ever filed, and he found that during the last quarter there were 34 such convictions, yet that magistrates' clerk had never filed a conviction since Jan. 1868. He would give no names, but expressed a strong belief that a very small proportion only of these convictions were ever filed; and he would warn those magistrates' clerks who received charges on convictions without filing them that they had better mind what they were about, because these very bills were all sent up to the Treasury, and if they were found out it was pretty well known how they would be dealt with. It was a very great scandal upon the court which had sanctioned the present table of fees; and that scandal ought to be at once removed. The proposition was at once agreed to.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

SUCCESSION DUTY — BEQUEST OF MONEY TO BE LAID OUT IN PURCHASE OF LAND — EQUITABLE CONVERSION — WHAT DUTY PAYABLE — A testator by will in 1799 bequeathed 10,000*l.* Consols to trustees upon trust, to lay out the principal and the interest moneys arising therefrom in the purchase of real estate, to be settled and assured to the use of his eldest son, Charles, for life, with remainder to the first and other sons of Charles successively in tail male; and, in default of such issue, to the use of testator's son James for life, with remainder to the first and other sons of James successively in tail male; and in default of such issue, then to his own right heirs for ever. Testator died in 1800, leaving his two sons, Charles and James, Charles being the eldest and the heir-at-law. Charles died in 1840, and James in 1857, each of them dying a bachelor, and intestate. The 10,000*l.* was never laid out in the purchase of real estate, but the dividends arising therefrom were paid to Charles and James successively during their respective lives. At James's death the testator's only lineal descendant was his daughter and only surviving child, Susan, who then became his heir-at-law, and died in 1866, a spinster and intestate, having always refused to receive either dividends or principal of the 10,000*l.* left under her father's (the testator's) will. Shortly after her death the principal and interest moneys representing the real estate fund were paid into the Court of Chancery, and a suit was instituted for administering the same, in which suit the following facts were found: That at testator's death his heir-at-law was his eldest son Charles; that the person now such heir-at-law, and entitled to any real estate of which the testator might have died intestate, was Edward F. De L., a grandson of the testator's brother. That at Charles's death his heir-at-law was his brother James; and that at James's death his heir-at-law was his sister Susan; and that at Susan's death her heir-at-law was the said Edward F. De L., who was the heir-at-law of the said Charles, James, and Susan respectively, and the person entitled to any real estate of which they respectively might have died intestate. It was also found that "none of the persons for the time being entitled to any real estate of which the testator had died intestate did, while so entitled, any act with reference to the money so directed to be laid out in the purchase of land amounting to or having the effect of an election to take it as money or land, or as might have the effect of constituting such person or persons a new root or roots of descent with regard to such money." The Commissioners of Inland Revenue having assessed the said Edward F. de L. in succession duty at the rate of 5 per cent. on the principal and interest moneys constituting the above mentioned real estate fund on the ground of its being a "succession to him derived from Susan the predecessor (of a brother of the father of whom he was a descendant)," he appealed against such assessment on the grounds, first, that legacy duty and not succession duty was payable by him thereon as a descendant of a brother of the deceased testator at the rate of 2½ per cent. under 36 Geo. 3, c. 52; or, secondly, that if succession duty was payable thereon, it was payable by him as the descendant of a brother of the testator, under the Succession Duty Act, at the rate of 3 per cent. only as being a succession derived by him (not from the said Susan but) from the said testator the predecessor, and on a case stated for the opinion of the Court of Exchequer, it was held, by Kelly, C. B. and Channell, B., that the fund in question, not having been laid out in land, was liable to legacy duty under sect. 19 of the Legacy Duty Act (36 Geo. 3, c. 52), and therefore that succession duty did not attach. And, per Kelly, C. B., the principle or equitable fiction on which courts of equity have so long held that money to be laid out in land is for certain purposes to be treated as land, is inapplicable to the interpretation of the statute imposing duties upon personal estate. Also, per Kelly, C. B., that if the case were governed by the Succession Duty Act, the daughter Susan and not the testator must be deemed the "predecessor" of the petitioner. But, contra, by Bramwell and Cleasby, BB., that duty was payable upon the fund under the Succession Duty Act (16 & 17

Vict. c. 51), at 5 per cent. as upon a succession from "Susan" as the "predecessor," and not under the Legacy Duty Act. And, per Bramwell, B., that sect. 19 of 36 Geo. 3 was not applicable, and that whether under the one Act or the other, the duty payable on the fund was properly assessed at the rate of 5 per cent. Held, also, by Bramwell, Channell, and Cleasby, BB., that the practice laid down by the court in The Marquis of Chandos v. The Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 6 Ex. 461; 20 L. J. 269, Ex., and followed in subsequent cases, should be adhered to, and that the counsel for the appellant should begin. Kelly, C. B. expressing his opinion that the more convenient course would be that, in every case where the Crown desires or seeks to impose a tax, the counsel for the Crown should begin: (Re De Lancey's Succession, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 58. Ex.)

ing. Whereas, &c. [recital of power of attorney]. And whereas the said C. D. [agent] has done and performed various acts and things under and in pursuance of the said power and authority conferred upon him by the said recited deed-poll. And whereas a meeting of the creditors of the said A. B. was held on the day of 18, at which meeting the said C. D. was also present, and a resolution was then passed to the effect that the said C. D. should instruct Mr. , accountant, to realise the estate and effects of the said A. B. to the best advantage, and that the assets thereof (after payment thereof of all expenses in any manner incidental to the said realisation of the said estate and effects, and the distribution of the said assets and all expenses incurred in and about the said meeting of creditors, and the carrying that resolution into effect) should be equally distributed among the creditors of the said A. B., and that the said creditors should thereupon execute to the said A. B. and C. D., as such attorney as aforesaid, such release as is hereinafter contained. And whereas, in pursuance of the said resolution, the said accountant has realised to the best advantage the estate and effects of the said A. B., and (after allowing and deducting such expenses as aforesaid) the sum of £ , amounting to a composition of in the pound on the amount of the respective debts of the creditors of the said A. B., remains in the hands of the said accountant for distribution among the said creditors as aforesaid. Now these presents witness that, in consideration of the premises and of the payment to us the undersigned creditors of the said A. B., at the time of our respectively signing and executing these presents, of the several sums of money placed opposite our respective names in the second column hereunder written, the receipt of which said sums respectively we the undersigned creditors of the said A. 157. Release from debt owing by a firm.

To A. B., of, &c. [debtor].

In consideration of your dissolving the partnership heretofore existing between yourself and my son, D. D., upon the terms agreed to between you on the day of inst., I hereby discharge you, and also the partnership firm of "A. B. and Co.," from the debt of £ , or whatever the amount may be, now due and owing by you or that firm to me, and from all claims and demands on account thereof. And I undertake to execute and deliver to you, upon request, any more formal release or discharge from the said debt that you may require.

Dated the day of 18, C. D. [creditor].

158. Release from agreement by purchaser and vendor.

To A. B., of, &c. [vendor].

Referring to your agreement with me, dated, &c., whereby you agreed that in the event of your becoming the purchaser of the land and dwelling-house at , then building by you under contract with me that you would finish and complete the same according to the contract, and would convey the property to me on payment to you of the amount that should be due on a final adjustment of accounts in respect of that property, and of interest at £ per cent. per annum on all moneys paid by you from the date of payment, including all legal charges, surveyor's fees, and other expenses, such conveyance, and all other charges incidental thereto, to be at my expense, and you having some time since finished and completed the said premises accordingly, I now find, after investigating the accounts, that I am totally unable to purchase the property from you, or to pay the price thereof. I therefore request you to release and discharge me from the said agreement of the day of 18, so far as it remains to be performed on my part, and in consideration of your so doing I undertake and agree that, should you become the purchaser of the said property, you shall hold the same discharged from your said agreement with me, and from every term, condition, or stipulation therein contained, in like manner as if the same had never been entered into, and I hereby discharge the same accordingly, and declare that I have no further claim whatever to, or in respect of, the said property, or any part thereof.

Dated the day of 18, C. D. [purchaser].

I agree to the terms above proposed, and hereby release and discharge the said C. D. from the said agreement. A. B. [vendor].

159. Release to a mortgagee of the equity of redemption in freeholds by the parties entitled under the will of a deceased mortgagor (indorsed on mortgage).

This indenture, made, &c., between E. F., of &c., and M. his wife, G. H., of &c., and N. his wife, J. K., of, &c., and L. M., of, &c. [releasers] of the one part, and the within-named C. D. [mortgagee] of the other part. Whereas the within-named A. B. [mortgagor] duly made and executed his last will, dated, &c., and thereby, after directing the payment of his just debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, gave and bequeathed the hereditaments comprised in the within-written indenture to the said M. F., N. H., J. K., and L. M. equally between them, share and share alike, and appointed W. X. and Y. Z. executors of his said will. And whereas the within-named A. B. died on the day of 18 without having revoked or altered his said will. And whereas the said will of the within-named A. B. was on the day of 18 duly proved by the said W. X. alone in the registry of Her Majesty's Court of Probate, the said Y. Z. having first duly renounced probate thereof. And whereas the said M. F. (being then M. B., spinster) in the year 18 intermarried with, and became and still is the wife of, the said E. F. And whereas the said N. H. (being then N. B., spinster) in the year 18, intermarried with and became, and still is the wife of, the said G. H. And whereas the sum of £ is now due and owing to the said C. D. for principal and interest in respect of the within-written indenture of mortgage (as the said E. F. and M. his wife, G. H. and N. his wife, J. K., and L. M. hereby severally admit). And whereas the said C. D. has lately applied to the said E. F. and M., his wife, G. H. and N., his wife, J. K., and L. M., for payment of the amount so due to him for principal and interest as aforesaid, and has intimated his intention, unless be the same paid to him, of instituting proceedings in the High Court of Chancery for the foreclosure of the equity of redemption to which the said E. F. and M., his wife, G. H. and N. his wife, J. K., and L. M. are entitled in respect of the within-mortgaged hereditaments. And whereas the said E. F. and M. his wife, G. H. and N. his wife, J. K., and L. M., being unable to comply with such request, and in order to avoid the expense of such proceedings, have agreed and determined to execute such release of their respective interests in the said hereditaments and premises under the hereinbefore in part recited will as is hereinafter contained. Now this indenture witnesseth that, in pursuance of such determination and agreement, and in consideration of the premises, they, the said E. F. and M. his wife, G. H. and N. his wife, J. K., and L. M. do, each of them doth, hereby remise, release, and quit claim unto the said C. D. and his heirs, all and every the parts, shares, and interest to which they the said E. F. and M. his wife, G. H. and N. his wife, J. K., and L. M., or any of them, are, is, or may be entitled under or by virtue of the said will of the said A. B., of and in the hereditaments and premises comprised in the within written indenture, and of and in the rents and profits thereof respectively. To the intent that the same may be henceforth held by the said C. D., and his heirs, to the use of the said C. D., his heirs and assigns, free from all actions, suits, proceedings, claims, and demands of the parties hereto of the first part, or any of them, in respect of the said hereditaments and premises, or any part thereof (a). In witness, &c.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

WINDING-UP—DISCHARGE OF SOLICITOR—COSTS UNPAID—LIEN.—Where an official liquidator is appointed by the court in a winding-up, the 58th rule of the General Order of the 11th Nov. 1862, which requires that the file of proceedings "shall be kept by him, or otherwise as the judge may, from time to time direct," must be considered part of his appointment, and a solicitor acting for him must be taken to know the extent of his powers over such file. And no official liquidator can by contract or otherwise give any lien upon documents which come within that rule. Where, therefore, a solicitor was discharged by the official liquidator, he was ordered to deliver up all the documents mentioned in the 58th rule, notwithstanding that there was due to him a considerable amount of costs incurred in the winding-up: (Re The Union Cement and Brick Company (Limited), 21 L. RAILWAY—EXHAUSTION OF CAPITAL.—MONEY ADVANCED ON BONDS.—A railway company having expended its capital and exhausted its borrowing powers and given bills of exchange on its tradesmen, issued bonds to a director and shareholder, who advanced money by means of which it was completed. A special Act was passed to wind-up the company and sell the railway to another company, and that arrangement having been carried out, and every liability discharged, except the bonds, they were held to be recoverable in equity, and the claim was allowed: (Re The Cork and Youghal Railway, 21 L. ROLLS COURT (IRELAND).

May 24 and June 5.

THE BELFAST AND COUNTY DOWN RAILWAY COMPANY v. THE BELFAST, HOLYWOOD, AND BANGOR RAILWAY COMPANY.

Railway company—Receiver—Allowances for outgoings out of income—Remuneration of directors.

By the 28 & 29 Vict. c. 198 (Loc. and P.), the Holywood branch of the Belfast and County Down Railway Company was transferred to the Belfast, Holywood, and Bangor Railway Company, in consideration of 50,000l. cash, and an annual rent of 5000l., which was by the Act declared to be a first and permanent charge on the Holywood branch, and upon the tolls, &c., thereof, and upon the property of the Belfast, Holywood, and Bangor Railway Company, next after the moneys borrowed or which might be borrowed by the Belfast, Holywood, and Bangor Railway Company on mortgage or bond under the Acts so authorising them. The rent of 5000l. having fallen in arrear, a cause petition was filed by the Belfast and County Down Railway Company to recover the arrears. The matter was referred to Master Fitzgibbon under the 15th section of the Chancery Regulation Act, and on the 8th Feb. 1867 he made an order declaring the rent a charge on the railway of the respondents, the Belfast, Holywood, and Bangor Railway Company, and appointing a receiver. The order made no express provision for paying the expenses of management of the undertaking, but it restrained the respondents from paying away or otherwise disposing of any part of the money arising from the undertaking, or the incomes or receipts therefrom coming to their hands, beyond and except the necessary outgoings for servants' wages and current working expenses.

The directors of the Belfast, Holywood, and Bangor Company, or their manager, Mr. Dodd, continued to manage the line and receive the income of it, paying outgoings, and handing over what represented the net balance to the receiver. The receiver filed a statement of facts, raising questions as to certain deductions made by Mr. Dodd. The master, by an order of the 12th Jan. 1869, disallowed the following payments: First, salaries or remuneration to the directors, the same not being necessary outgoings for servants' wages, or for current working expenses. Secondly, a sum of 622l. 2s. 10d. for improvements, alterations in, or additions to the permanent way or other works, or the rolling stock of the railway. The order also directed the respondents to account for and pay over to the receiver all sums paid or retained by them since the 20th Feb. 1867, for wire fencing, gasfitting, and gates, new storehouse, brick flooring at Holywood, alteration of Bangor station, and alteration of carriages. The respondents appealed from that order.

Palles, Q.C. and Dames, for the appeal.

Law, Q.C. and Andrews, for the petitioners.

The MASTER of the ROLLS reversed the Master's order as to the salaries of the directors, which he allowed credit for. As to the 622l. 2s. 10d., and the sums paid for wire-fencing, &c., His Honour, being of opinion that the expenditure was made by the respondents in bona fide exercise of their judgment in the management of the line, allowed them as proper charges against the income of the company; and reversed the Master's order, except as to a portion of the £221. 2s. 10d., which was the estimated value of materials already paid for out of the capital of the company, and which had been applied in completing alterations or renewals of the permanent way. As to that he left it open to the plaintiffs to investigate the claim further if they desired to do so.

THE ALBERT LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY.—A meeting of policy-holders convened by an order of the Vice-Chancellor, was held at the London Tavern on Friday week. Lord William Hay presided. The proceedings were of a very noisy character, and occasionally there was great uproar, a number of persons speaking at the same time, not one of whom could be heard. Out of a number of motions, submitted to the meeting, three were adopted. One was to the effect that the proposition of the provisional official liquidators be rejected, and in lieu thereof a committee of policy-holders be appointed to consider and determine, in conjunction with any provincial committees, the best mode of arranging the affairs of the company, and report the result to a meeting of policy-holders; the second, "That the conduct of the proceedings consequent on the insolvency of the company should be entrusted to gentlemen to be nominated by the policy-holders, and not to those appointed by the directors, who had forfeited the confidence of the policy-holders;" and the third, "That the committee should have power to test the liability of the shareholders in the twenty-two companies which had amalgamated with the Albert. The following gentlemen were appointed to form the committee: Mr. Bell, representing Indian interests; Mr. Bird, Mr. Cundy, General Cunningham, representing interests of upwards of 100,000l.; Mr. Edlin, Q.C.; Mr. Matthews, of Grindlay and Co.; Mr. Webster, of the Temple; Mr. Ommaney, and Mr. Wyld.

Mr. Thos. Cave, M.P., has addressed a letter to the papers in which he explains his connection with the Albert. As long ago as 1853 Mr. Cave became a shareholder of the Anchor, and subsequent local director. He and other shareholders were dissatisfied with the management, and called for an investigation. The result was that a new board of directors and a new chairman came into office, and these gentlemen declined to serve unless Mr. Cave would become managing director. He did become managing director, and succeeded, he says, after three years of most arduous and onerous labour, with the help of a small but loyal staff, and the most generous support of his colleagues on the board, in so far improving the condition of the company that its income had increased nearly threefold, while its gross expenses had fallen from 50 to 15 per cent. What followed is given in Mr. Cave's own words:—"In 1857 proposals were made by the Bank of London Insurance Company for the amalgamation with it of the Anchor Insurance Company. No commission, compensation, or other payment was made to any person whatever in respect of it, but I received an appointment for a term of years, the details of which were unanimously approved by a general meeting of the shareholders of each company. The considerable success I had achieved, and the great sacrifices I had made to ensure it, appeared to me to have fairly won a special engagement. I had not long entered upon my new and wider field of operation, which presented also larger prospective advantages, when it was thought desirable that a proposal for the purchase of the Bank of London Insurance Company by the Albert Company (and not its amalgamation) should be accepted. It was in connection with this arrangement, which involved a surrender of the appointment I had obtained as before stated, that I received the compensation in question, which included also my services towards the disposal of the fire department of the business, and my visiting Canada and Newfoundland in connection therewith. All these engagements I faithfully fulfilled. Thus closed, more than ten years ago, my association with the Albert Company. I had previously no connection with it or any of the companies with which it appears to have amalgamated, except as herein stated, nor have I had any since."

MARITIME LAW.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

BOTTOMRY—DAMAGED SHIP SOLD—UTTER LOSS—CONSTRUCTIVE TOTAL LOSS.—Money was borrowed on bottomry of a ship and freight. Afterwards the ship put into an intermediate port in a damaged state, and was then sold as unworthy of repairs. The condition of the bond was, that it should be void if the obligors should pay the sum lent, with interest, &c., "or in case of loss of the ship or vessel such an average as by custom shall have become due on the salvage, or if on the said voyage the said ship or vessel should be utterly lost, &c.," in consequence of perils of the seas. On a suit by the bondholders against the proceeds of the sale: Held (affirming the judgment of the Admiralty Court), that the bondholders were entitled to the whole proceeds of the sale; for, first, the ship was not "utterly lost," the doctrine of constructive total loss having no application to bottomry; secondly, there was no "loss" of the vessel within the meaning of the bond; and, thirdly, there was no special provision in the bond qualifying the general rule that the lender on bottomry is entitled to the whole of the property saved, if included in his security: Semble, that the clause "in case of the loss of the ship, such an average as shall have become due on the salvage" must be construed as intended to secure the payment to the bondholders of something which the ship-owners might become entitled to receive from third parties in respect of the ship, and not a division of what might be saved from a wreck, or the proceeds of a necessary sale of the ship, between the bondholders and the shipowners: (The Great Pacific, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 38. Priv. Co.)

DAMAGE—PASSENGER—COMPULSORY PILOT. A collision having occurred between two vessels in the Thames, the owners of the vessel in fault claimed exemption from liability for the damage on the ground that the vessel was in charge of a duly licensed and compulsory pilot at the time of the collision: Held (affirming the judgment of the court below) that the captain's wife and father, who were on board without the privity of the owners, and who had not agreed to pay any fares when they came on board, though such fares were paid after the collision, were not "passengers" within the meaning of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 379, so as to make the employment of a pilot compulsory. The owners of a ship, in charge of a pilot voluntarily taken on board, are responsible for his default whilst so acting, since 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, by sect. 388, requires that the pilot should be compulsorily employed within the district where the injury occurred in order to exempt the owners from liability. The case of Lucey v. Ingram, 6 M. & W. 302, does not conflict with that of the Stettin, Bro. & Lush. 199, the former case having been decided on 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, s. 55, and the latter on 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 388, and the provisions of the two sections being distinguishable. The meaning of particular words in a statute, in the absence of express definition, "is to be found not so much in a strict etymological propriety of language, nor even in popular use, as in the subject or occasion on which they are used." Per Abbott, C.J. in 1 B. & C. 136, approved: (The Steamship Lion v. The Vessel York Town, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 41. Priv. Co.)

COLLISION—LIGHTS—PROPER RATE OF SPEED FOR A STEAMER IN THE CHANNEL—LOOK-OUT.—A collision occurred at night in the English Channel between two foreign vessels, a steamship and a barque, by which the former was slightly, and the latter badly damaged. At the time the barque was carrying lights, but these were not seen on board the steamship till after the collision, because, being placed in the mizzen rigging, from their position and the peculiar form and rig of the barque, a vessel coming end on was unable to see them. In a cause of damage instituted by the owners of the barque against the owners of the steamship: Held (varying the judgment of the court below), that the damages, losses, and costs must be borne equally between the two vessels, for, first, the barque was in fault in carrying lights not so placed as to comply with the regulations; and, secondly, the steamship was in fault in going at an improper rate (eleven knots an hour) on a hazy night in a crowded channel; and, after the collision, in pursuing her course without affording or tendering any help to the barque. An inspection, under the provisions of sect. 18 of the Admiralty Court Act 1861, to ascertain whether the lights carried by a ship were such as the regulations require, ought to be made at night. There ought to be two look-outs at the bowsprit. A steamship proceeding at an improper rate in a channel crowded with ships incurs the responsibility of damage occasioned by her being unable to obey the direction that, on the risk of a collision, it is the duty of the steamship to keep out of the way of the sailing vessel. The first duty of any vessel that by collision injures another is to wait to ascertain the extent of that injury, and to tender what assistance it may be able to protect life and property: (The Germania, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 44. Priv. Co.)

ECCELESIASTICAL LAW.

If the Rev. Charles Voysey should be adjudged guilty of heresy in the trial to which he is to be subjected at the instance of the Archbishop of York, it will not be for want of such aid as can be given by rank and clerical influence. The committee which has been organised for his defence contains a list of names that clergymen would do well to study. Dean Stanley has boldly come forward to shield Mr. Voysey, and he is now joined by such divines as Professor Jowett; the Rev. G. Wheelwright, vicar of Crowhurst; the Rev. Thomas P. Kirkman, rector of Croft; and the Rev. J. D. La Touche, vicar of Stokesay. Scotland sends a clerical ally in the person of the Rev. Lewis Campbell, professor of Greek in the University of St. Andrews. Science is represented by the eminent name of Sir Charles Lyell; nobility by the names of Lord Amberley and Lord Adare. The list is certainly formidable. With Mr. Voysey's opinions we do not deal, and possibly they are not shared by all the members of his committee. In coming forward to furnish him with the means of defence, Dean Stanley and Sir Charles Lyell simply intimate that they wish to see the most complete and authoritative legal answer given to the momentous question: What limits does the Church of England impose upon her clergy when they claim to debate the rightful interpretation of Scripture?

THE NEW LAW ON THE RESIGNATION OF BISHOPS.—The resignation of the Bishop of Bath and Wells and the expected resignation of the bishop of Winchester, will put in force the statute passed on the 11th Aug. for the relief of archbishops and bishops when "incapacitated by infirmity." As to the resignation of a bishop the act provides that on a representation being made by the archbishop of the province to her Majesty, it shall be lawful for her Majesty, on being satisfied of such incapacity, and that the bishop has canonically resigned, by order in council, to declare such bishopric to be vacant, and thereupon such vacancy may be filled, as if such bishop was dead, with certain exceptions specified:—1. There shall be paid by the year, by half-yearly payments, one-third of the income, or 2000l. a year—either of the two sums as may be the greater, and in case of the retirement of a bishop appointed before 1832, the excess of the 2000l. to be paid by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. 2. Her Majesty may, on special grounds, by order in council, assign any episcopal residence enjoyed by him; and 3. With the exception of his election and consecration, the bishop is not to be required to pay the fees and charges usually payable on accession, until the death of the retiring bishop. The case of the Bishop of Bath and Wells will be the first under the new law.

CHURCH REFORMS.—In a speech to the clergy of the rural deanery of West Dartford, the Archbishop of Canterbury said: The Ritual Commission has been sitting long, and the changes which it thinks desirable have now been drawn up and are at present being circulated among the divinity professors of the universities and other dignitaries of the church. They may be summed up as follows: 1. A new Lectionary. Many chapters have been added, as suited to edification; some have been omitted. A greater elasticity has been given to the Lectionary. The principal changes are in the daily lessons. 2. Alterations in the ordinary daily service. Evidently, to men busily engaged the service as it stands at present does not commend itself. Even the City churches which have a daily service are but thinly attended. A shorter service, therefore, will be proposed—shorter, but strictly based upon the existing materials. 3. Every facility for dividing services and using different services at different times, according to the exigencies of different congregations. 4. In the Burial Service some solution of a difficulty commonly felt will be offered. These are the chief matters dealt with by the Ritual Commissions. Nothing revolutionary need be anticipated. The character of the Prayer Book will be preserved intact. Other matters imperatively demand attention. What a scandal, for instance, to take up a newspaper and find whole columns devoted to the advertisements of sale of livings, and to see the tone and language of some of the advertisements themselves! It may be difficult to deal with this, but an attempt will probably be made. The Bill which has lately passed with reference to the resignation of bishops is identical in its scope with a plan proposed in Convocation three years ago with reference to the other clergy. It is not unlikely that a similar measure will be proposed for this end. More efficient episcopal supervision is required, although Church.

men may not have made up their minds as to the best means of gaining it. The desirability or non-desirability of a service for children is a matter upon which the clergy will do well to form an opinion. The abolition of church-rates has led to one difficulty not anticipated. The payment of fees by churchwardens can now be more legally demanded than formerly. But the churchwardens themselves have no guarantee that they will be repaid. Might not this lead to parishioners refusing the office? Some information as to whether this had actually occurred was desirable.

BANKRUPTCY LAW.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY (IRELAND).

(Before MILLER, J.)

Re JOSEPH ANDREW HORNE.

Debts contracted in England—Application to have proceedings taken in Ireland refused with costs.

MILLER, J. delivered judgment in this case, which had been argued before him. He said: This case presents a peculiar feature of general importance, as affecting commercial classes in England and Ireland, namely, that while the debts of every cash creditor represented on the schedule of the bankrupt, as amounting altogether to 16,217l. 4s. 8d., had been contracted in England with creditors residing in England, excepting one debt of 100l. 6s. 8d., which, although having something of the appearance of an Irish debt, was for cash advanced by a gentleman not in any trade or business, upon the security of a bill, being one of such exclusively English debts, and which bill formed the larger portion of such apparently Irish debts thus contracted, yet it is sought to have all such debts thereby dealt with in Ireland, there not being, as I shall presently show, one shilling of assets of the bankrupt, even upon the representation of the bankrupt himself, available for administration in Ireland. If such a course can be effectuated under any code of bankruptcy law, commercial men can no longer look to this court for protection, but rather regard it as devised for screening debtors and enabling them to escape from a local and necessarily more proper investigation of their affairs and liabilities. The petition for adjudication was presented in this matter upon the 7th May 1869, by John Thomas Andrew, a creditor residing in England, against the bankrupt, grounded on an act of bankruptcy by reason of the non-appearance of the bankrupt to a trader-debtor summons by that petitioner for the nonpayment of a sum of 63l. 3s. 8d., on which the bankrupt was adjudicated as such bankrupt on the 11th May 1869. The affidavit of trading necessary to support that adjudication had been made by a gentleman named Costate, who stated that he had known the bankrupt to carry on the trade or business of a commission agent for the last two years, and for the last five months at No. 125, Upper Abbey-street, in the city of Dublin, and to seek his living by buying and selling building cement, bricks and soap. A schedule was necessarily filed, according to the practice of the court in that matter, on the 2nd July 1869, before the case could be brought on for final examination; and when this case came before the court for final examination on the 13th July 1869, an examination of the bankrupt was had on the part of some of the English creditors, who appeared to oppose the passing of the bankrupt's final examination, when the final examination was necessarily adjourned; and it was not until the 7th Aug. 1869, that a petition was presented on the part of an English creditor named Babb, seeking that the adjudication should be annulled, and the petition of bankruptcy dismissed. Allegations were made impeaching the judgment-debt of the petitioner in respect of which the petition had been presented; but it is enough for me to observe that I will not go behind the judgment upon which such petition is founded, and that, even if I could be induced to enter upon a consideration of the matters suggested by the affidavits in avoidance of that judgment, they would go far to impress upon me the necessity of the exercise of a local jurisdiction instead of a jurisdiction foreign to the place where such debts had been contracted. After the full discussion which the question of annulling the commission of bankruptcy under the Act of Parliament at present in force in Ireland, and as to the principle which should guide this court in such considerations has undergone in Dry's case, as reported in Ir. Jur. 7, before Judges Berwick and Lynch and the Court of Appeal, I do not propose to enter into any further review of them, but shall confine myself to the consideration of the two questions—first, whether a trading sufficient to maintain the present commission of bankruptcy had existed; secondly, if such a trading had been established, whether the petition as presented was a bond fide proceeding, and the adjudication founded on it such as this court under all the circumstances of the case sustained. His Lordship referred to the bankrupt's schedule, and said: The schedule of the bankrupt as thus filed is of little value beyond the fact of its being a representation under the hand of the bankrupt, which he should be prepared to verify if permitted by the court to do so, unless it is afterwards fully vouched before the official assignee. The duty is cast on the bankrupt of fully vouching the schedule as filed by him before he can claim at the hands of the court that his final examination shall be passed and his certificate granted. His Lordship having alluded to the report of the official assignee, stating that the bankrupt had no books to show, nor any means of vouching the statements he put forward in the schedule as to his alleged trading, continued: The assignee further reports that there were now no assets of any description to meet the bankrupt's liabilities of 16,267l. Shares to the nominal amount of 5650l. have been transferred, but the bankrupt represents them all transferred, or as valueless. I extended to the bankrupt a further opportunity of vouching his schedule before the official assignee, who made his second report upon the 22nd Aug., which is, if possible, still more unfavourable to the bankrupt as regards the question of trading, in which he refers to his former report, and set out a letter received from the agent of the bankrupt requiring him to report that the bankrupt was "a commission agent," instead of that "he described himself as a commission agent," also requiring him to report "that the bankrupt was a partner of Harper Twelvrees and Company," instead of that "he was to have a share on certain conditions," alleging that the books of the bankrupt show that at the commencement of the agency business he stood indebted to Harper Twelvrees in cash overdrawn on foot of accounts whilst with that firm; and the official assignee reports then that he sets no value upon the book which was produced to establish that the bankrupt was a commission agent, inasmuch as it was produced to vouch a series of transactions from the 1st May 1867, the gross profits upon which are represented to be 6l. 12s., and yet that the first entry in that book was upon the 1st Jan. 1869, and that he had followed the description which the bankrupt gave in his schedule of the nature of his trading—that in a book which had been produced there is an entry, "1869, Jan. 1st, by amount due to H. H. Twelvrees in respect of partnership account, 50l.," but that he had the statement of the bankrupt himself that no deed of partnership ever was executed between himself and the Messrs. Twelvrees, and that the condition, "the investment of capital by him, on which the partnership was to have been entered into, was not complied with." The officer further reports that he would not accept as vouchers the books that were produced if unsupported, as, according to his experience, they did not bear the traces and evidence of ordinary daily-kept trade books, and that there was an evident sameness about them that was strangely suggestive of the idea that they were written up, not as a record of a trading, but for a special purpose. After an inspection of the books thus referred to, I have only to express my opinion that the officer is fully warranted in finding that no sufficient evidence was produced before him to make him report either that the bankrupt was a commission agent, or that he was a partner of Harper Twelvrees and Company. There is one other representation on the face of the schedule of importance as regards the consideration of this alleged trading, namely, that there is not one good debt, nor one bad debt returned as arising out of the alleged trading, while there is one "doubtful" debt of 150l. returned. But that is described in the schedule, as the amount of bills included in the salary of the bankrupt from Horner, Marsh, and Company, but not met, and the bankrupt in his evidence stated that he had paid all that 150l. away to a private creditor of his own, and that, of course, if that bill was paid by Horner, Marsh, and Company, his debts would be so much less. Upon the facts before me I have no difficulty in declaring that the bankrupt has not carried on any such trading as would properly support the commission, and that the commission cannot be permitted to proceed. I might end with that declaration, but in order that the Court of Appeal might perceive that I have dealt with the whole question, I will express my opinion on the second point, namely, whether this commission has been issued for purposes connected with the legitimate objects of a commission. The petition for annulling this commission was filed so far back as the 7th Aug. 1869, and it contains the specific charge that the proceedings in this matter have been instituted fraudulently and in collusion with the bankrupt, and for his benefit alone, and not for the purpose of distributing any estate amongst the bankrupt's creditors generally, or for any purpose useful or beneficial to them. Although I have had four affidavits to oppose the petition, there is no denial of the charge, which must be taken, after such an interval, to stand confessed. It has been suggested as a reason for the presentation of the petition of bankruptcy in Ireland that there would have been a difficulty in proving a residence for six months in England such as would sustain a commission in England. It is sufficient for me to say that any difficulty in the way of having a commission against the bankrupt in England would furnish an argument for having a commission issued against him in Ireland, unless there are the proper materials for having him declared a bankrupt in Ireland, and I have nothing before me beyond a suggestion that any difficulty would exist in ascribing the residence of the bankrupt more readily to England than to any other place. Without further prolonging the examination of the case, I will state that I have as little difficulty in declaring that upon the second ground, as upon the first, that this commission cannot be permitted to stand. The question of costs to be referred to the registrar.

Seeds, instructed by Oldham and Eaton, appeared in support of the petition to annul the bankruptcy.

M'Govern was solicitor for the assignee, and Forsyth appeared for the bankrupt.

STUDY OF THE LAW.—May I ask Mr. Halliday through your columns, a question that may be useful information to many of your readers? In his Articled Clerks' Handbook, Sect. 2 of the 2nd edit. he commences, "We will now suppose that the candidate has passed his preliminary examination, and has become 'an articled clerk,' and wishes to prepare for his intermediate examination." He then states the books, &c., and in chapter 2 recommends his reader "How to Study." In this chapter he urges the student to read one branch of the law at a time, and advises certain books—indeed, goes through a course of study. Now, what I would ask Mr. Halliday is this: Seeing that the intermediate examination is after half the five years' articles has expired, does he expect the student to go through the course of study there set down in two years and a half? If not, how can the student follow out his suggestion to "master not only one book, but one branch of the law before he commences another?" There are books to get up in equity, common law, and conveyancing for the intermediate examination, so that three branches of the law must be studied in two years and a half; and if the whole of the time is taken for study, one branch cannot be mastered before another. THE FUNCTIONS OF MAGISTRATES.—Will any of your readers inform me if the chairman of magistrates sitting in petty sessions can alone conduct the examination of the witnesses for the prosecution, and put direct leading questions to them? TEMPLAR.

ADVERTISING SOLICITORS.—I think it right to send you the annexed advertisement which I have cut from the Daily Telegraph. Surely something might be done, either by the Profession or by the legal press, to put a stop to this system of advertising, which must necessarily lower the status of the Profession, and which is now daily increasing. I think if all respectable solicitors would decline holding any communication with those who stoop to advertising, it would go a good way towards stopping the practice. ALFRED WALLETT DEACON.

ARTICLED CLERKS.—I should be glad if some correspondent would inform me whether, prior to the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 127, an articled clerk was permitted to hold any office in addition to his clerkship? I think less stringency in this particular was then exacted than now; it is within my knowledge that a gentleman admitted in 1845 while under articles was secretary to two public companies, the duties of one of which necessitated his keeping an assistant for their performance. There cannot, however, be any doubt that the additional occupation materially interfered with the articled clerk's professional employment. LEL.

88. NOTICE OF APPEAL.—ALEHOUSE LICENCE.—Will some of your readers kindly answer the following question:—Does sect. 1 of 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45 repeal the 9 Geo. 4, c. 61, as to the time for giving notice of appeal so that fourteen clear days' notice of appeal before the quarter sessions will do, and, if so, when must the recognisances to prosecute the appeal be entered into?

89. SURGEON ACCOCHEUR.—C. D., the wife of A. B., according to the usual custom in such cases, engaged E. F., a surgeon accocheur, to attend her in her accouchment, at the same time telling him that she expected the child would be born in about a month. The child was accordingly born about the time expected, but before there was time to send for the surgeon; and, in fact, his aid was entirely dispensed with, and he was not again communicated with. A week or two after the birth of the child, E. F. called at the house of A. B. and demanded his fee, when he was told, as the accouchment took place without his assistance, he was not entitled to any fee, and A. B. objected to pay the same, and he is advised he is not liable to pay it, as, although E. F. was retained to attend the accouchment, he did not attend, and was not required, nor did he render any assistance. E. F. contends he is entitled to his fee, as it is the custom of his profession to receive the fee although not called in, his having been retained being sufficient to entitle him to such fee. Required to know if E. F. can, in the case put, legally demand his fee; and whether A. B. can successfully resist the payment thereof?

90. SEIZURE OF GOODS.—PAYMENT OF DEBT AND COSTS.—Upon settlement of an action by payment of debt and costs, is a bailiff bound to return goods seized and removed under a fi. fa. to the place they were taken from, or merely hold them in readiness to deliver up to defendant upon his applying for them?

Answers.

(Q. 78.) ARTICLED CLERKS.—The reference to Ex parte Walter Peppercorn, 14 L. T. Rep. N. S. 252, for which I am obliged, does not seem exactly to be a case in point, inasmuch as Walter Peppercorn, nearly twelve months after execution of his articles, undertook the duties of a distinct and separate office—that of steward of a manor—whether the duties of that office were merely nominal or not, he undertook them, and discharged them, and in this particular failed to comply with sect. 19 of 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127, which enacts that "no person . . . shall during . . . articles hold any office, or engage in any employment whatsoever other than the employment of clerk to such attorney or solicitor." Now the question put by the present writer, and the circumstances of the case, are very different in material particulars, for here there is an express covenant in the articles that the clerk "shall at all times when required to do so act as a shorthand writer, and transcribe the notes so taken by him," while on the other hand there is the usual covenant of the solicitor to "teach and instruct or cause" the clerk "to be taught and instructed in the profession of attorney and solicitor." Now the question is whether such a covenant on the part of the clerk is calculated to endanger or vitiate the articles. Further replies and references will very much oblige. The writer has to thank "W. P." and "I. H. C." for their courteous answers.

(Q. 81.) ATTORNEY—CHANGE OF NAME.—In reply to the query of "Attorney," I beg to refer him to the following cases, viz., Ex parte Moss, 15 Jur. 153; 19 L. J. 385, Q. B.; Re Dearden, 20 L. J. 80, Ex.; 5 Ex. 740; and Ex parte Renthall, 6 M. & G. 722; 7 Scott, 407; 1 D. & L. 747. It seems that on an attorney changing his name, the court, on being satisfied that the application is bona fide, will allow an entry of such change to be made on the roll of attorneys. And where an attorney changed his name by Royal licence, the court allowed the roll to be amended by substituting the new name for the old. The application must be made by motion to the court by counsel; and the affidavit in support of the motion, in addition to stating the circumstances, and the desire to have the name altered on the roll, must show very clearly that the applicant is not apprehensive of any proceedings being instituted against him under the name which he bears on the roll, and that the application is perfectly bona fide.

Liverpool, Sept. 11, 1869.

(Q. 82.) CALL TO THE BAR AS ATTORNEY.—The existing rules of the Inns of Court preclude gentlemen who have been on the roll of attorneys from being called to the Bar until the lapse of two years from the period of their names being erased from the roll; and by rule of all the four Inns of Court, no attorney or solicitor or articulated clerk can now be admitted a member; and as it is provided by the same authority that, in order to be called to the Bar, or to practise as a special pleader or conveyancer under the Bar, it is necessary to have kept twelve terms common in one of the four Inns of Court, it follows that for this purpose at least three years' retirement from practice are required in the case of an attorney or solicitor. Any attorney seeking to be called to the Bar may have his name formally removed from the roll by application to the court, on satisfying the court that his application is made bona fide, and not for the sinister purpose of obtaining an immunity from the summary jurisdiction of the court. The application must be made by counsel on the affidavit of the attorney himself, stating the time when he was admitted an attorney or solicitor, and that he is desirous of being struck off the roll of the court to which the application is made, and that there is no complaint pending against him in his official capacity, and that he does not apprehend any. It is usual for the affidavit to state the particular object of the applicant in having his name taken off the rolls. The application should be made to all the courts in which an attorney is admitted; but it is usual, if the applicant is an attorney of the Court of Queen's Bench, to make the application first in the Bail Court. If the affidavit is in due form a rule is granted as of course, which must forthwith and before being acted upon be produced to the registrar of attorneys, pursuant to the statute 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127, s. 24, and the registrar will enter a minute of such rule on the roll kept by him, and will strike the name of the attorney or solicitor off such roll, and mark the rule as having been entered. And on production of the rule and an affidavit of identity a similar rule or order may be obtained in all the other courts, as of course: (See Pulling's Law of Attorneys, 3rd edit. chaps. ix. & xi., and cases there cited.)

(Q. 83.) THE COUNTY COURTS ACT 1867, s. 2.—REGISTRARS' AND HIGH BAILIFFS' DUTIES.—First, It seems to me that it is the duty of the high bailiff, on service of a summons under sect. 2, to wait until required by the plaintiff to furnish an affidavit of such service. It is provided by this section that the registrar shall, immediately after the last day for giving notice of intention to defend, send a letter to the plaintiff by post, stating therein whether the defendant has or has not given notice of his intention to defend. If the defendant has given such notice, the affidavit is not required; for the usual mode of proving the service of summonses is to swear the bailiffs generally to the service of all summonses before the court, according to the respective indorsements, and then the indorsement speaks for itself, or the bailiff refreshes his memory thereby, and proves the service, where the defendant does not appear at the hearing: (See rule 26 under the Act.) And where the defendant has not given notice of intention to defend, it is optional with the plaintiff whether he will cause judgment to be entered up or not, and the affidavit may not be required. Where the defendant pays the debt, as not unfrequently happens, the affidavit would of course be of no use whatever. This is a very different question from that as to the duty of the bailiff with respect to an affidavit in case of the service of a summons in a foreign district. There the affidavit is required to be transmitted by the bailiff within a limited time. Secondly, I think an affidavit of service by the bailiff of a foreign court is sufficient proof of service for all the purposes of the cause, where an affidavit is necessary, if it states the service to have been in the particular mode, and within the limits provided for such purposes by the County Courts Acts; but not where the statutes do not authorise the use of an affidavit. Sect. 2 requires that the summons for obtaining judgment by default shall be "personally served," and judgment by default may accordingly be entered up upon an affidavit of personal service, but not otherwise.

(Q. 84.) THE BANKRUPTCY ACT 1849, s. 184.—With reference to the question of "An Old Subscriber," it seems to me that if the bill of sale was given bona fide and for valuable consideration, and not in contemplation of bankruptcy, or with intent to defeat or delay creditors, B's assignee is not entitled under the 184th section of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act 1849, to recover the goods or their value. I assume that the bill of sale in question was by way of mortgage, and that it was duly registered under the Bills of Sale Act. If so, it comes within the very words of the exception as to mortgages and liens contained in the above-mentioned section. If this were not so, no bill of sale could ever be made an available security against the assignees in case of the bankruptcy of the assignor. In Murray v. Arnold, 32 L. J., N. S., 11, Q. B.; 3 Best & S. 287, the defendant, in an action on a bill of exchange, obtained an order for a commission to examine witnesses abroad, and it was made a condition that he should pay 100*l.* into court, which he did; and subsequently a petition for adjudication of bankruptcy was filed against him. The plaintiff went on with the action, and recovered a verdict for more than 100*l.* And it was held by Cockburn, C. J. and Wightman, J. (dubitantibus, Blackburn, and Mellor, J.J.), that the plaintiff was entitled to have the 100*l.* paid to him, for that he was not a creditor holding security for his debt within the 184th section; and, by Blackburn, J. and Mellor, J., that he had a lien upon the 100*l.* within the meaning of the section, and that he was entitled to get the whole of it. There can be no question that the holder of a bill of sale by way of mortgage is a creditor holding security for his debt within the meaning of the section referred to.

(Q. 85.) THE WINE AND BEERHOUSE ACT, 1869.—In reply to "A Subscriber," I beg to say that in my opinion the certificate in question can legally be granted at the adjourned annual licensing meeting, and for the following reasons: By the 5th section of the Wine and Beerhouse Act 1869, it is enacted that certificates under that Act shall be granted by the justices assembled at the general annual licensing meeting held in pursuance of 9 Geo. 4, c. 61, or at some adjournment of such meeting held in pursuance of such last-mentioned Act; and by the 1st sect. of 9 Geo. 4, c. 61, the justices are empowered to grant licences, for the purposes therein mentioned, at the general annual licensing meeting, or at any adjournment thereof, which adjournment is expressly provided for by the 3rd section of that Act. This being so, and as the Act of 1869 does not prescribe a different time for the making of the application, from the time mentioned for granting the certificate, it must be taken that the application may be made at an adjourned general licensing meeting. And it will be observed that the 7th section of the new Act does not require that twenty-one days' notice shall be given before the general annual licensing meeting. The requirement merely is, that notice in writing shall be given by the intended applicant to the overseer and constable or peace officer twenty-one days at least "before he applies;" and, in the case of a house or shop not before licensed, that a like notice shall be affixed and maintained on the door of the house and shop, and on the door of the church or chapel between ten o'clock a.m., and five o'clock p.m., on two consecutive Sundays within twenty-eight days "before such application." The concluding clause of the 7th section of the new Act runs thus:—"Where application is made to the justices for the grant of a certificate under this Act by way of renewal only, notice in pursuance of this section shall not be requisite." It might seem from this, on a hasty perusal of the Act, that, in the case of a house or shop having a licence at the time of the passing of the Act, the twenty-one days' notice is not required. In truth, however, as there were no certificates previously, the first applications under the Act will not be by renewal, and the clause referred to only applies to the renewal of the certificates which the justices are, by the Act empowered to grant.

(Q. 86.) TEN YEARS' CLERKS.—If your correspondent "A. B." will refer to the statute 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127, s. 4, he will find that one of the conditions of the admission of a ten years' clerk as an attorney, solicitor, or proctor, is that he "has been examined" in manner directed by 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, and by that Act. The judges are empowered by sect. 8 of 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127, to make regulations in the case of persons preparing to become articulated clerks, and not being graduates of the universities, or having passed a university examination, that they shall, before being articulated, be examined in such branches of general knowledge as the judges may order. And no articles of clerkship can be valid without a certificate from the examiners of such preliminary examination having been successfully passed, unless the judges, or any one or more of them, when under special circumstances they or he see fit so to do, dispense with compliance with such regulations entirely or partially, or subject to any such conditions as to them or him may seem fit. If "A. B." intends to apply to a judge to dispense with the preliminary examination in his case, he will have to show a good and special reason why his application should be granted. By the regulations it is directed that the preliminary examination shall consist of two parts, viz.: Part I. (1) Reading aloud a passage from some English author; (2) Writing from dictation; (3) English grammar; (4) Writing a short English composition; (5) Arithmetic—a competent knowledge of the first four rules, simple and compound; (6) Geography of Europe and of the British Isles; (7) History—Questions on English History; (8) Latin—Elementary knowledge of Latin. Part II. Each candidate shall offer himself for examination in one of the following subjects: (1) Latin; (2) Greek, ancient or modern; (3) French; (4) German; (5) Spanish; (6) Italian. Information may be obtained of the Incorporated Law Society of the United Kingdom, Chancery-lane, London, as to the works selected by the examiners in each language.

LAW LIBRARY.

Nationality; or the Law relating to Subjects and Aliens considered with a view to future Legislation. By the Right Hon. Sir A. COCKBURN, Lord Chief Justice of England. London: Ridgway.

How nationality shall be acquired, how it shall be put off, and to what disabilities aliens shall be subjected, are questions that after a long slumber have been forced into prominence by the changes wrought in society by the railroad and the steamship, which have practically drawn into near neighbourhood nations formerly far apart, and thus brought about an interchange of inhabitants as remarkable as the increased exchange of their industries. The growing flood of emigration from the over-peopled territories of the old world to the boundless and almost unpeopled regions of the new world has of itself sufficed to raise a host of difficult questions not anticipated when international rights were first reduced to the form of law, and thus the question has been forced upon all the countries between whom this kind of intercommunication has been established, how far the existing rules of nationality are adapted to the new circumstances, and what changes should be made in them to facilitate the common object, without making an easy path for mischiefs more formidable than the inconveniences it is designed to remove.

A Royal Commission, appointed in May 1868, to inquire into and report upon the laws of naturalisation and allegiance, has suggested a series of amendments in that law, and it is to a commentary upon these suggestions that the Lord Chief Justice has devoted this volume. Assisted by the information collected in the appendix to the report of the commissioners as to the law of naturalisation in the various nations of Europe and America, Sir A. Cockburn has set forth in detail his reasons for dissenting from some portions of the changes recommended, prefaced by a singularly clear and complete resumé of the existing law in this and in other countries.

For this is a matter in which one country cannot well be a law to itself. Its own code affects directly all other countries with which it is in friendly intercourse. It would be well, indeed, if instead of attempting separate legislation, a mixed commission could be appointed to frame a code of naturalisation law that should be adopted by all the parties. Perhaps this volume may help to bring about such an arrangement; for, proceeding from so high an authority, and manifestly conceived in so liberal a spirit, there would be no difficulty in finding a common basis of principle upon which to build. But however the necessary work of change is accomplished, this essay must greatly assist its execution.

Sir A. Cockburn divides his discourse into eight chapters, each dealing with a distinct subject, and showing what is the law upon it in Great Britain, the United States, the Continental Nations, and the South American States. The first chapter treats of Nationality; the second of Naturalisation; the third of Expatriation; the fourth of Disputes arising from conflicting Claims; the fifth of Aliens; and the sixth and seventh are devoted to suggestions for the amendment of the law.

"Nationality," he says, "or, in other words, the status of an individual as subject or citizen in relation to a particular subject or State, is either natural or acquired; natural when it results from birth; acquired when an individual is accepted as subject or citizen by a State to which he did not originally belong."

And here the first difference presents itself: what shall constitute nationality of origin? Shall it be the place of birth, or the nationality of parents? In other words, is every man born in England to be deemed an Englishman, whatever the nationality of his parents, or shall the child follow that nationality, so that the son of a Frenchman born in England shall be in contemplation of law a Frenchman and not an Englishman?

On this most important point there is no community of practice even in European countries. By the law of England, the status depends on the place of birth; and yet the descendants of a natural born subject for two generations, born out of the dominions of the Crown, are, to all intents and purposes, subjects. But in France, although the rule is that to be a Frenchman a man must be born of French parents, an exception is made in favour of the child of a foreigner, if born in France, subject only to the condition of the French nationality being claimed within a prescribed period. Sir A. Cockburn thus describes

THE LAW OF GREAT BRITAIN WITH RESPECT TO NATIONALITY.

By the common law of England, every person born within the dominions of the Crown, no matter whether of English or of foreign parents, and, in the latter case, whether the parents were settled, or merely temporarily sojourning, in the country, was an English subject; save only the children of foreign ambassadors (who were excepted because their fathers carried their own nationality with them), or a child born to a foreigner during the hostile occupation of any part of the territories of England. No effect appears to have been given to descent as a source of nationality.

This rule, when originally established, was not unsuited to the isolated position of this island, and the absence of intercourse with foreign nations in Saxon times. No children of English parents being born abroad, or children of foreign parents being born within the realm, the simple rule that to be born within the dominions of the Crown constituted an Englishman answered every purpose. But when the foreign possessions of our kings and the increase of commerce had led to greater intercourse with the Continent, and children of English parents were sometimes born abroad, the inconvenience of the rule which made the place of birth the sole criterion of nationality soon became felt.

It appears from the Parliamentary Rolls of the reign of Edward III., that as early as the 17th of that king (1343), doubts having arisen whether even the king's sons born without the realm could inherit, the Archbishop of Canterbury brought the question before the Lords. The Lords replied unanimously that there was no doubt that the king's sons could inherit, wherever born, but that with regard to children of other persons there were great difficulties in deciding the question. The matter was again brought before the Lords and Commons jointly, who concurred in the opinion previously given by the Lords, and recommended that a law should be passed on the subject; but, as Parliament was about to be prorogued, et cetera besoygne demand grant avisement et bone deliberation coment ele se purra mieulx faire, et plus surement, the further consideration of it was deferred.

Owing to the plague, legislation on this and other subjects was not resumed till the year 1350, when the Act 25 Edw. 3 stat. 2 was passed, entitled "A statute for those that be born beyond sea." By this statute it is provided "that all children inheritors which from henceforth shall be born without the legiance of the king, whose fathers and mothers at the time of the birth be and shall be at the faith and legiance of the King of England, shall have and enjoy the same benefits and advantages, to have and bear the inheritance within the same legiance, as other inheritors aforesaid in time to come; so always the mothers of such children do pass the sea by the licence and wills of their husbands."

It has been said that this statute was only declaratory of the common law. But this view is hardly consistent with its language, which is prospective, and refers only to children which "from henceforth shall be born;" and it has been pertinently observed that if the statute had only been declaratory of the common law, the subsequent legislation on this subject would have been wholly unnecessary.

The Act of the 25 Edw. 3, as hereinbefore set forth, refers, as has been seen, to children inheritors.

The statute of the 7 Anne, c. 5, the principal purpose of which, however, was to naturalise all Protestants within the realm, contained a more general enactment. By sect. 3 of this statute, "the children of all natural-born subjects, born out of the legiance of Her Majesty, her heirs and successors, shall be deemed adjudged and taken to be natural-born subjects of this kingdom to all intents, constructions, and purposes whatsoever."

The Act of the 4 Geo. 2, c. 21, purporting to explain the foregoing clause, enacts that "all children born out of the legiance of the Crown of England, or which shall hereafter be born out of such legiance, whose fathers were, or shall be, natural-born subjects of the Crown of England, or of Great Britain, at the time of the birth of such children respectively, shall and may, by virtue of the said recited clause in the said Act of the seventh year of the reign of Her said late Majesty and of this present Act, be adjudged and taken to be, and all such children are hereby declared to be natural-born subjects of the Crown of Great Britain, to all intents, constructions and purposes whatsoever."

A later statute, that of the 13 Geo. 3, c. 21, went still further, and enacted that all persons whose fathers were by the Act of Geo. 2 entitled to the rights of natural-born subjects, should be adjudged natural-born subjects also; thus extending the provisions of the Act of Geo. 2 to the grandchildren of natural-born subjects.

An exception is made by the 4 Geo. 2, c. 21, in the case of those whose fathers, at the time of the birth of such children respectively, were or shall be attainted of high treason by judgment, outlawry, or otherwise, or were or shall be liable to the penalties of high treason or felony in case of their return without the royal licence to the United Kingdom, or whose fathers, at the time of the birth of such children respectively, were or shall be in the actual service of any prince or state at enmity with the British Crown.

Such remains the law to the present time. All persons born within the dominions of the Crown (with the very limited exception before stated), whether of British or foreign parents, and all persons being the children or grandchildren of British parents, though born within the dominions of a foreign state, and to all intents and purposes British subjects, and owe allegiance to, and are entitled to protection from, the Sovereign of these realms.

It was at one time thought that children born abroad, of an English woman married to an alien, were entitled to the benefit of the statute of the 25 Edw. 3, and were to be considered as British subjects. This doctrine is, however, now exploded, the Court of Queen's Bench having decided, in the case of Duroure v. Jones, that the son of an alien father, born of an English mother, out of the king's dominions, could not inherit an estate in this country in right of his mother. But, now, by the statute of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 66, s. 3, such children, though not made British subjects, are declared capable of taking real or personal estate by devise, purchase, inheritance or succession.

To this should be added, to complete this sketch of the law of England on this subject, that, contrary to the law of all other nations, except those which have followed the English law, marriage, by the common law, had no effect on the nationality of women. An English woman marrying an alien still remained a British subject; an alien woman marrying a British subject, remained none the less an alien; until the latter anomaly was cured by the Act of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 66, the 16th section of which provides that "any woman married, or who shall be married to a natural-born subject or person naturalised, shall be deemed and taken to be herself naturalised, and have all the rights and privileges of a natural-born subject."

Reports of Election Petitions. Part I. By Messrs. O'MALLEY and HARDCASTLE. Stevens and Haynes.

These reports follow the plan adopted by Messrs. Power, Rodwell and Dew, and their successors, Messrs. Wolferstan and Bristowe. This, we think, was an elementary error. The decisions of Parliamentary committees were not legal decisions, and there was some excuse for dealing with them in an exceptional manner. But the decisions of the judges in election petitions should be reported as law reports, and, the jurisdiction being entirely new, it would have been of great advantage had it been possible to give at length the judgments containing reviews of facts as well as construction of statutes. This is the course which has been pursued by the reporter who has furnished the decisions to our own reports, and we know for a fact that the plan has been generally approved. We have no desire to institute comparisons. Messrs. O'Malley and Hardcastle have perhaps done all that they could do in a separate publication, and they have certainly done the work well.

The chief peculiarity of these as of the old reports, is an entire absence of head-note. This omission we are at a loss to understand. A full index doubtless supplies the deficiency to a great extent, but there is no reason why the deficiency should exist at all. In every case there is ample material for a head note, and the want of it is in no way compensated by the marginal notes which are bare and merely indicative. One complaint against the old reports was that their statements of the evidence adduced were meagre and indeed useless. This complaint cannot be preferred against the reports of Messrs. O'Malley and Hardcastle. The judges have taken the trouble to detail the evidence and to comment upon it as they went along; and it was therefore very easy to state the evidence upon which each decision was given. This has been done carefully in the publication before us, and the reports are therefore perfectly intelligible. The arguments of counsel are not given at all, or with the utmost brevity. This is to be regretted, because many most instructive discussions took place between judge and counsel on points hitherto wholly unsettled. But, as we have said, the work must have exceeded allowable limits if all had been done that might have been done; and we accept it as it is, a most useful collection of decisions concisely stated and cleverly arranged. The form and type are those of the Law Reports.

LEGAL OBITUARY.

LORD JUSTICE SELWYN.

The following obituary notice, which has been furnished to us, although somewhat late, possesses features of fresh interest:—

The late Right Hon. Sir Charles Jasper Selwyn, one of the Lords Justices of Appeal in Chancery, whose death occurred at his residence, Pagoda-house, Richmond, Surrey, on the 10th ult., was the youngest son of the late Mr. William Selwyn, Q. C. (who died in 1855), by Letitia Frances, daughter of the late Thomas Kynaston, Esq., of Witham, Essex, and brother of the Bishop of Lichfield and of Canon Selwyn. He was born at Richmond in Oct. 1813, and was therefore at the time of his decease in the fifty-sixth year of his age; he was educated at Eton, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he was successively Scholar and Fellow, and where he graduated B.A. in 1836, and proceeded M.A. in 1839; and although, owing to a domestic affliction, he was prevented from aiming at "honours," he nevertheless displayed considerable classical genius, and thrice carried off the College prizes given every year for the best composition in Latin verse. In 1840 he was called to the Bar at Lincoln's-inn, and at once entered into practice at the equity bar, and in 1855, the office of commissary to the University being vacant, Mr. Selwyn was appointed to the post by Lord Lyndhurst, in obedience to the expressed wish of the late Prince Consort that a member of the University should be chosen. In the following year he received a silk gown, and was made a Bencher of his Inn. He entered Parliament in April 1859, when, in conjunction with the Right Hon. S. H. Walpole, he was returned as M.P. for Cambridge University; he sat for that distinguished constituency until 1868, when, having held for a few months the post of Solicitor-General, he was appointed by the Right Hon. Mr. Disraeli to a vacant Lord Justice of Appeal, and was sworn a member of the Privy Council.

An amusing incident with respect to Mr. Selwyn's election for Cambridge University has been mentioned in the Globe, which we take the liberty of quoting:—"Mr. Walpole had been member for some time previously, having for his colleague Mr. Loftus Wigram, but on the dissolution of Parliament in April 1859, in consequence of the defeat of Lord Derby's Administration on the question of reform, Mr. Wigram determined to resign on account of indifferent health. Two candidates immediately offered themselves for election, Messrs. C. J. Selwyn and A. J. Beresford Hope, but it was understood that neither of them wished to displace Mr. Walpole, the old member. With that gentlemanly modest feeling which some years later prompted him to give place to the present Lord Chancellor as Senior Lord Justice of Appeal, Mr. Selwyn then publicly declared, through his brother, Professor Selwyn, of St. John's College, that he should decline to come forward at all if by so doing he would in any way jeopardise Mr. Walpole's return. But it was patent to the members of the Senate that the senior member's seat was perfectly safe, and all interest centered in the contest for the other seat between Selwyn and Hope. The latter was much opposed by those country clergymen who were averse to the High Church principles which he professed, and as a rule the solicitors and barristers of the University were for Selwyn. In his address he declared himself a sincere member of the Church of England, and stated that he came forward as a Conservative, especially prepared to maintain the principle upon which the University itself is founded; that education, to be effective for good, must be based upon Holy Scripture. The contest was carried on with great spirit until a few days before the day fixed for election, when, in order to save the absent Masters of Arts the trouble of coming to Cambridge to vote, it was agreed on both sides to submit the canvass-books to Mr. Walpole, for him to act as arbiter between them. A very clever letter, purporting to be written by Mr. Walpole as the result of his scrutiny, was penned at the time by an anonymous writer, and will serve to show the result of his investigation. It ran as follows:

Dear Beresford.—I think that your election is without hope; it will be a regular self—you cannot possibly win; you are sure to go to the wall if you go to the poll.—Yours truly,
S. H. WALPOLE.

Mr. Selwyn was now M.P. for the University and a distinguished member of the Chancery Bar.

During his career as a barrister, Mr. Selwyn practised chiefly before the Master of the Rolls, and is said to have amassed a very large fortune by his fees. As a counsel he was never considered a peculiarly brilliant man, but he got up his cases with singular accuracy, and was invariably listened to with great attention by the court he addressed. He first spoke in the House of Commons in Aug. 1859, on the Ecclesiastical Commission Bill, when he made a lengthy and powerful speech on a question of privilege, which arose upon a matter connected with the Pontefract election inquiry. In the same month he moved a resolution in the House, whereby the committee on the Stamp Duties Bill was enabled to introduce a clause extending probate duty to property exceeding one million in value; and, a few months later, he was the means of rejecting Mr. Dillwyn's Endowed Schools Bill, by successfully moving "that it be read that day six months." His best speech, perhaps, was on the motion for the second reading of the Ecclesiastical Commission Bill in 1860, which had for its real object the vesting in the Ecclesiastical Commissioners all the real estates both of the bishops and cathedral chapters, and to convert them into mere stipendiaries of the commission. On this occasion Mr. Selwyn spoke for a long time with great earnestness against the Bill, and moved an amendment to it, but it was subsequently withdrawn after a three nights' debate. In 1861 he was instrumental in dividing the House by an amendment to the Trustees of Charities Bill. One of his last speeches in Parliament, before being made Lord Justice of Appeal, was on the Reform Bill, when he advocated that the lodger franchise should be extended to University lodgers in the town of Cambridge.

The deceased judge was a staunch Conservative and a sound churchman. When in Parliament he was remarkable for the polished elocution of his speeches, and his firm but conciliatory tone to those opposed to him in politics. He, therefore, naturally commanded respect on all sides, and enjoyed in a high degree the confidence and friendship of his own party. No one, says the Times, was, as counsel, more sympathetic, and no judge has ever shown himself more considerate or more patient. His name was identified with generations of legal celebrities, and the noble modesty with which he insisted on precedence over himself being conceded to the present Lord Chancellor when the latter was tardily advanced from the Vice-Chancellorship to the Lord Justiceship will deservedly be long cited in proof that emulation at the Bar is not synonymous with covetousness of place and dignity. Some natural apprehension was felt at his original appointment to the Court of Appeal, which appeared to imply a carelessness in party leaders of any but party claims to judicial office; but it must in fairness be admitted that, whatever the sometimes rather hypercritical judgment of the Bar, the other branch of the Profession, which scrutinises conclusions rather than the reasons for them, has exhibited no discontent at what was in itself something of an experiment. As a private gentleman, Sir Charles Selwyn was particularly sincere and genial, and none knew this fact better than the various Chancery barristers of every gradation whom he was constantly pleased to entertain; the pleasant summer parties which he was in the habit of giving at his country residence at Richmond, being looked forward to by his friends with the liveliest expectation, and when over remembered with intense delight.

The late judge came of a family in whom talent and ability are hereditary—the Selwyns formerly of Matson, in Gloucestershire. George Augustus Selwyn, in the early part of the last century, represented Gloucester in Parliament, and afterwards the since disfranchised borough of Ludgershall, one half of which place is said to have been his own property. He held many lucrative posts under Government, from which he appears to have amassed a large fortune. This man was endowed with such a ready wit that nearly all the current bon-mots of the day were attributed to him. The comic effect of his repartees is said to have been considerably heightened by his drowsy appearance when delivering them. In Parliament he generally appeared to be half asleep, and frequently attracted notice during a dull debate by snoring in unison with Lord North. During the early part of his life he is said to have been exceedingly dissipated, and at one time a gambler; but towards the close of his career, disease compelled him to abandon his profligate habits, and he died devout and repentant, after having attained the age of seventy years.

It will be remembered by our readers that the late Mr. William Selwyn, the father of the eminent judge so recently deceased, was selected on the arrival of the late Prince Consort in England, to act as his Royal Highness's tutor, and to read with him a course of legal studies, in order to enable him the more thoroughly to understand the intricate and puzzling relations of the several parts of that piece of mechanism which we call the British Constitution; and it is no small credit to his honoured memory that out of his sons three have risen to such high positions in Church and State, as Dr. George A. Selwyn, late Bishop of New Zealand, and now of Lichfield, Canon William Selwyn, of Ely, and Professor of Divinity at Cambridge, and, lastly, the late Lord Justice, whose death we here chronicle.

The late judge, who was a magistrate and deputy-lieutenant for Surrey, was twice married, first, in 1856, to Hester, fifth daughter of the late J. G. Ravenshaw, Esq. (formerly Chairman of the East India Company), and widow of Thomas Dowler, Esq., M.D. His second wife, who survives him, and to whom he was only married a few months ago, is Catherine Rosalie, daughter of Col. Godfrey T. Greene, C. B., and widow of the Rev. Harry Dupuis, vicar of Richmond. By his first marriage he has left a son and two daughters. Judge Selwyn was buried at Nunhead Cemetery.

PROMOTIONS & APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Thos. Hayes Dewes (of the firm of Dewes and Son, solicitors, Coventry) has, with the approval of the Lord Chancellor, been appointed deputy coroner for the Western District of the county of Warwick.

LEGAL NEWS.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.—The will of Sir Charles Wentworth Dilke, Bart., late M.P., J.P., was proved in the London Court on the 20th ult., and the personalty sworn under 35,000*l.*, the executors and trustees appointed being his eldest son, Sir Charles Wentworth Dilke, Bart., and his cousins Henry and John Snooke, Esqrs. To the two latter he leaves each a legacy of 500*l.* The will is dated Nov. 24, 1864, and testator died on 10th May last, at the Hotel de France, St. Petersburg, aged fifty-nine. He was a fellow of the Society of Antiquaries and of the Royal Geographical Society, was connected with many other learned bodies, and was one of the royal commissioners of the two great exhibitions in 1851 and 1862. The presents he received from Her Majesty Queen Victoria and the late Prince Consort and from the junior members of the Royal Family, and also the presents from foreign sovereigns, are to be held by his son and successor, and to descend as heirlooms. The testator has made a liberal provision for his son Ashton, and bequests to his mother-in-law, to others forming part of his establishment, and to his servants, appointing his son, now Sir Charles, residuary legatee.—The late Admiral Sir Charles Howe Fremantle, G.C.B., died intestate. His personal estate was administered to under 25,000*l.*

Law and the Lawyers.

It is rumoured that the vacant Lord Justiceship of Appeal has been offered to Lord WESTBURY. There is strong probability in favour of the truth of this rumour, but the appointment is not one which would be looked upon with any particular favour. There is no doubt, however, that Lord WESTBURY is a powerful Judge, and would be of very great service in the Chancery Appeal Court.

The provisional committee of the Association for reforming the Laws relating to the Tenure and Descent of Lands is now organised. Among the names on the list are those of Mr. JOHN STUART MILL, Mr. EDMOND BEALES, Professor BEESLEY, Mr. JACOB BRIGHT M.P., Sir C. W. DILKE, M.P., Professor FAWCETT, M.P., Mr. T. HUGHES, M.P., Mr. E. MIALLE, M.P., Mr. MUNDELLA, M.P., Mr. MUNTZ, M.P., and Professor ROGERS.

It is said that a new scheme for transfer of the business of the Albert to some sound existing office is being negotiated. It would be well for the policy holders if this could be arranged, even at a considerable sacrifice on their parts, for if the company is wound-up in due course, they will lose all.

The petitioners against the sitting member for Westminster have not yet, it appears, got over their difficulties. They have still 500*l.* to pay and call upon the public for assistance. Certain individuals must be responsible for the costs, and if the constituency was not consulted beforehand, those individuals ought to take the consequences of their acts.

Mr. Serjt. WOOLRYCH is about to publish the Lives of the most distinguished Serjeants-at-Law, upon which he has been engaged for some years, collecting materials from a vast variety of sources, many of them original. This work will complete the series of legal biographies, of which Lord CAMPBELL'S Lives of the Lord Chancellors is the chief. But the forthcoming biographies by Mr. Serjt. WOOLRYCH will not be the least interesting of the group, and they may be expected to be even more abounding in anecdote.

A STRONG feeling prevails against the growing practice of holding mob meetings in Trafalgar-square. Why should the public thoroughfares be obstructed for hours together by spouters when a street band, a solitary singer, or an orange girl, is compelled to "move on?" The law forbids the obstruction of a street, and subjects the offender to a heavy penalty. Why is it not enforced? If Mr. MOORE, M.P., had been ordered to "move on" his treasonable abuse of Englishmen would have been prevented by treating it as any other street cry. The placards calling the meeting described it as to be an assembly of the Republicans of all nations. But even Republicans are not privileged to stop the way to the annoyance of the Queen's loyal subjects, nor to take possession of the streets of the metropolis for the purpose of preaching revolution. The Metropolitan Police Act gives ample powers of prevention, and Col. HENDERSON should be instructed to enforce them.

Few points of interest have yet arisen at the Registration Courts. In the City of London, however, on Thursday, one arose of some importance. A vote was claimed for a counting-house consisting of two rooms communicating internally with each other, and entered from a door on the common stairs, for which a yearly rent of 65*l.* was paid. This claim was objected to, on the ground that these premises were not structurally separated from the rest of the building. The revising barrister said that in his opinion there was a sufficient severance to entitle the claimant to a vote. A case was applied for, which the revising barrister immediately granted.

THE LORD JUSTICE CLERK (PATTON) has disappeared mysteriously. He left his house before breakfast on Monday and did not return. The latest intelligence received before going to press was that his body had been found in a pond within Glenalmond grounds, but the statement had not been confirmed. There can be little doubt that he has met his death by drowning, whether by accident or otherwise remains to be proved. It is a strange coincidence, to say the least of it, that his death should have so occurred at the moment of his being summoned before the Bridgewater Commission to give an account of his connection at two elections with that memorable borough.

ANOTHER amalgamating assurance office has followed the fate of "the Albert." Whispers have been long and loud about the stability of "the European," and a few months ago an unexpected call was made upon the shareholders. Years ago it was thought to be shaky, for it had been, like the Albert, the tool of a class of lawyers of whom the LAW TIMES ventured at the period of their operations to warn the shareholders and assurers to beware, giving to them the appropriate title of "Professional Amalgamators." The European has bagged even more of the lesser offices than its prostrate brother, and on terms equally profitable to the vendors and ruinous to the purchasers. The call did not suffice to save it, and now it has applied for a winding-up order. We believe the shares to be held by a better class than those of the Albert, so that a larger sum is likely to be obtained from the shareholders to diminish the losses of the policy holders, which nevertheless must be very great.

WITNESSES TO CHARACTER.

THE doubtful value of testimonials to character has been remarkably exhibited at the present Middlesex Sessions. A man called GOODWIN was convicted, on the clearest testimony, of an indecent assault upon a gentleman in a urinal. The police-sergeant of the division stated the prisoner to have been known to him for many years as haunting urinals for improper purposes, and that he was one of a gang who made a business of it. On this, the presiding Judge, Mr. Serjeant COX, sentenced him to seven years' penal servitude. On the following day, application was made by counsel to the Judge to suspend the sentence until the next sessions, as the convict could produce undoubted testimony that the police had been mistaken as to his previous character. Accordingly, at the sessions on Monday, several witnesses were called of great respectability who proved that they had known the prisoner for some years, and that his conduct, so far as they had seen it, was decent, and a clergyman of distinction wrote purposely to say that he had him under his eye for a long time, and that his behaviour had been always praiseworthy. This mass of testimony to his conduct by day was met by overwhelming proof that he was quite a different personage by night. In the first place, there was no doubt that he was guilty of the offence of which he had been convicted, for he was seized upon the spot. This proved a certain degree of depravity. But the police of the neighbourhood swore that they had known him for three years as one of a gang who frequented urinals for an infamous purpose—as the companion of a fellow who had been convicted in that court on the previous day as a rogue and a vagabond haunting Regent-street with painted cheeks, and assuming the name and language of a woman; that he was not known at the addresses he had given, and special inquiries made at his haunts left no doubt whatever what he was—he was at once recognised by his companions as a "doctor," a cantterm for a character not to be named. So much for the value of evidence of character. All who spoke of his good conduct spoke only as to what they saw of him by day. The police and his companions saw what he was by night. May not this kind of transformation account for many contradictions between reputation and fact? And may not the respectability of noon be a mask for the rascality of midnight more often than we are wont to suspect?

TRUSTEES AND THEIR BANKING ACCOUNTS.

WHEN a solicitor is placed in the position of a trustee, his general responsibility is very largely increased. He is necessarily placed in this position when a client entrusts money to him for investment, which is a most usual practice. It is equally of importance to solicitors and clients that it should be clearly understood what risks are run, first, as regards the liability of the solicitor or his estate, and, secondly, as affects the interests of the client.

A recent case illustrates the risks and responsibilities of this position most completely. In Brown v. Adams, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 71, a client entrusted to a solicitor the sum of 5000*l.*, in order that he might invest the same upon mortgage. The solicitor paid it into his bankers, and died shortly afterwards without investing it. The balance then standing to his credit was about 2700*l.* This sum the client sought to obtain by means of an injunction restraining the solicitor's executor from dealing with it. The contention was that this was a trust fund appropriated to the plaintiff. This involved an important consideration as to the way in which the money was paid in. It was clear, upon the evidence, that it was not paid in as trust-money, but as part of the moneys of the solicitor. No specific appropriation was directed, and part of it had actually been drawn out. The ordinary custom of bankers is that moneys paid in are appropriated to drafts in the order of date, and the 5000*l.* being paid in before other moneys, was drawn out and actually extinguished in point of law. The question was, whether it could be made to survive in equity.

The principle laid down in the case of Pennell v. Deffell, 4 De G. M. & G. 372, was that where a trustee pays trust-money into a bank to his credit, the account being a simple account with himself, not marked or distinguished in any other manner, the debt thus constituted from the bank to him is one which, as long as it remains due, belongs specifically to the trust as much and as effectually as the money so paid would have done had it specifically been placed by a trustee in a particular repository, and so remained. That is, of course, quite clear and intelligible, and is a legal as well as an equitable doctrine. It would have been applicable to Brown v. Adams, if no part of the 5000*l.* had been drawn out. To have made it applicable under the existing circumstances would induce this result, that in all cases where trust moneys were paid by a trustee into a bank to his own private account, they must be held to have remained there so long as the trustee may have had moneys of his own in the bank to answer his drafts, whatever may have been the dealings upon the account, and however long it may have continued.

The final conclusion is plain and simple. Where a trustee pays trust money into his account, and it can be traced, the trustee cannot assert his own title to it. Although a sum paid in be not specifically appropriated, it may be claimed by the cestui que trust while it exists; but being extinguished by payment, it would be extraordinary if it could be revived in equity.

SOCIAL SCIENCE CONGRESS.

THE arrangements for the Congress at Bristol on the 29th inst. are now complete. In the Jurisprudence Department the most important subject for discussion will be "What ought to be the legal and constitutional relations between England and her Colonies?" a subject which will attract special attention, a large number of gentlemen interested in the question having promised their attendance, among whom may be mentioned Sir GEORGE GREY, Sir WILLIAM DENISON, Sir CHRISTOPHER RAWLINSON, Sir CHARLES CLIFFORD, Mr. R. R. TORRENS, M.P., Mr. WESTGARTH, Mr. SEWELL, Mr. H. W. MARSH, Mr. EDWARD WILSON, Mr. HENRY, Dr. LEOMOUTRE, and other colonial representative men; and papers on it will be read by Mr. J. E. GORST, Mr. F. P. LABILLIERES, Mr. JOHN NOBLE, Mr. THOMAS HARE, and Mr. MACPHEE, M.P. Next to this will be the Land question, Law of Charitable Endowments, and a Public Prosecutor. On the first Mr. FREDERIC HILL, Mr. W. D. HENDERSON, of Belfast, and Mr. Serjeant COX, will contribute papers; on the second, Mr. Serjeant PULLING, Mr. STUART, Q. C., and Mr. HENRY MILLER, of Glasgow, will write; and on the third Mr. LEWIS FRY, of Bristol, and Mr. THOMAS HARE, of the Charity Commissions will read papers. The principle, practice and policy of the Patent Law will be fully discussed, papers on this subject having been offered by Mr. A. V. NEWTON, Mr. W. SPENCE, Mr. MACPHEE, M.P., and Professor DICKS. In the Reformatory Section under the chairmanship of Sir EARDLEY WILMOT, Bart., the questions of diminishing infanticide by legislative enactment, and the results of the Industrial and Reformatory Acts will be ably discussed. Papers relating to Prison Discipline and other matters coming within the scope of this department will also be taken. The address of the President of the Department, Mr. G. W. HASTINGS, will be delivered on Thursday, the 30th. Among the visitors who are expected to be present are the Hon. Judge FIELD, of the Supreme Court of the United States, and the Hon. BEACH LAWRENCE, editor of Wheaton's International Law.

LAND LAW REFORM.

THE question grows space, and is rapidly assuming proportions that will throw into the shade all other subjects of public controversy. Already the agitation exceeds that which at this season last year prefaced the production of the Irish Church Bill. Nothing else is talked about in Ireland, and in England it is the prominent theme of every political speech. But the language of speakers and writers is very different in the two countries. In England, the stereotyped phrase employed by M. P.s, present and prospective, is "a measure that will secure the just rights of the tenant without invading the just rights of the landlord." This is a tolerably safe pledge, which any man of any party may venture to proffer, for it is one from which no right thinking man could dissent. But it is one of those conveniently loose expressions which may cover the most extreme and opposite designs, bind the speaker to nothing at all, or conceal entire ignorance of the subject. Everybody always professes an earnest desire to do justice to everybody. The difference arises when we come to the definition of justice. What some deem to be just others may deem to be altogether unjust. There was never a question on which such a remarkable diversity of notions of justice is found to prevail as on this of landlord and tenant. Take the extreme parties, and while one denies that tenants have any rights beyond the terms of their contract, the other denies as stoutly that the landlord has any right to the land he holds. The Basle Congress has merely applied to all property the principle which Sir JOHN GRAY and others are eager to apply to property in land. Sir JOHN GRAY asserts that there ought not to be, and according to nature's law there is not, the individual right of property in land. The Basle Congress, more logical, asserts that, according to nature's law there is not, and by human law there ought not to be, individual property of any kind. Sir JOHN GRAY and his associates would extinguish the landlords; the Basle Congress would exterminate both capitalists and landlords. Sir JOHN GRAY would pull down the landlords. The Basle Congress are for pulling down Sir JOHN GRAY the capitalist. Sir JOHN GRAY would make a clean sweep of the aristocracy. The Basle Congress would sweep away the middle classes. What a dangerous game it is will be apparent from the fruits it is already bearing.

The most alarming feature of the present agitation is not so much what is said as what is left unsaid. We have looked in vain through all the newspaper articles and speeches and pamphlets, with which the press is teeming, for a definite scheme of Land Law Reform. Vague terms, such as "fixity of tenure," are everywhere freely used, but nowhere have we discovered anything approaching even to an outline of a measure. Why does not some practical man, among the multitude who are at this moment talking and writing about it daily, favour the public with a definite scheme showing, in the form of a sketch of an Act of Parliament, precisely what he wants to do, and how he proposes that it should be done? There would then be something more than mere words to grapple with. The world would know what is designed by phrases that now have different meanings to different minds; we should learn what is deemed to be justice to the landlord, what justice to the tenant, if property is to be assailed, as the Marquis of HARTINGTON prophesies, and the struggle is to be for the preservation of life and liberty, or if only reforms are demanded which wise and prudent men may commend and support. It may be said, perhaps, that Sir JOHN GRAY has done this; he has put forth a plan: to give the tenant the absolute right of possession at the current rent, and to reward his improvements by a term at that rent, proportioned to the value of such improvements. But Sir JOHN GRAY does not tell us how he would prevent the tenant from underletting at an increased rent, and so reproducing landlordism in a far worse form, or how this process of underletting over and over again is to be prohibited so as to prevent the creation of half a dozen landlords instead of one. Then there are the questions of security against rickling out the land for six or seven years at the low rent, and going off, leaving it almost worthless. All this must be provided for in any law dealing with the question, and that no person has ventured to suggest the barest outline of such a law is proof that the phrases employed mean very much more than they express. The end sought is not obscurely stated. It is openly declared by the leaders of the agitation that their object is to give Ireland to the Irish, by transferring the land from the Protestant landlords to the Roman Catholic tenants.

If this could be done by buying the property at its fair value from the Protestant possessors, there would be much to say in its favour. It is the misfortune of Ireland that the owners and tenants of the soil should be of opposing creeds. It was the consequence of conquest, and though centuries have elapsed it is, and will continue to be, felt as a badge of conquest. Ireland is substantially a Roman Catholic country and must be dealt with as such. It is an awkward fact; but being a fact, it must be accepted. Religious equality, with an overwhelming majority holding a faith that denies equality, is an impossible dream. Released from the compelled ascendancy of the Church of the minority, the Church of the majority must and will assume the ascendancy to which it is entitled by its numbers. It would be well if any measure could be devised by which the ownership of the soil might be transferred to the people of the creed of the country, provided only that ample compensations were given. But where is the cash to be found, and how is the land to be appropriated afterwards? Clearly it could not be given to the present tenants. Certainly they will not consent to pay for it, inasmuch as they claim it as their own. If the State were to become the landlord, the jobbery and the costliness would be immeasurable and invincible. If the State lends money to the tenants to buy, the history of Irish loans proves that it would never be repaid. When Mr. BRIGHT addressed the people in Dublin, propounding some such plan of purchase from the owners and sale to the tenants he was met by the indignant shout, "Can't we have it for nothing?" It is certain that a scheme for payment by the tenant will be received with favour, nor, indeed, any scheme that does not divest the landlord of his property. Undoubtedly compensation is repudiated by the agitators in Ireland. It remains to be seen what favour this projected confiscation will find in England.

SIR WILLIAM DRAKE.

SOME correspondents ask, what are the services of Sir WILLIAM DRAKE, that have deserved this public recognition of honour from the Sovereign? The question is easily answered. Sir WILLIAM DRAKE was a member of the firm of DALRYMPLE and Co., solicitors. On the death of Mr. COPPOCK, of Reform Club repute, Mr. DRAKE succeeded him in the lucrative office of election manager for the Liberal party, an office identical with that which Mr. ST. FORTH so ably fills for the Conservative party. This office of election manager is very important. He does for the whole party at his quarters what the local managers do for the parties in the several boroughs. He is the puller of his party. For this purpose he has carefully compiled and closely noted up register of every constituency in the United Kingdom. It is his duty to ascertain, and keep on record, the past history, present condition, and peculiar character of every constituency, including the cost of a contest, the chances of success, the influences on both sides, if the electors are to be bought, and at what prices; and, in fact, to preserve duly posted up in a ledger for ready reference, all the information necessary, not merely for candidates, but to enable Ministers, in case or in posse, to ascertain the probable results of an election, come when it may.

Moreover, it is his business to procure candidates fitted for the various constituencies, for each according to its needs. He sends a rich tradesman to an expensive borough; a radical lord to a democratic borough; a fluent lawyer to a borough where dissent predominates; a liberal landed man to a wavering county, and so forth. The "assistance" which the secret service fund of the Reform or the Carlton, as the case may be, provides for certain candidates under certain circumstances, to be expended in the most effective manner, is given under the advice, if not with the personal aid, of the confidential manager. Local electioneers wanting candidates apply to the election manager, who keeps a list of candidates wanting constituencies. They state to him what kind of man they require—that is to say, the length of purse they look for—and it is through the manager, and usually at his office, that the interesting interview takes place at which the bargain is struck. When an election comes on, it is the manager's business to see that all necessary aid is given to his own candidates. He must keep rivals from the ground, bring influences to bear, and contrive to win, if possible. Should there be a petition, he negotiates; he squares with petitions contra; he settles it, if he can; if he can't settle, he fights; and if his candidate is beaten, he consoles him with a promise of the next vacancy.

It will be seen from this that the office of election manager, either for the Carlton or the Reform, is one of much importance, demanding rare qualities of discretion, skill, caution, and courage. Mr. COPPOCK's name and fame as a sagacious wire puller is almost historical. His successor, Mr. DRAKE, now Sir Wm. DRAKE, was scarcely less capable, while he excelled his predecessor in courtesy of manner, and in gentlemanly conduct of the very peculiar business confided to him. It will be apparent, indeed, that the foremost quality for such an office, a large portion of the duties of which consists of negotiations that cannot be committed to paper, and for which the only possible security that can be given is the honour of the parties concerned, is an integrity upon which implicit reliance can be placed. What Mr. DRAKE gave a verbal undertaking to do was always done. It is said that no candidate, whether his own or an opponent, relying on an arrangement made with him, ever found himself deceived or had reason to regret the confidence he had placed in his word.

These are the services which Sir Wm. DRAKE rendered to the Liberal party, and which have been thus publicly acknowledged by the Sovereign, and we trust that Mr. SPOFFORTH's equal services to the other party will speedily receive the like acknowledgment.

BAD BARGAINS BY COMPANIES.

There is a prevailing disposition on the part of the public to fix criminally or civilly upon directors of companies all the consequences of bad bargains. It is now too common to suppose that where a company fails it is a profitable matter for the managers and those primarily responsible. This supposition is based upon the evidence which has been supplied by numerous cases of so-called amalgamation, and is doubtless justified to a very large extent. But it is quite clear that it is not only unreasonable but inequitable to endeavour to hold the managers of commercial concerns responsible for all their bad bargains.

The firm of Overend, Gurney, and Co., is the one around which much of the litigation bearing upon this point has been concentrated, and we reported a case last week which illustrates the distinctions which exist between the different liabilities of directors of unsuccessful companies. Mr. Gibb, as one of the directors of the new company, bought the old company, and it was alleged against him, to use the words of Lord Hatherley, that he bought for the new company that which they formed themselves into a company to buy, namely, a certain business of Overend, Gurney, and Co.; yet that buying that business, though fully authorised to buy it on such terms as might seem to him and his co-directors to be just and proper, buying it also with certain guarantees which they were authorised to take and accept, and in no way, therefore, exceeding the power, he had, by his imprudence, made a very burdensome purchase, and fixed the company in consequence with a very heavy loss (21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 73).

Now it is to be observed that no fraud was alleged in this case: it was not attempted to show that Mr. Gibb had acted malâ fide, but that he had acted imprudently. The question therefore was, Mr. Gibb, being dead, whether his estate was liable to make good to the new company the loss arising from his imprudent purchase on their behalf. The conclusion at which the Lord Chancellor arrived was the obviously equitable one, that whilst an action at law might have lain against Mr. Gibb had he lived, no relief could be given to the company as against his estate he being dead. This was the view taken by Lord Romilly in Turquand v. Marshall, 18 L. T. Rep. N. S. 387, who said, "I am of opinion that the directors who did not look at the books must be liable to the consequences. It was their duty to be acquainted with them, and it was a duty which they had to perform on becoming directors, and therefore I am of opinion that they are liable for the falsity of the accounts." But he added, "I am of opinion that I cannot make this the subject of any decree in this court. The case alleged is simply that the directors gave a favourable aspect to the matters which they ought not to have done, but not that they obtained any advantage by so doing." And later on, his Lordship said, "If any one of the shareholders has been injured by this course of proceeding, he may be entitled to proceed individually against the directors." Again, speaking of certain damage sustained by a particular shareholder, he said, "I cannot doubt that if those directors who so acted were alive, they would be personally liable to Mr. Skey for the injury they occasioned him by the false statements then made."

In each of these cases the real question is one of negligence—in Gibb's case, negligence in not ascertaining the nature of the business proposed to be purchased, and in Turquand's case, negligence in not investigating the character of the concern, which was given out as sound. The bill in the latter case was precise in its terms, seeking to compel Mr. Gibb and his co-directors jointly and severally "to make good and pay to the plaintiff company the amount of the loss which they had sustained, and to indemnify them against all such further loss as they may sustain by reason of their having purchased the said good-will and assets, and having undertaken the liabilities of the said firm of Overend, Gurney, and Company."

Without hesitation, the Lord Chancellor expressed his opinion that the proposition that this remedy might be pursued in a court of equity was, in the absence of fraud, one most difficult to sustain. His Lordship said: "All the loss in the shape of liability beyond the 250,000, which they may be supposed in this case to have had in their hands, I apprehend would form the proper subject of an action for negligence, if they thought they could maintain such an action in the absence of any fraud being charged; and the consequence of that would be that the present gentlemen, the executors of Gibb, could not be pursued either at law or in equity. It certainly seems to me not in equity, with reference to any such loss as that which I have last mentioned."

Clearly in all such cases, there being no fraud, the sole remedy is an action for negligence, and in Gibb's case the negligence dropped down to the level of mere imprudence. Mr. Gibb, as pointed out by the Lord Chancellor, was willing himself to embark in the speculation of buying Overend, Gurney, and Co.'s business, and how was it possible that he should know that the others were not as willing to enter into it as himself. It must be recognised as impossible that persons acting as purchasers of one concern on behalf of another concern should lay all the affairs of each before a public meeting, and if, said Lord Hatherley, "I do not find that they have acted in breach of their duty, if I do not find that they have done anything more than make a bad bargain—it appears to me that I cannot assume that the company are thereupon entitled to say that this gentleman is responsible for a breach of trust, he only having done that which they sent him to do, having bought this business, but with an amount of knowledge, which he must necessarily as a director acquire, exceeding the amount of knowledge which was acquired by them."

Consequently it must be accepted that controlling directors cannot be made responsible in their estates for merely imprudent transactions or bad bargains. If perfect immunity from the consequences of unsound speculative transactions were to be secured those transactions would lose their main element, that of speculativeness. Agents must be deputed to do the work of the multitude, and it is vain to expect agents to be infallible, or to any large extent possessing foresight very far in advance of their principals.

MUNICIPAL AND PARLIAMENTARY ELECTIONS.

No. II.

THE VOTER.

THE relationship between the candidate and the voter has, we believe, had a somewhat new light thrown upon it by judicial decision. The voter is punishable if he receive a bribe; and a vote procured by bribery is bad. But in the Taunton case, not yet reported, Mr. Justice Blackburn laid down a principle which we do not think has been reached before. His Lordship said: "The member who is returned for any constituency ought to be the member who is elected by a majority of pure and unimpeached voters who vote at that particular election. If anyone failed to obtain such a majority, or (what comes to the same thing) if it cannot be proved that he has obtained such a majority, there must be a new election; that constituency must have a fresh choice to return such member as they choose for the purpose. The distinction, therefore, is obvious there; it is not any longer a matter merely between the two candidates, but it involves the interests of the constituency. The constituency are, as one may say, parties to the question, and their interests must be considered as well as those of the sitting member and the candidate who claims the seat; it is necessary in that case to see whether or no there is a majority of pure voters, and accordingly every voter who is shown to have been corrupted must be struck off, for whomever he voted. It matters not whether he was corrupted by the sitting member, or whether he was corrupted by the sitting member's agents, or by a stranger. Even if corrupted by the other side, I take for granted the man's vote is bad. If a man accepts a bribe for the purpose of voting, say for Mr. Serjeant Cox, and then having been so corrupted votes for Mr. James, his vote cannot be counted for Mr. James any more than if Mr. James himself had bribed him. Or vice versa, if it were shown that he had received a bribe, or was corrupted by somebody to vote for Mr. James, and then voted for Mr. Serjeant Cox, his vote could not stand for Mr. Serjeant Cox, and must be struck off. The result is that we have to see without regard to who it was corrupted this man or that, what was the majority of uncorrupted voters, and whether there is a majority for anyone who has not rendered himself by personal misconduct incapable of standing. If there is such a majority that person should be declared returned and substituted for the sitting member, if that majority is not made out, there must be a new election in case it is shown that the first election is void."

This is the principle which declares the status of the person to be gone where he participates in a corrupt act. But it appears somewhat singular that a contract in which there is no mutuality between two persons, should affect a third. The bribed voter who does not vote on the side for which he is bribed, commits a fraud upon those who bribed him. He takes, say, 10*l.* for nothing, and gives a disinterested vote for the candidate of his choice. His purity is not corrupted—the illegal bargain was never completed. A bribe is given for the purpose of inducing a certain result. A totally different result is effected; but Mr. Justice Blackburn says that whatever the result, the elementary principle remains. Blood money is blood money, though no blood be shed.

We presume that the learned Judge lays down this rule in accordance with the terms of the 3rd section of the Act of 1854, which makes it bribery to receive money for agreeing to vote. It is, perhaps, better to be over strict in the construction of penal statutes, but as we said, we think the principle has been carried beyond anything which has been previously established.

THE COMMON LAW.

It is to be now recognised that apart from all statutes, it is quite possible that an election may be void at common law. That it could not be so, and that elections might escape which were not technically within the scope of particular Acts of Parliament, has undoubtedly been a hope entertained by those who live by corrupt practices. It is remarkable with what intense satisfaction Mr. Justice Willes dashes this hope. In the Lichfield Petition, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 11, he says, "One can only wonder that any person doubted, either through fear of what people call the technicality of lawyers (really the just limit to the jurisdiction of Judges), or through hope that by reason of the difficulties which would be met with in proof before this new tribunal, persons, if any such there be, who have fattened upon the abuses that have existed hitherto at elections, might continue to do so even with greater impunity than before—I say, one is astonished that, either through such hopes or through such fears, it could have been doubted that bribery would have been pursued, under the new jurisdiction, upon the same principle as it was put down, or attempted to be put down, in the jurisdiction of election committees. Bribery at the common law, equally as by Act of Parliament, avoided an election where it took place. If there were general bribery, no matter from what fund, no matter by what person, though the sitting member or his agents had nothing to do with it, that would defeat the election, upon the ground that it was not a proceeding pure and free, as an election ought to be, but that it was vitiated and corrupted by an influence which, coming no matter from what quarter, had defeated the proceeding, and shown it to be abortive."

This passage is the more to be observed because the learned Judge went out of his way to make the statement. There was nothing in the case calling for this particular form of animadversion. On the contrary, he observed that the proof showed an entire absence of any general corruption of that sort in the city of Lichfield. There are other authorities in support of this view, but it is unnecessary to cite them, and we shall proceed to consider

WHAT ARE CORRUPT PRACTICES within the meaning of the statutes.

The difficulty of giving an accurate construction of the word "corrupt" is familiar to every one who has considered the subject of electoral law. In one of the early petitions, that of Bradford, 19 L. T. Rep. N. S. 728, Baron Martin asks the question, What is the exact meaning of the word "corruptly?" He adds: "It is difficult to say, but I am satisfied that it means a thing done with an evil mind and intention, and unless there be an evil mind or an evil intention accompanying the act it is not corruptly done. 'Corruptly' means an act done by a man knowing that he is doing what is wrong, and doing it with an evil object." The learned Baron adopted the language of Mr. Justice Willes. At p. 678 of our report, he says: "The interpretation of this word as explained, and in my opinion rightly explained, by Mr. Justice Willes, is not wickedly or immorally, or anything of the sort, but embraces such conduct as it was evidently the intention of the Legislature to discountenance." And then he draws the distinction between an act which may void an election and yet not be corrupt. "Where," he said, "it is shown that even the smallest quantity of meat or drink is supplied, that is of course admissible as evidence of treating; but more than that would be required to make out a corrupt intention."

The first use of the word corrupt in the statute is in the first clause of the second section, which says that any person who shall corruptly do any such act as is forbidden, on account of any voter having voted or refrained from voting, shall be guilty of bribery. It occurs in the same sense in the second clause relating to giving employment; and we next find it used in the definition of treating in the fourth section. Every candidate at an election who shall corruptly by himself, &c., give or pay for any meat, drink, entertainment, or provision to or for any person for the purpose of being elected, or for the purpose of corruptly influencing such person, &c.

We see, therefore, that there are three classes of cases which have to be looked to in considering the evidence necessary to upset an election. In the first place there are the offences cognizable under the common law; secondly, those which in themselves, and without reference to the intention of the persons concerned in them, are illegal by the statute; and thirdly, those which are made illegal by a corrupt intention. All these are, in the eye of the law, corrupt practices, taking corrupt in its ordinary acceptance.

The order of offences in the statute places Bribery first, Treating second, and Undue Influence third. We will, therefore, first consider BRIBERY.

As we have seen, there may be general bribery avoiding an election at common law, and limited bribery according to statute. "Where," said Mr. Justice Willes in the Southampton Petition (not reported; see p. 289 of printed judgments, Part II.), "there is no general corruption in a constituency, when you come to deal with individual cases, it is necessary, in order to vitiate and void the election, to prove not only a violation of the law, but that the violation took place with the knowledge and consent of the member or an agent of the member—that is to say, it is necessary to establish agency."

An elementary consideration is what is a sufficient inducement to constitute bribery. In the Coventry case, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 405, Mr. Justice Willes discussed the question whether a telegram "Come by the first train to 'Stag,' Bishop-street," amounted to an inducement so as to constitute bribery within the principle laid down in the famous case of Cooper v. Slade. His Lordship took occasion to express his concurrence with the view taken by Baron Bramwell in that case, which view it is known did not prevail, that the term "your expenses will be paid" were not, under the circumstances, evidence of a conditional promise. That was in the main a matter of fact; but the learned Baron's view also received approval at the hands of Mr. Justice Willes, to the extent of pointing out, as Baron Bramwell did in the clearest terms, that no amount of hope or expectation on the part of a voter is enough to constitute bribery. And it was agreed by all the Judges that the mere request to come up and vote cannot constitute bribery. Mr. Justice Willes evidently thought this a matter of the first importance, and accordingly elaborated it in the Coventry case. He illustrated the principle thus: "If," he said, "I were to ask one of the learned counsel to go to London and vote for me at a club or elsewhere where an election was to take place, and say, 'Come by first train' to whatever club it might happen to be, although looking to the fact that an election was about to take place, there could be no doubt that I meant that he should come and vote for me at some expense, I think it would not only be without authority, but that it would be contrary to the authority to be found in the opinions of all the learned Judges who dealt with the case of Cooper v. Slade, to say that such a contract to pay the expenses was implied." Another illustration fully exemplifies the distinction between the nature of the promises to be implied. His Lordship said, "If I send to a coal merchant and say, 'send me in so many tons of coal,' of course it means, 'I will pay you for your coals'; but if I write to a man to do a thing to which a price is not usually attached, and as to which the law says there shall not be a price attached, and for which the law says there shall not be a price paid, I think that the implication of condition would be contrary to the principle, and also to the authority of that leading case to which reference has been made."

But it must be clearly understood that the above remarks do not exclude all offers and promises from the category of bribes. The same learned Judge laid it down in the same judgment that an offer to bribe where it is proved is quite as bad as the payment of money—that these offers ought not to be placed in an inferior class. Of course, in estimating the value of evidence, it cannot be forgotten how extremely difficult it is to prove conversations so as to substantiate an allegation of an offer to bribe; and as evidence this class of cases is of inferior value.

It is impossible, as was observed in the Perry case, that each candidate can warrant that every chatterbox on his side shall abstain from talking and giving opinions which may be afterwards represented as offers and enticements to the persons to whom they are addressed.

We come then to actual bribery in individual cases. And on this head Willes, J., in the Lichfield Petition, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 11, said, "It is not enough to show that a stranger to the member, and to his agents bribed one or two persons." The bribe must be given by the member or his agent. Little need be said on this subject, for there can be no question about a money bribe. But passing out of the category of bare money bribes, and coming to the giving of employment, we encounter difficulty. Many people are slow to recognise the fact that the ordinary avocations of everyday life must be carried on at elections as at other times. This matter was fully discussed in the Perry case (p. 133 of Printed Judgments, Part I.), where Mr. Justice Willes said, "I am clear that when an unfavourable inference is to be drawn from the fact that some person has been employed, one ought to take care to be quite sure that there is something more than merely getting the man's work for that which is the real equivalent for the man's work." Previously he had said, "If you have a sum of money or a benefit, for which nothing is returned conferred upon a voter, you have a tangible case, which cannot be explained away by merely saying, 'I did it, and I had no particular reason for it.' You have then a case in which a member or his agent must be called upon to give an account of what they meant, and to show satisfactorily that that which prima facie was giving a benefit to the person which would have the effect of inducing him to vote for the member, was really done with some other, and an innocent motive." And his Lordship said finally as to these cases that it would not be right or reasonable to hold that there was bribery, unless there was colourable employment or a condition made.

THE ALBERT OFFICE, AND ITS AMALGAMATIONS.

THE collapse of the Albert Life Assurance Office seems likely to raise questions of considerable interest in reference to the liability of the shareholders in the numerous offices (twenty-two as we understand) which in popular language have been amalgamated with the Albert, to the holders of their respective policies. The shareholders in the Albert itself, a company established prior to the Companies Act 1862, and which has not taken any steps to restrict the liability of its shareholders by bringing itself within the provisions of that Act, are undoubtedly liable to the utmost extent of their fortunes for the fulfilment of the company's engagements. We are informed, however, that these engagements, so far as they consist of policies of assurance, have in many, though not in all, cases been limited by the insertion of clauses in the policies to the effect that the funds of the company and its uncalled-up capital should alone be liable to the demands of the policy holders.

The validity of such clauses was much discussed in the cases of Halkett v. The Merchant Traders' Insurance Company, 13 Q. B. 960; Halkett v. Dowdall, 16 Jur. 462, and seems now to be fully admitted: (See King v. The Accumulative Life Fund and General Insurance Company, 3 Jur. N. S. 1264.)

In regard to the liabilities of the shareholders in the so called "amalgamated" companies the principle on which they must be held liable or exonerated is perfectly clear, though the application of the principle to particular circumstances of each case may require much judicial discrimination.

We remark, in the first place, that the use of the word "amalgamation" is very likely to mislead. The expression is a chemical one, applied by a loose and, in some respects, a false analogy to a legal subject. In chemistry it signifies an intimate union of mercury with some other metal. We do not object to the word being applied to the status of a company which has arisen on the dissolution of separate companies, and their subsequent union by Act of Parliament or other legal means; but we say that, unless such legal dissolution and union has taken place, the word amalgamation ought not to be used except under protest, inasmuch as it implies that the amalgamated companies have ceased, as companies, to exist. A company, by transferring its assets and liabilities to some other company or person, and refusing further business, no more ceases to exist as a company than an individual debtor would cease to be such by handing over his assets to someone else, and obtaining an engagement from the transferee that he, the debtor, should be indemnified. Moreover, no dissolution of a company, though the same be perfectly legal, could in any way exonerate the members from liabilities existing at the time of the dissolution. The holders of policies in the amalgamated companies respectively, originally contracted with the respective companies; and whether those companies have or have not been legally dissolved, the onus rests on them, or their members, of showing that the policy holders have expressly or impliedly released their claims. The members of the assuring companies will have to make out such release, not by doubtful inferences, but with certainty.

It appears to us that it will be very difficult to establish the fact of any such release by implication. The mere circumstance that the original company has notified to the policy holders the intention or the fact of the transfer to the Albert, and has requested that the yearly premiums should be paid to that company, would, as it seems to us, be quite insufficient. In many cases it would be doubtful whether policy holders could, if they were so minded, effectually oppose or set aside such a transfer; and if it were clear that they could do so, still it could scarcely be contended that the original debtor was to be released, because the policy holder did not see fit to undergo the trouble and expense of legal proceedings for the purpose. We may go further than this and say, that even an express assent by the policy holder to a transfer of the funds of the original company would by no means necessarily imply an assent to a substitution of the one company as a debtor in the place of the other. We think that prima facie, the amalgamations so far as policy holders are concerned were res inter alios acta, that the payment of premiums subsequent to the amalgamation was prima facie a payment at the request of the original company, and on its behalf to the Albert company, and that prima facie the Albert Company was merely a company that for a consideration had agreed to indemnify the companies whose property and assets it had absorbed.

DIGEST OF SHIPPING LAW CASES.

FROM 1860 TO 1864.

Edited by F. O. CRUMR, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

BROKER.

1. Evidence of custom—Commission.—Where one steamship broker introduced another to certain shipowners for the purpose of engaging charters for them, and the first broker, as introducing broker, claimed from the working broker 1 per cent. commission according to custom, as well as according to agreement, evidence of such custom was held to be admissible. Pollock, C.B. was of opinion that the special terms of the agreement between the parties, excluded evidence of the custom, and the usual course of business: (Allan and others v. Sundins and others, C. E., April 29, 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 222; 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 359; 31 L. J. 308; 1 H. & C. 123.)

2. Commission—Remoteness of services in procuring charter—Introducing shipowner to broker.—A ship broker having introduced a shipowner to another broker, who was also a merchant, through whose introduction to a London broker a charter-party was entered into, was held entitled to commission on that charter. Evidence as to who was the proper person to receive the commission. Remoteness of a claimant's services in respect of procuring charter, considered. A wholly unauthorized person, hearing by chance that a person was in quest of a ship, cannot claim commission: (Kynaston v. Nicholson and others, C. E. June 5, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 350; 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 671.)

3. Right to commission—Remoteness of services—Custom.—Where a negotiation goes through three or four persons, ultimately resulting in a charter being found, the broker who first set the matter in motion is not entitled to commission. Not the most conclusive evidence of custom can support a claim which is too remote: (Gibson v. Crick, 2 F. & F. 766; 31 L. J. 304, Ex; 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 32; 1 H. & C. 142.)

CHAIN CABLE PARTING.

Collision between steamer and schooner both at anchor.—Steamer at single anchor held liable for damage by collision with a schooner at anchor, consequent on the steamer's chain parting, because the latter had veered out her chain till she was too close to the schooner, and delayed taking measures for properly mooring for the night so that the collision became inevitable when the chain parted: (The Egyptian, J. C., P. C. April 13, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 358; 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 776.)

COAL TRADE.

Turn paper—Demurrage.—The purchasers of a cargo signed the usual "turn paper," in which it is specified that the ship is to unload her cargo at a certain rate of tons per day, but there was no evidence that they had made themselves parties to the contract between the shipowner and the original consignees. They were held not liable in demurrage on account of delay between the time the ship arrived at her mooring, and her entering the dock where she was to unload: (Shadforth v. Cory and others, Q. B., Jan. 28, 1863; and E. C. June 16, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 296, 363; 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 786; 32 L. J. 379; 9 Jur. N. S. 910.)

COLONIAL LAW.

(See Sale of Ship, 4.)

COMITY OF NATIONS.

Foreign judgment.—A foreign judgment with nothing on the face of it with which a court in any other country can deal is conclusive as to the merits between the parties. Some cases considered where error appearing on the face of the record, the above rule does not apply. Sundry cases commented upon with reference to the effect of foreign judgments and the comity of nations: (Simpson v. Fogo, Wood, V. C., Dec. 10 and 12, 1862, and Feb. 13, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 312; 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 61; 9 Jur. N. S. 403; 32 L. J. 249; 1 H. & M. 195.)

COMMISSION (AGENCY).

1. Commission on value—Accounts.—A bottomry bond was given at Elsinore for 433*l.*, with 15 per cent. bottomry premium, the ship being bound to Londonderry. Agency commission charged on the value of the ship and cargo was reduced by the court, an allowance of 50*l.* being made for commission on advance and for trouble. No reason was assigned, or custom alleged, in favour of a commission on value being charged. The court is not called upon to scrutinise accounts too closely: (The Fortuna, A. C. Ireland, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 123.)

2. Renewed commission—Evidence of custom.—An introducing broker claimed from the working broker 1 per cent. commission where the charters were renewed, and renewed commission paid to the latter. Evidence of custom as to the payment of the renewed commission was held to be admissible: (Allan and others v. Sundins and others, E. C., April 26, 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 222; 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 359; 31 L. J. 308; 1 H. & C. 123.)

3. Custom—Reasonableness of charge.—The court not bound by the custom of any place as conclusive evidence in determining the reasonableness of a charge for agency commission on estimated value of cargo included in a bottomry bond. It is properly a question for the registrar and merchants: (The Laurel, A. C., Nov. 3 and 10, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 403.)

(See Broker.)

CONSIGNEE.

Mercantile law—Consignor and consignee—Lien on cargo.—The general lien of the consignee on cargo cannot be set up in opposition to positive directions given him by the consignor. Question as to lien of holder of bill of exchange drawn against a consignment. Priority: (Frith v. Forbes, July 15 and 16, and Aug. 5, 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 253; 7 L. T. Rep. N. S. 261; 8 Jur. N. S. 1115; 32 L. J. 10, Ch.)

Wages of Master or Crew of Foreign Ship, 1 to 4.

1. Foreign master's wages—Jurisdiction of Admiralty Court.—Suit for foreign master's wages dismissed where consul of state to which ship belonged protested against cause proceeding: (Merchant Shipping Act 1854, s. 191.) Jurisdiction of court discretionary. Case of The Golubchick, 1 W. Rob. 148, referred to: (The Herzogin Marie, A. C. March 21, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 144.)

2. Wages—Suit by foreign master—Practice of Admiralty Court respecting security for costs.—Case of Nylander v. Barnes, 6 Hurl. & N. 509, Ex., followed, and security for costs ordered to be given in a suit by a foreign master for wages. The owners of the ship were held to be incorrect in appearing under protest on the ground that the consul of the foreign state probably intended to object to the proceedings. Immediate notice of such objection to be given to the court: (The Franz and Elise, A. C. Oct. 10, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 155.)

3. Wages—Intervention of consul.—In a suit for wages of foreign seamen, where the net proceeds of the sale of the ship have been paid into court, and the foreign consul intervenes, and asks that payment of the wages may be made to him out of the proceeds, he undertaking to apportion them among the parties entitled, the court grants the application. If he objects to the proceedings the suit is discontinued. (But see No. 4 hereof: The Timor, A. C. Nov. 17, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 400.)

4. In a suit for wages of foreign shipmaster, where the ship was arrested, and the foreign consul on due notice having been given to him, interfered and objected to the suit proceeding, the court dismissed the summons. There is a great distinction between proceeding against the ship and against the proceeds of the ship; and there have been one or two cases in the United States where the courts of that country have on apparently good grounds proceeded against a British ship notwithstanding objection being raised by the British minister. Case of the Golubchick, 1 W. Rob. 143, explained: (The Octavie, A. C. Dec. 8, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 420.)

CONSULAR COURTS.

1. Jurisdiction.—There is no compulsory power in an English Consular Court in Turkey over any but English subjects. Arrest of ships in causes of bottomry being usual before the consular courts: Held that proceedings in rem are competent also in collision cases: (The Laconia, May 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 252; 7 L. T. Rep. N. S. 164; J. C. P. C., Aug. 5, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 378; 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 37; 32 L. J. 11; 9 Jur. N. S. 1160.)

2. Consular manifest—Handing over copies of bills of lading.—Charterers are not bound to hand over to shipowners copies of bills of lading in order that consular manifests may be made out: (Dutton v. Powles, Q. B. Jan. 22 and 25, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 22; E. C. Feb. 3 and 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 309.)

CUSTOM.

(See title Usage.)

1. Tender for salvage.—The Admiralty Court will not pronounce in favour of a tender for salvage which does not include costs; but having, in ignorance of such a fact, dismissed the defendants and their bail, it refused to grant a motion for an order as to costs: (The Countess of Leven and Melville, A. C. June 20, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 154.)

2. Security—Suit by foreign master for wages.—Security for costs will be ordered to be given in a suit by a foreign master for wages, although it would appear that there is a probability that the consul will interfere and stop the suit: (The Franz and Elise, A. C. Oct. 10, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 155.)

3. Appraisement.—Where salvors extracted a commission of appraisement, and the ship was appraised at less, and the cargo at more than what had been stated by the defendants, the salvors were held entitled to all the costs of appraisement: (The Magdalen, A. C. July 18, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 183.)

4. Salvage—Merchant Shipping Act, s. 460—Tender—Pleading applicability of Act of Parliament.—Whenever the defendants in a salvage suit intend to rely upon the 460th section of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, as governing the question of costs, the particular facts which render it applicable should be distinctly averred and proved. Costs in these cases do not follow the decision as in a case at common law: (The Favourite, A. C. Jan. 22, 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 191.)

5. Reference to registrar and merchants—Disallowance as to salvage services—Motion to condemn plaintiff in costs of reference rejected.—The claim made by plaintiffs in a collision suit involved investigation into salvage expenses. The registrar disallowed more than one-third of the plaintiff's claim, including therein the greater portion of his salvage expenses; but the court held that the ordinary rule as to references should not prevail, and awarded the plaintiffs their full costs: (The Bertrice, A. C. July 7, 1867; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 203.)

6. Reference to registrar and merchants—Damage cause.—On a reference in a damage cause more than one-fourth and less than one-third of the plaintiff's claim was disallowed. Each party was ordered to pay its own costs: (The Peerless, A. C. April 17, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 206.)

7. Reference—Master's wages—Deduction from claim for set-off.—On a reference of the accounts in a master's suit for wages, more than one-half of the owner's claim of set-off, and nearly two-thirds of the master's claim, were disallowed. Charges of immorality were made by the owners, but not sustained. The court, considering that the master had at the utmost been guilty of extravagance only, allowed him his costs: (The Strathallan, A. C. April 18, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 207.)

8. Counsel's fee—Costs of laying plea before counsel.—Fee to counsel to advise whether a plea should be admitted without opposition or not, and costs of laying the plea before counsel, allowed. The ancient practice, however, does not still prevail; the modern practice is governed by the circumstances of particular cases: (The Rouen, A. C. May 13 and June 3, 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 221.)

JUDICIAL STATISTICS, 1868.

COMMON LAW COURTS.

BOROUGH, HUNDRED, AND MANORIAL COURTS.

In the table for 1866 thirty four local courts were named (including the City of London Court and the Manchester Court of Record) which possessed civil jurisdiction. Pursuant to the County Courts Amendment Act (30 & 31 Vict. c. 142), which came into operation on the 1st January 1868 and which provides that no action or suit which can now be brought in any county court shall henceforth be commenced or maintainable in any hundred or other inferior court, not being a court of record, the jurisdiction of six of these courts has ceased, and the names are omitted from the table for 1868, viz., the Wapentake Court for the Hundred of Amounderness; the Court Baron for the Hundred of Blackburn; the Bowland Wapentake Court; the Bradford Manor Court; the Egremont Court Baron; and the Whitehaven Court Baron for the hundred of St. Bees; and the City of London Court is classed with the County Courts.

Twenty-seven local courts having civil jurisdiction remain, the names of which are given in the table for 1868. In seven of these no proceedings took place in that year.

In the Manchester Court of Record, 3511 writs were issued in 1868, for a total amount of 48,973*l.*, giving an average of 13*l.* 18*s.* 11*d.* for each case. In the Liverpool Court of Passage, 3301 plaintiffs were entered for a total amount of 146,748*l.*, giving an average of 44*l.* 9*s.* 1*d.* In the Salford Court of Record there were 2501 plaintiffs entered for a total amount of 32,620*l.*, giving an average of 13*s.* 0*s.* 1*d.* In these three courts, in 1867, the number of cases and the total amounts were, respectively, 4203 for 51,757*l.*, 3635 for 148,481*l.*, and 2722 for 33,923*l.* In the seventeen remaining courts in which there were proceedings in 1868 the number of plaintiffs entered varies between 1 in the Ipswich Guildhall Court and 585 in the burgess and non-burgess courts at Newcastle-on-Tyne. The total number of plaintiffs entered in these seventeen courts was 2789 in 1868, against 4041 in 1867; the total amounts were 35,572*l.* and 49,516*l.*, respectively. The total amount of debt for which judgment was obtained by plaintiffs in all these courts, including Liverpool, Manchester, and Salford, was 90,991*l.* in 1868, against 109,069*l.* in the same courts in 1866. The total amount of costs was 15,717*l.* against 17,919*l.* The total amount of fees was 5553*l.*, against 6244*l.* The amount of costs and fees together was 23*s.* 3 per cent. of the amount of debt recovered, the proportion for 1867 being for the same courts 23*s.* 1 per cent.

THE LORD MAYOR'S COURT.

The proceedings in the Lord Mayor's Court in the year 1868 are shown in the usual form in the return furnished by the registrar of the court, under the heads of Proceedings of the Court in Actions, and Proceedings in Foreign Attachments.

The registrar remarks, that it will be observed by the return that the business transacted in the court, irrespective of foreign attachment, continues to increase in a remarkable manner; but that, with respect to foreign attachments, since the year 1865 the use of this process may be said to have decreased, at all events very largely in the amount sought to be recovered; and that this is on account of the process being very actively used during any commercial pressure, and that to the monetary crisis of 1865 may be attributed the great increase of that year and of 1866.

The number of actions entered in 1868, viz., 10,080, exceeds the number in the preceding year by 3996, or 65*s.* 6 per cent.; the number in 1867 having exceeded the number in 1866 by 297, or upwards of 5 per cent. There were also 17 ejectments in 1868, against 7 in 1867, and 19 in 1866; and 7 apprentice petitions in 1868 against 10 in 1867, and 8 in 1866.

The total amount for which actions were entered in 1868, viz., 228,612*l.*, exceeds the amount for the preceding year by 89,127*l.*, or 63*s.* 9 per cent. The amount in 1867 exceeded the amount in 1866 by 4608*l.*, or 3*s.* 4 per cent.

Of the number of actions entered, 46, or 0*s.* 4 per cent. of the total number, for 159*l.*, or nearly 0*s.* 1 per cent. of the total amount, were for under 5*l.*; 2576, or 25*s.* 6 per cent. of the total number, for 20,873*l.*, or 9*s.* 1 per cent. of the total amount, were for 5*l.* and under 10*l.*; 5022, or 49*s.* 8 per cent., for 72,603*l.*, or 31*s.* 8 per cent. of the total amount, were for 10*l.* and under 20*l.*; 1860, or 18*s.* 5 per cent., for 51,567*l.*, or 22*s.* 5 per cent. of the total amount, were for 20*l.* and under 50*l.*; and 576, or 5*s.* 7 per cent. of the total number, for 83,410*l.*, or 36*s.* 5 per cent. of the total amount, were for 50*l.* and above.

PROCEEDINGS IN FOREIGN ATTACHMENTS.

The number of foreign attachments issued was 919 for a total amount of 510,930*l.* As compared with the preceding year, there is an increase of 15 in the number of foreign attachments issued, with a decrease of 82,458*l.* in the aggregate amount. In 1867, 39*s.* 2 per cent. of the attachments issued for 53*s.* 9 of the amount were withdrawn, and settled by the parties. In 1868 there do not appear to have been any withdrawals.

The proceedings are shown in the tables under the headings of verdicts, judgments, bills of proof, and certiorari. The average attachment was 555*l.* In 1867 the average attachment was 656*l.*; in 1866, 1163*l.* On the equity side of the court there were three bills of complaint, against four in 1867. The fees (exclusive of costs) on ordinary proceedings, including attachments, amounted to 5932*l.*, of which 5832*l.*, were on all proceedings, and 100*l.* on compensation cases. In 1867 the amounts were 4286*l.* on ordinary proceedings, and 4824*l.* on compensation cases.

STANNARIES COURTS.

The usual return furnished by the registrar of the Court of the Vice-Warden of the Stannaries shows the proceedings of the court in 1868, in equity, in common law, and for the winding-up of incorporated and unincorporated companies, under the Companies Act 1862, no case appearing under proceedings not in any cause.

Under proceedings in equity, there were 31 petitions entered in 1868, against 33 in 1867; there were 105 appearances entered, against 65 in 1867; there were 62 affidavits filed, against 72 in 1867; there were 40 injunctions and interlocutory orders, against 41 in 1867; there were 104 registrars' summonses, orders, and certificates, against 105 in 1867; there were 24 registrars' reports, against 21 in 1867; the amounts for which petitions were entered, and decrees obtained, were respectively 5000*l.* and 3626*l.*, against 3151*l.* and 3352*l.* in 1867; the amounts of costs and fees were respectively 298*l.* and 80*l.*, against 323*l.* and 97*l.* in 1867.

Under the Common Law jurisdiction in Cornwall, there being no proceedings for Devon, there were four writs issued, against 5 in 1867; the total amount for which actions were brought was 317*l.*, against 100*l.* in 1867; there were two judgments entered for a total amount of 253*l.*, against 1 judgment for 100*l.* in 1867; the amounts of costs and fees were respectively 33*l.* and 3*l.* 12*s.* 2*d.*, against 2*l.* and 1*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* in 1867. There were further 5 plaintiffs entered against 10 in 1867; and 3 judgments obtained against 2; the amounts for which plaintiffs were entered and judgments obtained were respectively 122*l.* and 76*l.*, against 216*l.* and 1*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* in 1867; the amounts of costs and fees respectively were 12*l.* 7*s.* 5*d.*, and 2*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.*, against no costs, and 1*l.* 18*s.* fees in 1867.

In proceedings for winding-up, the number of petitions against companies was 15, against 33 in 1867; the orders for winding-up were 11, against 23; there were 126 petitions on orders pending, against 116 in 1867; there were 407 affidavits filed, against 676 in 1867; there were 242 orders, exclusive of winding-up orders, against 231 in 1867; there were 218 appearances entered, and 233 claims made, against 374 and 883 respectively, in 1867. The total amount of debts claimed and adjudicated on was 16,965*l.* 19*s.* 9*d.*, against 119,608*l.* in 1867.

ESTATE AND INVESTMENT JOURNAL.

STOCK AND SHARE MARKETS.

The market is very quiet and devoid of business. The position of the European Assurance Society has very little effect in the city, such institutions ranking more as social or benefit companies than financial; but the excitement in the provinces, where the inner life of insurance business is less known, and whence the largest custom has been obtained, appears to exceed that caused by the collapse of the Albert, for the European always claimed to be in a manner a Royal and Governmental office.

There is no improvement in the Funds. The following were the fluctuations:

ELECTION LAW.

COUNTY ELECTORS.—A return has been just issued, showing the total number of electors on the registers now in force in the counties and divisions of counties in England and Wales, distinguishing those entitled to vote under the Reform Act 1867 as 12*s.* occupier from those entitled to vote in respect of all other qualifications; the total number of male occupiers, exclusive of those who are owners, at a gross estimated rental of 14*l.* and under 60*l.* in 1866; and the number of county electors who polled at the last general election. From this it appears that the number of 12*s.* occupiers in England was 185,457; all other qualifications, 543,323 total, 728,780. The number who polled was 389,830; and the number of male occupiers at estimated rental of 14*l.* and under 60*l.*, was 206,280. The number in Wales under these heads was 17,219, 45,917, 63,136, 16,130, and 18,033. The gross totals in both countries are 202,676, 589,240, 405,960, and 224,363. There were contests in 33 English and 3 Welsh counties; and no contests in 30 English and 9 Welsh counties.

THE REGISTRATIONS.—At the Registration Court for the City of London, John Maclean, 10, Billiter-street, claimed to be placed on the register as occupier of a counting-house. The objection was raised by the Conservatives. The claimant was the occupant of two rooms on the first floor, one of which he used for himself, and the other for his clerks. There was a door in the passage opening into each room, and a communicating door between each room. The outer door was locked at night, all the occupants having keys, so that they could obtain egress at any hour of the night; but during the day the street door was open, and the public had uninterrupted access to the staircase. The claim was made on the ground that the severance was sufficient to constitute a dwelling of itself within the meaning of the Act. The revising barrister gave judgment this morning, and said that the Act must be construed liberally. He held that the claim was good. On the application of Mr. Harper, a case was granted, as it involved a very large number of cases—about 800.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—STATEMENT OF AGREEMENT IN WRITING.—A bill for specific performance of an agreement to grant a lease, which was made by the plaintiff, through an agent, did not state the letter which constituted the agreement, or that there was such a letter; but only that the agent informed the plaintiff that the lessors had written and sent a letter agreeing to let the premises; but as a later paragraph of the bill alleged that the agent had entered into the said agreement as agent of the plaintiff, the passages coupled together were held to constitute a sufficient statement that there was an agreement in writing. It was also held that it was not necessary that the bill should state that the appointment of the agent by the plaintiff was by writing: (Heard v. Pilley, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 68. L.J.J.)

PRACTICE—APPEAL FOR COSTS ONLY.—A bill was filed against trustees to compel them to assign and transfer to the plaintiffs certain trust funds and premises. The bill prayed that the trustees might be ordered to pay the costs of the suit. Malins, V. C. made a decree as prayed for, and, being of opinion that the conduct of the trustees had been improper, ordered them to pay the costs of the suit. The trustees appealed from this decree so far as it ordered them to pay the costs of the suit. This being an appeal for costs only, it was held that it could not be entertained. The circumstance that, if the costs had been ordered to be paid out of the trust funds, the plaintiffs might have appealed from the decree so far as it directed payment of the costs out of these funds, was no reason why the trustees should be allowed to appeal from the decree actually made on the ground that the costs ought to have been ordered to come out of the trust funds: (Taylor v. Doiolen, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 70. L.J.J.)

VOLUNTARY BOND—ASSIGNEE—FORBEARANCE TO SUE.—A. gave to B. a voluntary bond without consideration, and on the understanding that B. could raise money on it without recourse to A. B. assigned it to C. for value. It was held that A. was entitled to have the bond set aside as against B., and also as against C., who took it subject to the equities subsisting between A. and B., there being nothing on the face of the bond to show the intention that it should be used as a negotiable instrument. Forbearance to sue is a good consideration for a promise to pay only when the right to sue exists: (Graham v. Johnson, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 77. M. R.)

PRACTICE—PRO CONFESSO—REQUISITE FORMS.—A defendant, having appeared and taken out a summons for time to answer interrogatories, was attached, and there was a return "non est," as he could not be found. On certificate of record and writ clerk, and evidence of service, and on fourteen days' notice, order made to take bill pro confesso: (Montgomery v. Cameron, 21 L. T. Rep. 85. V. C. M.)

TRUSTEE—SOLICITOR—INVESTMENT—CUSTOM OF BANKERS.—Though it is a general rule that trust-money misapplied by a trustee can, if it can be traced, be followed by the cestui que trust it is also a settled rule that in a bankers' account the drawings by the customer are to be attributed to the payments made to the credit of his account in the order of their date, unless there be any specific appropriation of any sum when paid to his credit. Therefore, where a solicitor paid to his own general account current (without making any specific appropriation), a sum of 5000*l.* received by him from a client for the purpose of being invested by him upon a mortgage, and died without having made the investment, it appearing that his drawing upon his account after the 5000*l.* was paid in, exceeded the amount of that sum and the balance then standing to his credit, it was held (reversing James v. C.), that the client was not entitled to an injunction to restrain the administrator of the solicitor from dealing with the balance to his credit at his bankers at the time of his death: (Brown v. Adams, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 71. L. J. Giffard.)

PROCLAMATIONS OF OUTLAWRY.—At the Sheriff's Court Red Lion-square, Mr. Slowman made proclamation of notices in outlawry against the following defendants: J. E. G. Shaw, H. C. Cook, H. F. Wilson, J. A. Waterhouse, H. S. Samuel, G. M. Hollings, C. Spencer, T. Allan, D. E. Cameron, R. G. Hill, W. Mayer, S. Lamond, H. H. Fox, S. P. Majoribanks, H. Johnstone, and Lord George Osborne Townshend. The next county court was appointed for the 14th Oct.

THE BANKRUPTCY OF MR. WM. UNWIN, OF SHEFFIELD.—Mr. William Unwin, solicitor, iron-founder, brewer, &c., of Sheffield, who was adjudicated a bankrupt three or four years ago, with liabilities to the extent of upwards of 100,000*l.*; subsequently prosecuted by the assignees for offences against the Bankruptcy Act and sentenced to nine months' imprisonment, and in May last struck off the roll of attorneys, came up at the Sheffield Bankruptcy Court, before Mr. Commissioner Ayrton, for his adjourned examination. His Honour ultimately adjourned the case till Nov. 17.

THE BENCH AND THE BAR.

THE QUEEN has been most graciously pleased to confer the dignity of a baronet upon Mr. Alderman Salomons, one of the members for Greenwich. This is a compliment alike to the citizens of London, the constituency of one of our largest metropolitan boroughs, to the financial and commercial world, and to our Jewish fellow-subjects. Sir David Salomons, five-and-thirty years ago, opened the doors of public office in this country to his co-religionists, by performing the duties of the office of High-Sheriff of Kent. Very shortly afterwards he fought a great battle for the Jews in the ward of Portsoken, for which he was elected alderman by a majority of the inhabitants, though he lost the gown by legal decision. This contention occasioned an important change in public feeling and an alteration of public policy in favour of those whose battle he fought, and the Jews have not been tardy to recognise the great service thus rendered to them. Mr. Salomons was afterwards elected an alderman of London for the ward of Cordwainers, and when he served as Lord Mayor, some fourteen or fifteen years since, the citizens of London memorialised the Government of the day to confer upon him some public distinction—an honour rarely offered to a retiring Lord Mayor. Alderman Salomons was the first Jew to take his seat in the House of Commons, which he did under memorable circumstances. He is a member of the Middle Temple.

MAGISTRATE AND PARISH LAWYER.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

BENEFIT SOCIETY—CERTIFICATE OF RULES.—The trustees of a building society by its 18th rule, were empowered to borrow money at interest on legal security, and to be indemnified by the society, the trustees not to be responsible, and the money borrowed not to exceed a certain proportion of the society's mortgages. On a bill filed charging that the rule was invalid, and to restrain such borrowing, it was held that the Barrister's certificate was conclusive only as to matters within his jurisdiction, and that the question as to the validity of the rule was one on which probably the plaintiffs might be entitled to relief: (Loing v. Reed, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 83. V. C. M.)

PUBLIC HEALTH ACT—COMPENSATION—PREMISES INJURIOUSLY AFFECTED.—By sect. 69 of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63 (Public Health Act) the local board may by notice require the owner of premises fronting, &c., any future street (not being a highway) to sewer, level, &c., the same, and in default the board may themselves execute the works, and the expenses incurred are to be paid by the said owner. By sect. 144 full compensation is to be made out of the general district rate to all persons sustaining any damage by reason of the exercise of any of the powers of the Act. E. T., an owner of premises having had a notice served upon him under the above section refused to comply therewith, whereupon the board themselves did the work, the result of which as alleged by the said E. T. was to obstruct the entrance to his house, and to render the access to his doorway dangerous and inconvenient, and for this he claimed compensation under the above 144th section. Held, that he was entitled to such compensation: (Reg. v. Wallasey Local Board of Health, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 90. Q. B.)

DECREASE OF CRIME IN THE NORTH.—The decrease of heavy cases of crime north of the Grampians has been most marked during the last six months. We noticed some days ago that only two cases were set down for trial at the Aberdeen

Circuit Court on Friday next; and it is almost as noteworthy that in the whole range of northern counties, from Morayshire to the Shetland Islands, included in the Inverness district, there are only three cases to come before their Lordships at Inverness on Tuesday, the 21st inst., making only five north of the Grampians, and none of them are important. —Scotsman.

ARTISANS' DWELLINGS ACT.—The parochial authorities of the metropolis are at last beginning to act upon Mr. Torrens' enactment. At a meeting of the Hackney District Board of Works, Mr. Runtz moved that the houses in Lawrence's buildings, West Hackney, numbered 1 to 6 and 8 to 11 inclusive, be closed. He remarked that the board had tried every means of bringing the premises into a habitable condition, and without effect. Fever, he said, was continually in the place, and to close up the houses was the only practical remedy to be adopted. Mr. Beck, who seconded the motion, said he had known the place for the last twenty-five years as a hotbed of fever, while the tenants of the houses were generally of an abandoned character. Mr. Gowland, who supported the motion, hoped this case might act as a caution to other landlords as to the state of repair in which they kept their houses. The motion was carried, as was also another for the demolition of a number of cottages in Sanford-lane, West Hackney. At the last meeting of the vestry of St. George the Martyr, Southwark, it was decided that the necessary proceedings should be taken in the case of certain houses in Little Surrey-street, which had been reported by the medical officer as unfit for human habitation, and dangerous to health.

SCENE AT THE PRESTON BREWSTER SESSIONS.—During the hearing of the applications for licences, at the Preston Brewster Sessions, a person in court uttered an exclamation, upon which Mr. Myres (one of the magistrates) made an observation to the effect, as it was understood, that "it seemed the infection extended beyond the bar." Mr. Edelston (one of the advocates), supposing that the observation was addressed to him, said: If you have anything to say to me say it out. Mr. Myres.—Sir? Mr. Edelston.—If you have anything to say to me, say it out. Mr. Myres.—Sir, I was not addressing you. Mr. Edelston.—Well, I take your word for that, but you seemed to do so. Mr. Myres.—No, I was not addressing you; you must behave respectfully to the Bench. Mr. Edelston.—I was never so ill-treated by any bench of magistrates as I have been here yesterday and to-day. Mr. Watson (another advocate).—I never saw anything like it in my life; it's a crying shame. Mr. Edelston.—The whole business seems to have been taken in hand by three magistrates; two others have been wholly ignored. Mr. Myres.—I hope the reporters will take down these observations. Mr. Edelston.—I don't care whether they do or not. I repeat, I never was so badly treated by any bench of magistrates as I have been here yesterday and to-day by this bench, and I have been here eight years. Mr. Watson.—I shall do all I can to get an alteration. Mr. Edelston.—There are as good men off the bench as on. (Laughter.) The business was then resumed.

REFORMATORIES IN LIVERPOOL.—At the Liverpool Police-court, last week, Mr. Clarke Aspinall, one of the borough magistrates, made the following statement: "Mr. Raffles having read the newspaper reports of the adjourned annual general session, held at Preston on the 9th inst., and having called my attention to the proceedings, and more especially to the remarks made on the occasion by Mr. Aspinall, a county magistrate, in which he is stated to have said that 'in Liverpool 75 per cent. of the children sent to reformatories failed to reach those institutions owing to inattention on the part of the magistrates to the details of the Reformatory Schools Act 1866,' and as such remarks are, in his judgment, likely to mislead the public, and to dishearten many of the best friends of such institutions, he has asked me to state that so far as this borough is concerned, during the year ending Aug. 31, 1869, 139 juveniles were sentenced to be sent to reformatories, and every one of such juveniles was so sent in strict accordance with the order of the justices. In the course of the same period 403 young children were ordered to be sent to certified industrial schools, and they are now all detained in such schools accordingly. In fact, no juvenile is ever sent to either reformatory or industrial school from this court without careful inquiry and a medical report, and when once so sent the order of the justices is strictly observed. During the same year 584 juveniles were brought before the magistrates of this borough and remanded for inquiry; but out of that number only the 139 were sent to reformatories. This may in some degree account for the error which Mr. Aspinall seems to have fallen into. I may mention that although Mr. Raffles is absent from court through indisposition, yet he is steadily recovering his strength and vigour."

REAL PROPERTY LAWYER AND CONVEYANCER.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

"WILL"—MEANING OF TERM "PROFITS."—A testatrix, by her will, gave certain real and personal property to her daughter, Mary Anne absolutely. She afterwards made a codicil to her will, which contained the following words:—"The profits arising in my will, which I have given my daughter Mary Anne, I give her for her life, and at her disposal by will into my surviving family, as she may think proper. In case she died without a will, then I request her property may be divided to the females in Mrs. L.'s, Mr. W.'s, and Mr. J.'s daughters, share and share alike." Mary Anne, by her will, in which she made no reference to her mother's will or codicil, gave all her property to her niece R., who was a grandchild of the testatrix: Held, first, that the words, "the profits arising in my will," were confined to the real estate of the testatrix. Secondly, that R. was one of the members of the testatrix's family, and one of the objects of the power. Thirdly, that Mary Anne's will was not a good execution of the power, but that it operated upon all her property not included in the codicil. Stillman v. Weedon, 16 Sim. 26, not followed: (Elgood v. Cole, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 80; M. R.).

WILL—PRECATORY TRUST.—B. gave all his property to his wife, "relying upon her doing what was right." He left her and four daughters surviving, to whom she by her will gave all her property in joint tenancy. This was held not to be a precatory trust: (Re Crookford's Estate, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 85. V.C.M.).

D." set and subscribed to the said deed, is of the proper handwriting of the said C. D.; and that the name "A. B." set and subscribed thereto as the witness attesting the execution thereof, is of the proper handwriting of me this deponent. And I make, &c. [statutory conclusion].

161. Declaration by a vendor that there are no incumbrances affecting hereditaments.

I, A. B., of &c. [vendor], do solemnly and sincerely declare that I have not committed any act whereby I am liable to be adjudicated a bankrupt, nor have I at any time heretofore petitioned any court for the relief of insolvent debtors, or assigned my estate for the benefit of or in trust for creditors, and that I am not in anywise indebted to Her Majesty, Queen Victoria, and that there are no Crown debts, judgments, writs, or other process of execution, pending suits, or incumbrances of any kind whatsoever registered or recorded against me in anywise affecting the piece of land and buildings thereon erected, situate in _____ street aforesaid, recently sold and agreed to be conveyed by myself [and others] to C. D., of &c. [purchaser], for £____, the conveyance whereof is intended to bear even date herewith. And I declare that I [and my mortgagees] have full and absolute power to grant and convey the said hereditaments and premises to the said C. D., so that the same may be held by him, his heirs, and assigns, free from all incumbrances whatsoever [except, if so, the restrictive covenants affecting the same] created or occasioned by me, or any person or persons claiming through, under, or in trust for me. (a) And I make, &c. [statutory conclusion].

162. Declaration by a mortgagor of chattels that there are no incumbrances affecting them. (b)

I, A. B., of &c. [mortgagor], do solemnly and sincerely declare that I have not committed any act whereby I am liable to be adjudicated bankrupt, nor at any time heretofore petitioned any Court of Bankruptcy, or assigned my estate for the benefit of or in trust for creditors, and that there are no judgments, writs, or other process of execution, pending suits, or incumbrances of any kind, affecting the fixtures, furniture, effects, and things now in, upon, or about the dwelling-house and premises in _____ street aforesaid, occupied by me, which I have this day assigned by way of mortgage to C. D., of &c. [mortgagee], for securing to him the repayment of £____, and interest thereon, which mortgage bears even date herewith. And I declare that I have good right and full power to assign the said fixtures, furniture, effects, and things to the said C. D., his executors, administrators, and assigns, in manner aforesaid; and that the same may be held by him and them free from incumbrances. And I declare that so long as any money shall be due to the said C. D. on the said security, I will not do or commit any act or thing whereby the said security may be prejudiced or affected, or remove, conceal, or dispose of any of the property therein comprised, without the previous written consent of the said C. D. And I make, &c. [statutory conclusion].

163. Declaration as to identity of a plot of land.

I, A. B., of &c. [declarant], do solemnly and sincerely declare that the plot of land coloured in the plan hereto annexed, marked "A," is the plot of land now intended to be conveyed by C. D., of &c. [vendor], to E. F., of &c. [purchaser], and is a portion of a certain piece of freehold land on the _____ side of _____ in _____ aforesaid, containing _____ square yards, and of a piece of freehold land immediately adjoining, containing _____ square yards, which two pieces of land were by indenture dated, &c., conveyed by _____ to _____. And I further say that the piece of land firstly described in and conveyed by the said indenture of, &c., is shown on the said plan as to a portion thereof by being coloured _____, and as to the other portion thereof secondly described in and conveyed by the said indenture of &c., by being coloured _____. And I make, &c. [statutory conclusion].

164. Declaration by a husband that his deceased wife had no separate estate. (c)

I, A. B., of &c. [husband], do solemnly and sincerely declare that I intermarried with my late wife C., then C. D., of &c., spinster, on the _____ day of _____ 18____, and continued to live with her until her death, which happened on the _____ day of _____ 18____. And I say that my said wife C. was not, nor was or were any person or persons in trust for her, seised, possessed of, or entitled to any real or personal estate or property of any kind or nature whatever to or for her sole and separate use at any time during the said coverture, or at the time of her said death, as I know of my own knowledge. And I make, &c. [statutory conclusion].

(a) See as to judgments 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110; 2 & 3 Vict. c. 11; 18 & 19 Vict. c. 15; 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38; and 27 & 28 Vict. c. 112.

(b) See hereon Reg. v. Meakin, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 544.

(c) This, or a similar declaration, is required by some insurance offices before paying over policy moneys due to the representatives of a married woman at her death, and in their instructions they generally require it to be taken before a justice of the peace.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

WINDING-UP—MINING COMPANY.—A mining company was formed upon the cost-book principle. In Dec. 1865 calls were made on the shareholders, which H. and J., two of the shareholders, failed to pay. In Feb. 1866, G., who was a creditor of the company for a considerable sum, at the instigation of the company commenced an action against H. for the debt due by the company. The company were desirous by means of this action to compel H. to pay his calls. When the action came on for trial, and a jury had been sworn, it was arranged that a verdict should be found against H. for the amount of calls due from him and costs, and this having been done, judgment was entered up against H. for the amount of the verdict. In May 1866, G., at the instigation of the company, brought a similar action against J. The sum claimed in this action included a part of the debt claimed in the action against H. as well as a debt subsequently incurred by the company. At the trial of this second action the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff for a sum which was afterwards raised by the court to 787l. Before judgment could be entered up J. petitioned to wind up the company, and a winding-up order was made, and also an order to stay proceedings in the action by G. against J. After the action against J. various sums were paid by the company to G. These sums exceeded the 787l., but the evidence showed that the intention of the company in paying them was to apply them in discharge of the debt due to G. before the action against H. On the footing of such an appropriation a balance remained due from the company to G., and he carried in a claim in the winding-up for that balance, and that claim was admitted by the Vice-Warden of the Stannaries Court. Upon appeal by J.: Held, that the claim was properly admitted, the company having a right to attribute the payments made by them to H. to the earlier debt: (Ex parte Jackson, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 67. L.J.J.).

SCHEME—DEBENTURE HOLDERS—RAILWAY.—A scheme of arrangement with its creditors by a railway company under the Railway Companies Act 1867, had been assented to by three-fourths in value of the debenture holders. In the absence of fraud this assent was held to be binding on all the debenture holders, but not on outside creditors: (Re the East and West Junction Railway Company, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 86. V.C.J.).

IMPROVEMENT BILL—PRACTICE—LOCAL STAND.—A Bill was promoted by the corporation of St. H., acting under a charter of incorporation newly granted, for the extinction of local bodies with taxing powers previously existing within the borough, and for conferring additional powers on the corporation. Five petitions were presented, four by landowners, and one by owners, lessees, and occupiers of land, mines, and collieries within the borough limits, complaining that their property would be injured by the transfer and the granting of the proposed powers; and more especially that they would be deprived of the protection from taxation afforded to mineral and agricultural property in St. H. by a clause in an Improvement Act of 1855, proposed to be repealed. None of the existing public bodies petitioned against the Bill, and none of the petitioner's lands were scheduled for compulsory taking: Held, that the owners whose mineral and agricultural property was or might be affected by the Bill, had each a locus standi; but that only such of the owners, lessees, &c., "as were owners of property within the area affected by the Bill" were entitled to be heard: (St. Helen's Borough Improvement Bill, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 91. Ct. of Referees.)

(a) In sending out a power of attorney to act in foreign countries, it is customary for the party to execute it in the presence of two attesting witnesses, if two can be conveniently had, and to cause it to be verified by an attesting witness by a declaration of the due execution, and also to cause a notarial certificate, authenticating it, under the signature and seal of a notary, to accompany the declaration and power. Further, it is in general recommended to get the latter also authenticated, when it can be done. Under the seal of the consul of the foreign country. If a power of attorney be sent out to a British colony or possession, it is more frequent to have the declaration of due execution made before, and authenticated under the seal of, the mayor of the place where it is administered, if it can be conveniently done, than by a notary: (Brooke on the Office of a Notary, 187, 189.)

CHANCERY CHAMBERS.

Friday, Sept. 17.
(Before Vice-Chancellor JAMES.)

THE ALBERT LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY.

The Vice-Chancellor sat in chambers as the vacation judge to hear the several petitions, five in number, presented to the Court of Chancery to wind-up the affairs of the Albert Life Assurance Company. The matter would, according to practice, have been heard at the chambers of the chief clerk, but it was represented that the court would be the only place, from the crowd expected, to hear the case, and it was arranged that the hearing should be held therein. The case was appointed for eleven o'clock, and the court was densely thronged in a short time. His Honour appeared minus his judicial costume, and some of the barristers who appeared, robed had to divest themselves of their professional habiliments. In the place allotted to Queen's Counsel appeared Mr. Karlake, Mr. Amphlett, Mr. Edlin, Mr. Webster, Mr. Milward, and Mr. T. Hughes, while at the outer bar in the case were Mr. N. Higgins, Mr. Cookson, Mr. Fischer, Mr. Cracknall, and many others.

It was twelve o'clock before the case was reached, the Vice-Chancellor taking the other applications before him, and soon after it was called on a barrister complained that he could not get a seat, and his Honour invited him within the bar, but he declined the invitation to sit with Her Majesty's counsel.

Higgins opened the first petition on the part of Mr. M'Lachlan for a winding-up order, and wished to state what had been done since the petition had been presented. There were now five petitions before the court. Meetings had been held under the sanction of the court, and all premiums paid had been kept separately. The learned counsel enumerated some figures, and said about 1000*l.* per day was payable.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said the only question he had to deal with was whether there should be a winding-up order, and he thought it was the best course to be adopted. It had been stated that he had authorised meetings to be held, and that at an expense of 10,000*l.* He could only say he had done nothing of the kind.

Higgins assured the court that the expense of the meetings had only been 25*l.*

Edlin asked to be heard on the case before a winding-up order was made.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said he would hear all, but it seemed plain that a winding-up order was necessary, and the point was on whose petition it was to be granted. He had directed that a distinct account should be kept of the premiums paid in since the commencement of the proceedings, so that those who paid their money could have it returned intact, without being sweated for costs or any other expenses.

Higgins said a distinct account had been kept.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR again expressed his opinion that there should be a winding-up order. He would hear what the several parties had to say.

T. Hughes, Q. C. (with whom was Ince) appeared for policy-holders, and complained of Mr. Kirby.

Edlin also appeared for policy-holders, and urged that the first petition by Mr. M'Lachlan was in the interest of the company, and that the second was collusive with the first.

Amphlett, Q. C. (Joyce with him) represented numerous policy-holders on the petition of Mr. Wilson.

Webster Q. C. was also heard.

Karlake, Q. C. gave his adhesion to the first petition or the first and second petition. They now all seemed agreed that there should be a winding-up order made; indeed, no other course was open, and the only question was, on whose petition it should be granted.

Milward, Q. C. was for the Liverpool policy-holders.

Cookson represented the committee of the Indian shareholders, and was in a different position. He wished, in the event of a winding-up order, to have notice of matters before the Chief Clerk.

Several other learned gentlemen appeared for various parties. The barristers in the case were about twenty in number. Some were for the first petition, and others for another petitioner to be joined. Others represented the London policy-holders, and a learned gentleman caused some amusement by saying that he represented the "original" London meeting. One barrister rose after another, and, being divested of wig and gown, and some without the privilege of a seat, it was difficult to ascertain their names, or for whom they appeared.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR expressed himself, after hearing the various parties, that there must be a compulsory winding-up of the company, and that the best course would be, in order to meet the views of all parties, creditors, shareholders, and policy-holders, to appoint Mr. McLachlan, the first petitioner, and Mr. Wilson, for whom Mr. Amphlett appeared, and for other policy-holders to a large extent. All interests would be represented, and on those two petitions he should make the order. He had great pleasure in saying that not one farthing would be allowed as costs except on those petitions and to the provisional liquidator.

The expression of this opinion as to costs caused a murmur of apparent satisfaction in court, and the Vice-Chancellor was understood to add that a public company was not to be considered as a carcass to be preyed upon.

Order made for winding-up, with costs to the company and the others mentioned.

COUNTY COURTS.

DARLINGTON COUNTY COURT.

Thursday, Sept. 23.
(Before E. R. TURNER, Esq., Judge.)

WHITFIELD v. BOWSER.

Practice—Changing the attorney.

In this case, which was a plaint in equity, Stevenson appeared for the plaintiff.

Webster, for the defendant, objected to Mr. Stevenson appearing, he not being the solicitor in the suit, as appeared on the face of the proceedings. He referred to the 4th rule, of Order 23, which states that where any party to a suit or proceeding changes his attorney he shall give notice in writing of such change to the registrar, stating the name or firm and place of business of the new attorney, and the registrar shall file the notice. He stated that no such notice had been given.

Stevenson said that the rule which prohibited an attorney appearing for another did not apply to equity proceedings.

The JUDGE held that the County Court Acts applied, in this respect, to both law and equity.

Stevenson then stated that a party could change his attorney at any time, and that he held a retainer from the plaintiff, which he had obtained, in order to get over the objection.

The JUDGE decided that that was sufficient, and as the rule did not fix any time within which notice of the change of attorney shall be given to the registrar, the notice might be given now.

Stevenson then handed in his retainer, which the registrar filed.

BANKRUPTCY LAW.

THE NEW LAW OF BANKRUPTCY.

THE consolidation and amendment of the law of bankruptcy has been effected by the Bankruptcy Act 1869, which will come into operation on the first of January next. The history of previous attempts to place this most important branch of modern commercial law upon a satisfactory footing, and to adapt it to the modern requirements of the commercial world, is a history of successive failures, arising in some measure from the absence of any unanimity of opinion as to the principles upon which a bankruptcy code should be founded, but also from an indisposition to deal with the subject. Comprehensively, and regardless of traditionary principles, in the Act of 1869 these errors have been avoided as far as possible, and it is to be hoped that the last effort of the Legislature may not prove so fertile a source of litigation and judicial legislation as the Act of 1861—that the idea of resorting to bankruptcy may no longer inspire terror in the commercial world; that the court may not remain a city of refuge for fraudulent debtors; and that the facilities of escape from the penal clauses of a Bankruptcy Act may not in future be so great as to elicit from a learned commissioner the satirical but true remark that a man must be a fool as well as a knave to place himself in peril of them. The doors of the Court of Bankruptcy will at least be closed against those who may flee to it in order to escape their creditors; in future they must be brought there. No man will be able to thwart those to whom he is indebted by filing his own petition, and to deride them from a place of safety; the remedy in bankruptcy will be at the disposal of the creditor, not of the debtor. It will remain a shield for misfortune, against the too exacting, but it will cease to be the paradise of knaves which Lord Westbury created.

The leading principles upon which the new Act is based are that the property of an insolvent should be equally and without preference distributed among his creditors; that this should be effected as inexpensively as possible under the direction of the creditors themselves, who are the parties most interested in the realisation of a bankrupt estate, and with official supervision rather than active interference; that while a bankrupt should be, at least, partially released from the consequences of inevitable misfortune, the whole of his property, and in certain cases even his future labour, should be rendered available for the payment of his debts; and that an infringement of the provisions of a merciful code should be checked by the infliction of certain and adequate punishment. In previous statutes the protection of the debtor has had prominence; in the present one the lesson taught by the increase of commercial fraud has not been disregarded, and the just rights and expectations of creditors have been as far as possible secured, and their interests committed to their own charge. Honesty is made the best commercial policy.

The chief provisions of the Act are calculated to effect the objects in view. Greater facilities are afforded to creditors for securing an adjudication of bankruptcy; the possibility of an insolvent's protection by secured, and therefore disinterested and probably friendly, creditors, has been guarded against by permitting them to exercise the rights and privileges of creditors only in respect of the unsecured balance of their debts; and the most beneficial realisation of the bankrupt's property will be effected by the substitution of a paid and responsible trustee, acting under the directions of the creditors, given by resolution and a sub-committee of inspection, in lieu of a salaried army of messengers, official assignees, and unpaid, and therefore often merely nominal, assignees on behalf of the creditors. The active assistance of the bankrupt in the realisation and distribution of his estate is very properly demanded by the Act. He is required to produce a statement of his affairs to the first meeting of his creditors, to submit as before to a public examination, to give an inventory of his property, to prepare a list of his creditors and debtors, and of the debts due to and from them respectively, to submit to examination in respect of his property or his creditors, attend meetings of his creditors, wait when required on the trustee, and generally to fulfil his every reasonable requirement, and to comply with every rule or order of the court, upon pain of punishment for contempt. Less will probably be heard in future of the negative defiance of an insolvent.

In future a debtor may be adjudged bankrupt upon the petition of one or more of his creditors to whom he is in the aggregate indebted in the liquidated sum of 50*l.* upon any one of the following grounds, termed "acts of bankruptcy," one of which must have occurred within six months of the presentation of the petition:

1. That he has made a conveyance or assignment to trustees for the benefit of his creditors.
2. That he has made a fraudulent conveyance, gift, delivery, or transfer of any part of his property.
3. That he has, with intent to defeat or delay his creditors, done any of the following things:
 - a. Departed out of England;
 - b. Remained out of England;
 - c. That, being a trader, he has departed from his dwelling house or otherwise absented himself;
 - d. That he has filed in the prescribed manner in the court a declaration admitting his inability to pay his debts;
 - e. Seizure and sale of a trader's goods upon an execution for a debt exceeding 50*l.*;
 - f. Service of a debtor's summons similar in form to a writ, requiring payment of a sum exceeding 50*l.*, and nonpayment, or not securing or compounding for the payment of such sum by a trader within seven days, or by a non-trader within three weeks.

When an order of adjudication has been made, the bankruptcy will be deemed to have commenced at the time of the completion of the first act of bankruptcy upon which it is founded; the order must afterwards be advertised; the court may then restrain suits against the bankrupt, and appoint a receiver; and must, as soon as may be, summon a general meeting of his creditors for the appointment of a trustee in whom the property of the bankrupt shall vest, and for the election of a committee of inspection.

The provisions relating to the discharge of the bankrupt, and to the status of a discharged and undischarged bankrupt are almost entirely new, and are based upon the principles that an insolvent ought, in the absence of special circumstances, to describe the state of his affairs to his creditors, and provide for the equal distribution of his estate before his circumstances have become so desperate as to prevent his paying a substantial dividend, which the Legislature has fixed at 10s. in the pound; and that no man is justified when clearly insolvent, in seeking to retrieve his position by speculation at the expense and hazard of others. With this view it is provided by the 48th section of the Act that a bankrupt shall not be discharged unless it is proved to the court that either a dividend of not less than 10s. in the pound has been paid out of his property, or might have been paid except through the negligence or fraud of the trustee, or that a resolution has been passed by a majority in number representing three-fourths in value of the creditors to the effect that the bankruptcy or failure to pay 10s. in the pound has, in their opinion, arisen from circumstances for which the bankrupt cannot justly be held responsible, and that they desire that an order of discharge should be granted to him. Whether these provisions are calculated to effect the object in view; whether the power placed in the hands of the creditors of acting as judges in their own cause will be too exactly exercised; whether the clause will have the effect of inducing insolvents to make large purchases in contemplation of bankruptcy in order that the minimum dividend may be realised, are questions which must be answered practically by the working of the Act itself; but the evil can scarcely be greater, or in many cases more cruel, than that of infinitesimal dividends which it is intended to remedy.

Fraud will, at least, be no longer legally protected. The court may suspend or withhold altogether the bankrupt's order of discharge if it appears that he has made default in giving up possession to his creditors; or that a prosecution has been commenced against him as a fraudulent debtor under the Debtor's Act 1869, and the bankrupt will not be released by it for any debt incurred by fraud or breach of trust.

The status of an undischarged bankrupt has been humanely determined in such a manner as by giving respite for three years from all pecuniary claims upon him, to afford the bankrupt the opportunity of retrieving his position and achieving the condition of discharge by paying his creditors 10s. in the pound, while the non-fulfilment of the said conditions for three years from the close of the bankruptcy, will subject him to the necessity of paying his unpaid balance of the debts proved in the bankruptcy.

In the re-constitution of the Court of Bankruptcy, the Legislature has recognised the expediency of localising justice, and of removing that immunity to fraud which was frequently accorded to it by the distance and expense of the remedy. In the future, this must cease; the tribunals are at our own doors. The district courts, with the exception of that for the metropolis, are swept away by the new Act, and the County Court within the district of which the debtor resides or carries on his business will, in future, have the jurisdiction upon his bankruptcy; while the London court is constituted the appellate tribunal, and will be presided over by a Chief Judge in Bankruptcy, whose decisions may be again reviewed by the Court of Appeal in Chancery, and ultimately by the House of Lords.

Very extensive general powers are conferred upon the London and local bankruptcy courts. In order to render a resort to other tribunals unnecessary, they are authorised to decide all questions of priorities, and all points whatever, whether of law or of fact, arising in any case of bankruptcy under their cognizance, or which they may deem expedient or necessary to decide for the purpose of doing complete justice, or making a complete distribution of property; no court is to be restrained by the order of any other court: and questions of fact need no longer be remitted to any other tribunal, but may be tried by a jury summoned before the court itself. The bankruptcy courts in England are upon request to be auxiliary to each other, and those of Scotland and Ireland to those in England, and vice versa.

The fourth part of the Act deals with bankruptcy procedure, which is considerably simplified. The provisions relating to the commencement of bankruptcy proceedings are similar to those existing at present; with the important exception that the petition cannot in future be presented by the bankrupt himself, but must be filed by one of his creditors.

It must be verified by affidavit; the proceedings may be transferred by order to any other court of bankruptcy than that in which they are initiated; they may be similarly stayed with a view to arrangement by liquidation, and formal defects are not to invalidate the proceedings.

Ample powers and facilities are provided for securing an adjudication against an insolvent and his attendance before the court.

The debtor may be arrested if it be made to appear to the court that he is about to go abroad or to quit his place of residence with a view of avoiding service of the petition, or examination in respect of his affairs, or otherwise delaying or embarrassing the proceedings in bankruptcy; or, if the court believes that he is about to remove any part of his property, or has concealed, or is likely to conceal, books, papers, or documents; or if after the service of the petition, or after adjudication, he remove any property in his possession of above the value of 5*l.* without the leave of the trustee; or if without good cause he fails to attend any examination ordered by the court.

The sections relating to the devolution of property on the trustee enact that in the case of execution for debts exceeding in amount 50*l.*, the proceeds shall, after deducting the expenses, be paid, in the event of the debtor becoming bankrupt, to the trustee, in case notice of the filing of a petition in bankruptcy shall be given to the officer within fourteen days from the day of sale; that the profits of an ecclesiastical benefice held by a bankrupt may be sequestrated, subject to an annual allowance to him while he performs the clerical duty; and that a reasonable proportion of the pay or pensions of bankrupt officers in the army or navy, and of civil servants, or of the salary of other servants, may be appropriated to the payment of their debts.

As an additional security for the proper performance of the duties of the trustee, he must file accounts periodically with the comptroller in bankruptcy, and must, at the close of the bankruptcy, make a full report to the creditors, and obtain a release from the court.

Settlements of property by a trader, except those made before, and in consideration of, marriage, or in favour of a purchaser or incumbent in good faith and for valuable consideration, or made on or for the wife or children of the settlor of property which has accrued to him after marriage in right of his wife, will be absolutely avoided by bankruptcy within two years from the date of the settlement, and the same result will ensue upon bankruptcy within ten years, unless the parties claiming under the settlement can prove that the settlor was at the time of making the settlement able to pay all his debts without the aid of the settled property.

Payments, conveyances, or transfers of property, obligations, and judicial proceedings made, taken, or suffered by an insolvent in favour of any creditor, and for the purpose of preferring him, and not in good faith and for valuable consideration, will be absolutely void against a trustee in bankruptcy appointed within three months. On the other hand, payments to, and contracts and dealings with, a bankrupt, in good faith and for value, prior to the adjudication, and without notice of any prior act of bankruptcy are unimpeachable; and similarly conveyances, transfers, charges, delivery of goods, payments of money, and other contracts and dispositions made by a bankrupt in good faith and for valuable consideration, before the date of the adjudication, with any person not having notice of a prior act of bankruptcy, will, subject to the previous provisions in reference to the avoidance of voluntary settlements, and to the clauses relating to fraudulent preferences, be valid, notwithstanding any prior act of bankruptcy. So executions or attachments against a bankrupt's land, executed in good faith by seizure, or against his goods so executed by seizure and sale, before the adjudication, will, subject to the retention of the proceeds of executions of above the amount of 50*l.* for fourteen days, be sustained if the execution creditor had not at the time of execution notice of a prior act of bankruptcy.

The full discovery of the bankrupt's property is attempted to be secured by the power given to the court of summoning before it the bankrupt, his wife, or any person suspected of having any property of the bankrupt, or of being indebted to him, or whom the court may deem capable of giving information upon the subject, and such persons may be examined on oath and required to produce any documents in their custody or power.

LIVERPOOL BANKRUPTCY COURT.

Sept. 14, 1869.

(Before Mr. Commissioner THRING.)

Ex parte BLATHERWICK, re LIGHTFOOT AND FERNHOUGH.

B. A. 1849, sect. 125—Order and disposition—Specific appropriation—Custom of trade.

Where a purchaser of rice in bulk pays for same, but allows it to remain in vendor's mill, and the same is not distinguishable from other rice in the mill:

Held, although there was some evidence of a custom of millers to allow rice they sold to remain in the mill for a time after its purchase, yet where it was not distinguishable from the vendor's rice, it passed to the assignees under sect. 125.

Quære, whether the property in the rice passed to the purchaser at all, it never having been specifically appropriated?

Evans, solicitor, appeared for the purchaser of the rice, and Parkinson for the assignees.

The arguments advanced are sufficiently referred to in the following judgment of the learned Commissioner:—The bankrupts Messrs. Lightfoot and Fernihough were rice millers at Liverpool. On the 16th April, 1869, they sold 150 bags of Dacca rice to Mr. Blatherwick, of Sheffield. The purchase money, 157*l.* 16*s.* 10*d.*, was paid on the 23rd April, and ninety-one bags delivered about that time; the remaining fifty-nine bags were in the mill of the bankrupts at the time of their adjudication in July 1869. An application has been made to this court on behalf of Mr. Blatherwick for an order directing the assignees to deliver to him the fifty-nine bags in question. This is resisted by them on two grounds; first, that there was no specific appropriation of the bags so as to pass the property to the purchaser; secondly, that if it did pass, the rice was at the time of the adjudication in the possession, order, and disposition of the bankrupt with the consent of the true owner. It appears from the evidence in this case that a cargo of rice, when consigned to the miller, is usually distinguished by the trade mark of the ship painted on each bag; the rice is then cleaned at the mill, returned to the same bags without any additional mark, and sold from the bulk indiscriminately by the rice miller to his customers, according to their respective wants. Here the rice formed part of a quantity which was all marked M. 1, and kept together in the ordinary way in the same part of the mill, and there was nothing to distinguish this rice from any other rice, the property of the bankrupts, save the ship-mark on the bags. After the delivery of ninety-one bags to Mr. Blatherwick in April, there were ninety-four bags left, marked M. 1. Of these the warehouseman had received orders from his masters to deliver fifty-nine to Mr. Blatherwick, twenty-nine to J. Smith and Co., and five to J. Newsome and Son, and had made entries accordingly in his stock book. (One bag out of the consignment remained unsold.) He further states that it was not the custom to appropriate any particular bags to a purchaser, but on the presentation of a delivery order, to take the first bags which came to hand out of the whole lot to make up the number required. It is contended on the part of Mr. Blatherwick that it is the custom in the rice trade for rice millers to allow goods sold by them to remain in the mills or warehouses to the order of the purchasers, and to treat the entries in their stock books as a specific appropriation of the goods if paid for. This contention is supported by numerous affidavits. Only one witness has been examined in court—Mr. T. Crosfield, a rice miller of fifteen years' standing, who has given his evidence in the fairest and clearest manner. He gives a much more intelligible account of the usage of the trade than that derivable from the stereotyped forms of affidavits. He tells us that after a sale of rice it usually remains in the warehouse no longer than is reasonably necessary to enable the purchaser to fetch it away; that the bags of rice sold are not separated from the bulk and removed to another part of the warehouse, nor are the names of the purchasers affixed to the goods; that if they remain more than a month in the warehouse of the miller, he is entitled by the custom of the trade to charge warehouse rent; but that goods seldom remained so long, but if they do, rent is rarely charged. He was further examined with respect to the relative proportions of sold and unsold rice ordinarily to be found in a mill, and his answer was, "not 1-20th part of the rice in our mill belongs to anyone else than ourselves, and going into a rice mill I should not expect to see more than 1-20th belonging to any other than the reputed owner." It is perfectly clear from the facts of this case that the 59 bags of rice in question were never earmarked, and thus specifically appropriated to the purchaser; it is equally clear that a delivery order was not given by Mr. Blatherwick within a reasonable time according to the ordinary usage, but the delay is explained by his affidavit, where he states that the rice was held under a special agreement by the bankrupts, as bailees for him, to be delivered to his order. I very much doubt whether the property in the 59 bags ever passed to Mr. Blatherwick within the principle of the decisions cited by Mr. Parkinson in his argument. In Godts v. Rose, 17 C. P. Rep. 237, Willes, J., states, "The law on this subject is to be found in the judgment of Parke, J., in Dixon v. Yates, 5 B. & Ad. 313, that in the case of a sale of unascertained goods, until both parties have assented to the appropriation of some particular goods to satisfy the contract, the property in them does not pass." But it is unnecessary to discuss the effect of the entries in the stock-book with reference to the numerous cases bearing on the point, as I am of opinion that the present question must be governed by sect. 125 Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act 1849. Now it has long been a settled principle of law, that the possession of the bankrupt alone will not raise a presumption of ownership where there is a custom of trade for the vendor to keep possession after a sale of the things purchased, until the purchaser removes them to their place of destination; and it has been laid down by Kelly, C. B., in Priestley v. Pratt, L. J. 39, Ex. cited by Mr. Evans as most favourable to the applicant, "That the custom in the trade must be so well known that it must be presumed that all who are engaged in that trade must necessarily be acquainted with it." Now, when we look to the circumstances of this case, can it be said that the custom is so notorious that it is impossible for anyone who knows anything of the course of dealing amongst rice millers not to be aware that rice when sold is generally kept in the possession of the vendor until it suits the convenience of the purchaser to take it away? So far from it, if the purchaser does not remove his rice within the short period of a month, he is chargeable with warehouse rent; again, there is nothing to distinguish the bags of rice sold from those unsold, and Mr. Crosfield says that any rice miller on entering a mill would expect 95 per cent. of the rice to be the property of the reputed owner; not only that, but the custom for the vendors to retain the rice for so long a period as three months is rebutted by the evidence of the applicant himself, who states that the rice was held for him by the bankrupts under a special agreement. This is not the place to discuss the policy of the order and disposition clause; suffice it to say that it has been retained in the new Bankruptcy Act at the instance of the mercantile community, and I think that it is applicable to the present case. I therefore find that the fifty-nine bags of rice, the subject-matter of this application, were at the time of adjudication in the order and disposition of the bankrupts by the consent and permission of Mr. Blatherwick, the true owner. The application will consequently be refused, but under the circumstances no order for costs will be made against the applicant.

Ears intimated that as it was extremely probable he should take the opinion of the Court of Appeal upon the question, the amount of deposit had better be named.

The court fixed 10*l*.

STUDY OF THE LAW.—I hope Mr. Halliday will be obliging enough to answer the query of "S. R. G.," addressed to him in last week's LAW TIMES; and in doing so, I think he would afford useful information to those who are reading up for the "Intermediate," by naming the minimum number of books to be studied, those he deems indispensable, and suggesting any others he pleases by way of "extras" to those students who have sufficient diligence and application to attack them, of whom it is presumed there would be a considerable proportion. But it seems to me the one thing needful for the article clerk, just entering on his studies, to know, is the precise and definite amount of work he has to do, which, if diligently disposed of, will probably leave him some portion of the two and-a-half years to devote to special subjects, as choice or circumstances may dictate. For instance, if Williams's Real Property (8th edit.), Smith's Action at Law, Hunter's Suit in Equity, Cap. 1 of Chitty on Contracts, and Chambers's Bookkeeping are admitted to be sufficient, the student can, without much misgiving, go to work at and dispose of these, "read them carefully and read them twice," and then, assuming him to have some moderate amount of industry and curiosity, he will, in all probability, read Smith's Equity Jurisprudence, and vol. 1 of Stephen's Commentaries. Possibly, Mr. Halliday is not in town at present, and, in that event, perhaps some other qualified gentleman will be good enough to say, for the benefit of "all whom it may concern," if the books above-named furnish sufficient material to pass the "Intermediate," and, if not, in what particulars the list is defective. NOTES AND QUERIES ON POINTS OF PRACTICE.

[N.B.—None are inserted unless the name and address of the writers are sent, not necessarily for publication, but as a guarantee for bona fides.]

Queries.

91. TITLE-DEEDS—SECURITY.—A and B (husband and wife) deposit the title-deeds of freeholds, of which A is seized jure mariti, as an equitable security for A's banking account. A memorandum of deposit is made and signed only by A and B. Upon the death of A, leaving money owing on the security, the question arises whether the deposit is good as against the wife, she not having acknowledged the instrument? Can any of your readers refer me to any cases bearing on the question? H. F. A. D.

92. JOINT ASSAULT—POWER OF COMMITTING MAGISTRATE TO SEPARATE OFFENCE.—A and B, master and mate of a ship, were charged with having assaulted, &c., C, a seaman. The evidence proved as follows: C was ordered by B, to do certain work which, in consequence of a bad hand, he, C, was unable to perform. B reported this to A, who sent for C, and some words passed between A and C, when A seized C by the arm and collar, and held him while B struck him four violent blows on the head with a belaying pin. A witness who was near rushed up and made A release his hold of C, who almost instantly fell on the deck insensible. Under the above circumstances, was the magistrate justified in separating the offence? Committing B, for trial, but discharging A, on his entering into recognisances to appear if called upon to receive judgment. The effect, and probably the object, of the above proceeding, was to enable A to become a witness for B, on his trial. J. B. W.

93. ARTICLES OF CLERKSHIP—DATE.—I should be glad to know, through your columns, whether articles of clerkship must necessarily be dated on the day they are signed. Can they be dated back, provided that the clerk was in the office during the time to be reclaimed? A. E. D.

94. CHURCH RATES.—Compulsory Church-rates being abolished by 31 & 32 Vict. c. 109, can persons not intending to pay the rate vote for or against it? If so, by what authority? If not, how is their intention to be ascertained? Q. X.

95. PURCHASE OF PROPERTY—INCUMBRANCES.—Will any of your readers inform me what they consider it is the duty of a purchaser of real estate and of leasehold property to do for the purpose of ascertaining whether there are any incumbrances affecting it? It is still, I believe, almost the universal custom to make all the usual searches; but is a purchaser, in the present state of the law, bound by any incumbrance in the absence of express notice? R. H.

THE Law and the Lawyers.

It was as we had feared. Dread of the Bridgewater Inquiry drove the Lord Justice Clerk to madness, in the crisis of which he first cut his throat, and finding probably that the work of death was not quite done, he threw himself into the river. He was a man universally respected and beloved in private life, and an excellent Judge, but he was almost morbidly sensitive.

Mr. MONCRIEFF, the Lord Advocate of Scotland, has been appointed to the office of Lord Justice-Clerk, in room of the late Mr. PATTON.

It must be remembered in making Income Tax deductions from rents, interest, &c., that the rate from March 31 was only 5d., and not 6d., in the pound as before.

We hear that the announced "Property Protection League" will be organised as soon as the holidays are over, and they are now fast coming to a close.

Dining in Hall has hitherto been a convenience as well as a pleasure to many members of the Middle Temple. We question whether it will continue to be so after next January when a new regulation comes into force, providing that all dinners shall be paid for beforehand, and that no member will be allowed to dine who has not provided himself with the dinner ticket which the Inn will issue.

The Marquis of HARTINGTON has stated in a speech at Lismore that the Cabinet has not yet assembled to consider their measures for next Session, but he can venture to say that they will sanction no scheme for dealing with the Irish land question that violates the rights of property. Sir JOHN GRAY's plan for transferring Ireland from the owners to the tenants will not be approved, though rumour has been so busy in declaring that it was to be proposed by Mr. GLADSTONE.

There is some ground for a complaint made by the correspondent of a contemporary respecting the proceedings of the Bribery Commissioners. Writing from Bridgewater, he says, "I have watched attentively, from day to day, the evidence adduced before the commissioners, and must say their ear is willingly lent to get at anything said against the constituencies, in order, I imagine, that the country may be pleased for the way they have done their duty. But on the slightest attempt to vindicate meetings, or any ordinary election practices, you are told at once not to trifle with the truth, and are harassed and otherwise frightened into speaking what is not strictly true." It has struck us that the Bridgewater Commissioners have assumed dishonesty on the part of witnesses. Their task is a difficult one and their experiences have been extraordinary, but severity does not always elicit the truth. Another complaint has reached us respecting Beverley.

BRIBERY PROSECUTIONS.

The proceedings of the Bribery Commissioners have brought to light the fact which everybody must have suspected, that certain honourable members now sitting in Parliament knowingly engaged to a greater or less extent in corrupt practices at the last election. Our fearless contemporary, the Pall Mall Gazette, has called upon the ATTORNEY-GENERAL to punish, if he can, Mr. BROGDEN and Major WATERHOUSE, who on their own evidence were guilty of such practices. "Mr. BROGDEN and Major WATERHOUSE," it says, "have each been guilty of conduct in no way distinguishable from that which is punishable under the Act of last year with seven years' incapacity to sit in Parliament, to be registered as a voter, or to hold any municipal or judicial office. The one has knowingly furnished the means of bribery, the other has done his utmost to thwart the determination of the Legislature to ascertain whether bribery has been committed. It is for the ATTORNEY-GENERAL to consider whether under the existing law these persons, or either of them, can be prosecuted to conviction, and, if the law as it stands has omitted to provide for such a case, it is for the Government to consider how it may best be made to embrace similar cases for the future."

It is perfectly clear that the ATTORNEY-GENERAL has no power under the Act of last year, the 43rd section of which says that where it is found, "by the report of the Judge upon an election petition under this Act" that bribery has been committed by or with the knowledge and consent of any candidate at an election, such person shall be deemed to have been personally guilty of bribery. The penalties of personal bribery are incapacity (1) to be elected or sit in Parliament for seven years after conviction; (2) to be registered as a voter; (3) to hold office under certain Acts of Parliament or any municipal office; (4) to hold any judicial office. Now no Judge under the Act of 1868 has found Mr. BROGDEN and Major WATERHOUSE guilty of personal bribery, and no other mode of conviction can be of any avail to work a forfeiture of the seats.

Prosecutions or actions under the Corrupt Practices Prevention Act 1854, relate to penalties only, and if Mr. BROGDEN and Major WATERHOUSE were prosecuted to conviction, or sued to a successful verdict, their seats would not be affected, unless some action were taken by Parliament itself. The provision under which these cases fall is the 5th clause of the 2nd section. "Every person who shall advance or pay, or cause to be paid, any money to, or to the use of, any other person with intent that such money, or any part thereof, shall be expended in bribery at an election, or who shall knowingly pay, or cause to be paid, any money to any person in discharge or repayment of any money wholly or in part expended in bribery at an election," shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and also be liable to forfeit 100l. to anyone who shall sue for the same. Then, by the law and custom of Parliament, if any person is elected to serve in the House of Commons by the people, yet the House may upon complaint of any crime in such person, and proof thereof, adjudge him disabled and incapable to sit as a member (Stephen's Comm. 4, p. 354).

Assuming that bribery is to be fixed upon members as a crime of which Parliament is to take cognizance, it must be remembered that it is one of the few offences in which proceedings are limited. In such case the person charged must be summoned or otherwise served with writ or process within one year next after the offence against the Act shall have been committed (sect. 14 of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 102, extended to all offences under the Act by sect. 5 of 26 Vict. c. 29). If, therefore, any offenders in the present Parliament are to be punished there is no time to be lost.

INSURANCE AGENCIES.

It is no longer in dispute that the preponderance of benefit is on the side of those insurance companies who employ no agents. Evidence was recently given proving that no less than two millions had been saved by one company by refusing to pay commission. This is a strong argument in favour of abolishing agencies. Another argument is, that agents have a strong inducement to get business at almost any risk, and it is strongly to their interest to bolster up concerns, however shaky and to relieve them wherever possible from the liabilities which they have incurred.

A forcible illustration of the evils attending agency transactions, and particularly in these times of amalgamation, is furnished by the case Mackie v. The European Insurance Company, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 102. That was a case in which it was attempted to show that the plaintiff had insured in the Commercial Union and not in the European, on the ground that the same agent acted for both, and that although the insurer was handed over by the agent to the latter, he was at the time of the loss a claimant, if at all, against the Commercial. But the Commercial had ceased to do fire business, and the agent, being desirous of obtaining all the business he could for the European, sent Mr. Mackie's business to the European. Nothing, however, turned upon that, and the first point to be noticed is, that there existed a general provision that whilst a proposal was pending acceptance by the directors the assurance should remain in legal force, and that should the directors decline the assurance, the money was to be immediately returned to the assured. It was very competent for the office by return of post to decline the proposal. This they did not do, and before the expiration of the time limited for declining it the loss had happened. Then we have to consider what was the evidence of acceptance. The manager of the fire department wrote to the agent, acknowledging the fire order in due course, and he further wrote, "I am in receipt of your favour of the 17th instant, and note that you have accepted proposals to the amount of 11,020*l.*, the particulars of which I wait." This Vice-Chancellor Malins considered to amount to a distinct acceptance of the proposal, and by a deposit of 2*l.* on each insurance of the two halves of the premises, the contract between the insurer and the European was held to be complete.

It will be useful to look closely at the arguments advanced on the part of the defendants, and the manner in which they were received by the Court. We have not before mentioned the course pursued by the plaintiff when he found that he was transferred to the European. What he did was this: he wrote a letter to the agent noticing the transfer of his insurance to the European; and he said—"As to the European, I know nothing about them, and would require to be satisfied of their respectability and standing before I could consent to give them over all the sums." The defendants considered that this letter left the whole matter open, and even amounted to a repudiation on the part of the plaintiff. They said the plaintiff took a receipt and paid the deposit under an entire misapprehension, and the moment he discovered it threw the whole open, and in distinct terms said that he could not agree with the European until he was satisfied of their responsibility. But they admitted that had nothing been said by the plaintiff, the defendants might have been bound. The Vice-Chancellor made the following comments on this argument:—"It is contended," he said, "that this letter was a repudiation; I cannot treat it as anything of the kind. It amounts, in my mind, to this, that he having been satisfied with the Commercial, found that Waddell, in whom he had perfect confidence, had handed him over to the European, and that he had a contract for a month with them. I read it thus: 'I intend during the whole month, to consider whether I will accept the European,' but can any reasonable man conclude that he meant, 'sooner than be insured in the European I will remain uninsured altogether?' He knew that he was exposed to peril by fire every hour, and until he got another document, he could not be insured anywhere but in the European. I must put a rational construction on this letter, viz., that he intended to make further inquiry, and upon making such inquiry, he would have felt himself at liberty to decline further insurance with the European. But he would have made further inquiry of Waddell, he being the agent, and he would have told him truly that he had ceased to be agent for the Commercial Union, but that the European was at least as good, and perhaps better. The advertisement in the Law List states that they never dispute policies, with an income of 300,000*l.* a year. If he had made inquiries, he would have accepted the policy, as he accepted it he did. He had a perfect right to repudiate the contract, and he adopted it until he distinctly repudiated. It was not a repudiation by him, but a continuing contract, as if that letter had never been written—as if when he accepted the document, he had been aware that it was the European and not the Commercial with whom he had contracted. The defence set up on this ground is contemptible and ridiculous."

Another objection raised on the part of the defendants was that the agent had not made such communication to the office as he ought considering the peril; but the Vice-Chancellor pointed out in the first place that there was ample opportunity for the office to make inquiry and require from their agent further information; and in the second place he observed that nothing could be more fatal to the interests of the public in fire and life assurances, which are carried on to such an enormous extent through agencies, than for the court to sanction the idea that the assured is to run the peril of the agent strictly performing his duty. Further his Honour laid down, in accordance with Wing v. Harvey, 5 De G. M. & G. 265, that the knowledge of the agent is the knowledge of the office, and that if the agent miscarried the office has its remedy against him.

LAND LAW REFORM.

At length we have something approaching to a definite plan for a Land Law Bill. It is put forth by The Tablet, the organ of the Roman Catholic party, and therefore it embodies the opinion of the most influential of those who are agitating for a change. The following are declared to be the necessary bases of any measure that could be accepted as satisfactory:—

1. Security to reclaimers of waste land, and to tenants who have made improvements, for the fruits of their labour and their capital, although the previous assent of landlords may not have been expressly obtained.
2. Fixity of tenure, including (1) leases for long terms, or equivalents of such leases; (2) abolition of landlord's power of arbitrary eviction; and (3) restriction of landlord's right of raising rents to cases of increased value (not due to tenants' improvements), shown by public valuation.
3. Immediate new valuation of poor lands with a view to a general reduction of their rents.
4. Aid to necessitous tenants and farmers in general, including the benefits both of Mr. Bright's scheme for lending money for purchase of freeholds, and of Lord Mayo's plan for making advances for improvements.
5. And lastly, simplicity of details, and cheapness in the forms and processes to be required for acting under the new law.

Claims from such a quarter are entitled to respectful consideration. These do not come from red-hot revolutionists, whose real aim is the severance of Ireland from England and the establishment of a republic, but from those who desire to maintain the connection between the two countries, but who say that Ireland, being a Roman Catholic country, must henceforth in all things be governed according to Irish, and therefore Roman Catholic, ideas, opinions, and wishes, and not, as hitherto, according to English and Protestant notions. And it is very difficult to dispute the justice of such a demand.

Let us, then, respectfully review each of these propositions and see how far it is desirable and practicable; for any measure, to be worth constructing, must have both of these qualifications:

1st. Security to reclaimers of waste land and to tenants who have made improvements for the fruits of their labour and their capital, although the previous assent of the landlords may not have been expressly obtained.

This is somewhat loosely stated, unless more is intended than expressed. The term is "security" for improvements, not "compensation." This might be construed as meaning that, if a tenant has made an improvement without the knowledge and consent of his landlord, he should be entitled to the possession of the property for some term proportioned to the value of the improvement. For instance: You (the reader) are owner of a house which you have let to a tenant for three years; he, for his own convenience in his business, has erected an outhouse at a cost of 50*l.* without asking your consent or approval. According to one reading of the above proposition, he is to be entitled to keep it from you for an additional term equal in value to the 50*l.* he has so expended for his own advantage, not for yours. If this were to be permitted wherever a tenant was in possession of a house or of land which circumstances—say the opening of a railway—had largely increased in value, he would, of course, forthwith proceed to build upon it something which he would call an improvement, and you would call an injury, and then claim to hold it for ten or twenty years, as the case might be, and so receive all the advantage of the value that had been increased by no act of his own.

But if the Tablet intends by this first proposal nothing more than full compensation for unexhausted improvements, a competent authority determining not only what is the value of such improvements, but if they are improvements, and if the owner has benefited by them, then we assent entirely to the suggestion, and should cordially support any measure in which it may be embodied.

So with the cultivation of waste. If squatters have been permitted to take and cultivate waste, and thus given substantial value to that which before was worthless, the lord should not be allowed to remove them without making full compensation for the added value given by the labour of the tenants.

But there will be considerable difficulty in the details. In the first place, the question will come, Is such a measure to be retrospective? Are owners, who have let their houses and lands at rents calculated on the implied condition that all improvements should revert to the landlord, to be compelled to observe new conditions? If yes, then this injustice will follow: that those who have leased for a long term will be bound by the new conditions for years; while those who have leased for short terms, or whose leases are expiring, or who have let only from year to year, will be affected but for a very short time, and will then be enabled to make new terms for rentals based upon the new conditions of holding; for, of course, the rent will be higher where the tenant is recouped his improvements than where such improvements pass to the landlord.

But there is a greater difficulty still, through which we can see no path at present. We presume nothing so revolutionary is designed as to prohibit the owners of houses and lands from letting them to whomsoever they please, on any terms the landlord and tenant choose to agree upon. It cannot be contemplated by any honest person to interfere with the liberty of contract. How, then, is it proposed to regulate by law the future lettings? Suppose a landlord and tenant to agree by a lease that the latter shall not make improvements without the consent of the former, and that he shall not be entitled to compensation for any improvements made without the written consent of the landlord first obtained, what is to prevent the universal adoption of this or similar terms of letting?

All that any law, ever yet adopted by a civilized country, could essay to do would be to provide that, in case of no agreement being made to the contrary, certain consequences shall result from the relationship of landlord and tenant. Such a law would practically offer a kind of model lease, which would doubtless be generally adopted; but how, if the parties choose to make a different contract? Is it proposed to prevent them, or to avoid any agreement not in accordance with the terms of a tenancy without an agreement?

If this latter is really designed, it would be the most daring invasion of the ordinary rights of property ever witnessed in a civilized country, and still more, a violation of individual liberty. Imagine a law deliberately declaring, that if A. has something which B. wants, it shall not be permitted to them to agree together upon what terms the one shall accommodate the other, but the law shall prescribe all the conditions of the transfer. It may be said that this is nothing more than was contemplated by the extinct usury laws, which limited the interest that should be paid upon loans. But those laws are repealed because they were universally condemned as at once unjust and impolitic. Moreover, even they did not attempt more than to limit the rate of interest; they never dared to do what is now demanded for property in land—that the law should determine not only the maximum of rent, but the amount of rent and the length of the term for which the owner shall part with it to his tenant.

If such a law would be just for loans of land, why not for loans of money? Why should not Parliament prescribe the precise terms of every loan, and even the length of credit in the transactions of trade? Every person who has taken up a loan may, with equal justice, demand a statute for sixty of tenure to him—that he should not be liable to repay the principal for some arbitrary term, or so long as he continues to pay the interest, whatever might be the increased value of money. It is not otherwise with debts; debtors would have quite as strong a claim upon the Legislature to prohibit their creditors from enforcing payment as a tenant has to demand that the law should give him a term of holding, and therefore an interest, he never bargained for.

And how in such cases is it proposed to deal with mortgagees? The effect of such a law would be to reduce the marketable value of all the land in Ireland to one-half. Is the mortgagee to be plundered as well as the owner? If not, how is he to be compensated; and if compensation is to be made to him, upon what pretext could it be refused to the owners?

A measure of open and avowed robbery would be intelligible, and really preferable to a scheme of covert confiscation. If the owners of land are to be plundered, let it be done by the process of taking from them a certain portion of their properties and dividing it among the people. If the safety of the State requires such an invasion of property, take the land from its proprietors, giving them its full value. Mr. Bright's plan is honest if not wise. He proposes that the State should purchase the lands of owners who are willing to sell, and re-sell them to the present tenants in parcels, with certain facilities for payment of the price, somewhat similar to the plan of the Benefit Building Societies. But the agitation has gone far beyond Mr. Bright. The organs of the Roman Catholic party will not accept any such half measure. They want to take the land from its owners without making any compensation at all, and the conditions above attached to this proposal must be considered next week.

CONDUCT CONDUCTING TO ADULTERY.

THERE seems to be a tendency towards increase in the number of petitions for divorce which are open to the plea of wilful misconduct and connivance conducing to adultery. One such case we reported last week (St. Paul v. St. Paul, at p. 108), in which, however, the plea conspicuously failed; another case we report to-day, in which the Judge expressed his surprise that the petition should have been preferred. We will notice first the case which we report to-day. The petitioner was a person engaged at certain works of which the co-respondent was manager. The co-respondent was allowed to visit at the house in the absence of the petitioner, to send in provisions, and to make the wife an allowance of 1*l.* per week. Lastly, the petitioner allowed the co-respondent to take the respondent to London with him for medical advice. After all this the petitioner and respondent quarrelled respecting the co-respondent's visits, and the suit for divorce followed. The Judge Ordinary remarked upon this, that it was surprising that anyone could have ventured to present a petition.

St. Paul's case, on the other hand, will show us in what respect evidence may fall short of proving wilful misconduct or connivance; but at the same time it exhibits a petitioner legally blameless, but as the Judge observed, wanting in decision, wanting in firmness, wanting in manly assertion of his own rights, and wanting in judgment with regard to the facts that were brought to his cognisance, and the course that he ought to take. Under these circumstances it would seem singular that a man should venture on a petition. We have to look at the question however in a purely legal aspect, and the Judge Ordinary gives us a very clear exposition of what the Legislature aimed at by its enactment. His observations must be quoted:—"The statute says 'conduce to the adultery,' but in reflecting upon those words of the statute the conclusion at which I have arrived is this: That the Legislature did not mean that a husband should be deprived of his remedy if his conduct had conduced to any particular act of adultery after his wife's first fall from virtue, but that it meant that his remedy should be withheld from him if he had so acted as to bring about the fall of his wife or the loss of her virtue. What the Legislature appears to me to be pointing at under the word adultery is the lapse from virtue of the wife, and I think the intention was that the husband who had led to that lapse by his own conduct should not afterwards take advantage of it. But it is quite consistent with that that a case might arise in which a husband would be perfectly blameless as to his wife's adultery in the first instance, and that after she had established her adulterous intercourse with another man, the two together might throw dust in his eyes, and his conduct might appear more or less neglectful. It seems to me that the neglect which is followed by a subsequent act of adultery after the loss of virtue by the wife is not the neglect which the statute meant; it must be that neglect which conduced to the fall of the wife."

This distinction is obviously of the first importance, and it was this distinction which relieved the petitioner in St. Paul's case from the charge of wilful misconduct. He allowed her to go alone to a hydropathic establishment in the Isle of Man avowedly for the sake of her health, and before he visited her she had fallen from virtue. On the question of connivance the evidence went to show that had the petitioner been of a stronger temperament he would have burst the veil that the wife threw over her proceedings. The conclusion of the Court was as follows, and it sufficiently gives point to this article. It observed that there had been much in the petitioner's conduct "which if it had led to the first adultery and loss of virtue by his wife, might have induced the Court to come to the conclusion that the wife's sin had been caused by the husband's neglect or carelessness; but bearing in mind the respondent's adultery, if not seduction, and that the real loss of virtue by the wife was a whole year before this, of course I can only look upon the matter in this light, that the two people who were principally concerned successfully contrived to throw dust in the eyes of a very weak and not very wise man."

MUNICIPAL AND PARLIAMENTARY ELECTIONS.

NO. III.

A PETITION which we shall report next week, namely Taunton, reveals a form of rewarding voters for loss of time, which, according to a particular judicial view may be declared to be bribery. The nature of this practice would appear to depend a great deal upon the intention with which a voter accepts payment. There was a custom in the borough, in pursuance of which both sides paid persons who lost their time by attending the barrister's court for the purpose of being placed upon the register. It would seem to have been admitted in that case that one association paid at the time of registration those voters only of whose bona fides proof was given, whilst the other association paid at a period after the registration and near the election, many persons who had not attended the registration court, and who therefore had no right to be paid. These payments to the dishonest voters were held to be bribery, and Mr. Justice Blackburn rested his decision apparently more upon the corrupt intention of voters receiving the unearned payments, than upon the imprudent and indiscriminate action of the association. And his Lordship drew a nice distinction between the intentional deceit of one set of voters, and the simple ignorance of another. If, he said, a voter mistakenly believed he was entitled to be paid and was paid, it was to be inferred that the payment was not made to influence the vote. On the other hand, if a voter knew that he had no right to be paid, but nevertheless demanded and received it, the inference must be that the payment did influence the vote.

This introduction of the motive and knowledge of the voter into an examination of the sins of a candidate gives a singularly new complexion to election inquiries. We noticed last week that the same learned Judge dealt with corruption for the purpose of a scrutiny in the same way. He held that a voter receiving money from a stranger whose behests he disobeyed is wholly deprived of his status as a voter, and any candidate for whom such a person votes is liable to have his majority reduced on a scrutiny. By this method of dealing with bribery it appears to us that great injustice may be inflicted upon candidates. For example, with mens conscia recti a member may defend his seat and go to vast expense only to discover that his voters were bribed by strangers with whom they did not fulfil the corrupt compact. The candidate, indeed, is made to suffer for a private fraud on the part of a voter. So again where the payment is legalised by custom, and that custom is abused by voters who impose upon the candidate, his election is made to depend upon the intention of the voter. If payments are clearly made with the main object of operating upon the polling it must be recognised as a sound principle that the intention of the voters in receiving the payments should be looked to, as well as the intention of the candidate or his agent in making them. But where the payments are primâ facie usual, and therefore innocent, something more than the motive with which the voters received them should be considered before an election is upset. There cannot be two opinions concerning the importance of the doctrine laid down by Baron Martin that a returning officer's return is not to be lightly impeached, and that evidence must be very cogent which is to affect an honest candidate by means of the acts of third persons.

We have considered already, under the category of inducements to vote, that form of bribery which is known as the payment of travelling expenses. That is to say, we have seen that there must be a promise, express or implied, to pay travelling expenses in order to make an invitation to out voters to come up and vote bribery. This question of travelling expenses is now abundantly clear, and that it may be stated as perspicuously as possible we will adopt the exposition of the law by that most clear headed and able Judge, Mr. Justice Willes. It is this:—"Before the case of Cooper v. Slade (6 H. of L. Cas. 746), which was decided in the year 1858, a doubt existed as to whether under the law as it then stood the travelling expenses of out voters might be paid—I speak now of out voters who have a right to vote by reason of their residence continuing—whether the travelling expenses of out voters might or might not be paid, and whether the promise to an out voter to pay him if he came up and gave his vote for a particular member, or to pay him his expenses of going back to his place of residence, if it happened to be in the place of polling, in order that he should not vote; or whether the payment of expenses in any form, whether in the former, which has been called a mild form of bribery, or in the latter, which has been called a point blank piece of bribery, was illegal, and illegal by reason of its being a promise of money within the 1st clause of the 2nd section of the Corrupt Practices Prevention Act 1854, a promise to give money in order to induce any voter to vote or refrain from voting, and the result was it was decided in that case of Cooper v. Slade, that such a promise is illegal. A promise to a voter whether he be really entitled to vote or not who happens to be out of the place at the time of the election, a promise to pay him even his bare expenses if he will come up and vote for a particular candidate, was decided by the House of Lords to be illegal in the case of Cooper v. Slade. That led to a discussion in both Houses as to whether or not it was just that a member should be debarred from the payment of the bare travelling expenses of the voters, and it was insisted that there was nothing unjust in it, that the voter ought to be enabled to vote, and as he gained nothing by the payment of his travelling expenses, they ought to be allowed to be promised him and paid him. That was answered by an argument which has prevailed, and which expresses the law, that the danger of allowing promises or payments of travelling expenses to voters being made a colour and cloak, and of paying them more than they are entitled to in respect of such travelling expenses, is so great that they shall and they do continue to be forbidden by the law. And in the August of the year in which the decision in Cooper v. Slade was given, it was enacted by the Legislature, by a section of the 21 & 22 Vict. c. 87, which must be taken as distinctly recognising the decision in the case I have referred to, that it shall be lawful for any candidate or his agent to provide conveyance for any voter for the purpose of polling at an election, and not otherwise, but it shall not be lawful to pay any money or give any valuable consideration to a voter for or in respect of his travelling expenses for such purpose. Therefore it is lawful under that Act for the candidate to give a voter a lift in his carriage to the poll, but it is not lawful for the candidate or his agent to promise a voter his travelling expenses if he will come up and poll, or to pay him his expenses afterwards, if that payment is made corruptly within the provisions of the Corrupt Practices Act as to payments after vote in respect of having voted. So stood the law until the passing of the Representation of the People Act 1867, which by the 86th section enacts that "it shall not be lawful for any candidate, or anyone on his behalf, at any election for any borough, except certain boroughs which are excepted, because the constituencies are scattered, to pay any money on account of the conveyance of any voter to the poll, either to the voter himself, or to any other person; and if such candidate, or any person on his behalf, shall pay any money on account of such conveyance, then the payment is to be considered illegal, not that the payment is to be considered to avoid the election if made to a third person not a voter, and not to induce a voter to vote, though such a consequence would follow, if the payment or promise were made to a voter, but that it shall be unlawful to pay any money on account of conveyance either to the voter or any other person."

An argument arose in the Salford Petition, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 120, upon this point, the counsel for the respondents contending that the law was by no means clear, and that the intention of the Legislature was to make it unlawful to give money to a voter himself in order that he might by means of the money convey himself to the poll. He pointed out that there could not be any corrupt influence if a candidate merely hired carriages, and in those carriages brought the voters from their places of residence in order that they might poll, and urged most forcibly that it might be an inducement to a voter if he were assured of a ride in an elegant equipage belonging to a private individual, whereas the prospect of similar enjoyment in a hired carriage would have no effect. The provision against providing hired carriages is doubtless somewhat absurd; but Baron Martin observed in the Salford case "there may be many things in the law which may seem to be absurd, because absurd things are made the means of avoiding the law." And he expressed his clear conviction that the intention of the Legislature was that persons should go to the poll either by walking or by their own conveyances, or by the conveyances of some friend.

Clearly this is an obstacle to the success of comparatively poor men, who can command few private conveyances. Such, however, is the law.

Deferring the question of agency we will now proceed to consider

TREATING.

The section (4) of the Corrupt Practices Act, which defines this offence is, of course, familiar to our readers, but, having received judicial construction, we may usefully refer to its terms. It says that every candidate who shall "corruptly," first, personally, or secondly, by an agent, "or by any other ways or means on his behalf," either before, during, or after an election, directly or indirectly give or provide, or cause to be given or provided, or shall be accessory to the giving or providing, or shall pay, wholly or in part, any expenses incurred for any meat, drink, entertainment, or provision to or for any person, in order to be elected, or for being elected, or for the purpose of corruptly influencing such person, or any other person, to give or refrain from giving his vote at such an election, or on account of such person having voted or refrained from voting shall be guilty of treating.

We will, at the outset, draw attention to the very wide words "or by any other ways or means on his behalf." The Legislature appears to have intended to strike at the opening of public-houses promiscuously and without control being exercised over publicans. What is evidence of this species of treating is fully exemplified in the first Bradford Petition (at p. 721 of 19 L. T. Rep. N. S.) There it was shown that there were 115 public-houses open in the town, at which refreshments were given, and the Judge said, "The evidence is to the effect that voters were admitted to those committee-rooms, the farce was gone through of putting down their names as committeemen, and refreshments were furnished to them whether voters or non-voters." This point was further illustrated in the second Bradford petition, where it was held that the opening of public-houses in the sense to avoid an election, must be a systematic opening for the purpose of giving refreshment to voters, the supply being limited to the discretion of the landlord as to what is a reasonable supply. And where, therefore, rooms in public-houses were hired for certain days for committee purposes, and at other times used for other purposes of the ordinary character, and in no way connected with the election, it was held that this was not an opening of the public-houses for the purpose of treating.

It is to be observed that there are two kinds of treating, the one which is touched by the 4th section and which vitiates an election, and the other to which the 23rd is directed, making it an offence punishable by the forfeiture of forty shillings to anyone who shall sue for it. In the 4th section the word "corruptly" is used, whilst in the 23rd the giving of refreshment to voters on certain days without any reference to a corrupt intention is declared to be illegal. Taking the 4th section as the material provision affecting an election, it is seen that the act of treating must be corrupt. We may learn what is corrupt treating by looking at the evidence which failed in the second Bradford petition: There were partisans of the candidates who were desirous of getting votes, who saw people at public houses who were voters, as they thought, and they advised them how to vote, and gave them beer, which admittedly might have influenced their votes. The persons so canvassing were authorised to canvass, but had no specific directions about it; and Baron Martin held the giving of beer an ordinary act of everyday life, altogether removed from any corrupt intention. And he went somewhat further than this, and where voters came into a public house, and an agent of the candidates under what was called "a sort of pressure," ordered them beer, held that this was not corrupt treating. This shows clearly enough that the giving of refreshment to come within the definition of treating must be a free act on the part of a candidate or his agent with a view to influencing the election, and not merely for the purpose of doing a neighbourly act during an exciting contest on which everybody must have a side.

We have now to look at what is corrupt treating under the 4th section. It was first laid down by Baron Martin, and borne out by the other Judges that a thimbleful of drink given corruptly would vitiate an election. An important preliminary question on this head arose in the Youghal petition, namely, whether treating before the dissolution of Parliament would affect the return. No express decision was given by the learned Judge, but he said sufficient to lead us to infer that he would have decided in the affirmative. This, indeed, was the view taken by the Court in banc, the judgment being that "any person who shall be elected, or who shall be nominated, or who shall have declared himself a candidate, after the issuing of the writ or dissolution, who shall at any time, though before the dissolution, do the acts mentioned in the section, he is guilty of the offence of treating."

TREASONABLE OATHS.

At this moment, when treason is openly and even ostentatiously proclaimed in Ireland, not by the lowest class alone, but by Members of Parliament, the oath taken by those initiated into the Ribbon Society, of which the Fenian brotherhood is the direct descendant, will be read with curiosity and interest, possibly with profit. In the eyes of these conspirators the end so justifies the means, that they do not scruple to swear that they will assassinate their opponents whenever an opportunity presents itself, and that they will perjure themselves for the protection of their fellows and the promotion of their common purpose whenever the law shall attempt to lay its hand upon any of them. This startling document sufficiently explains why and how it is that murder has impunity in Ireland, and why nobody will tell what everybody knows. We are indebted for this timely document to the Pall-Mall Gazette.

"I (A. B.) hereby agree to become a true and loyal member of this society, and I solemnly swear before Almighty God to be true and loyal to the brotherhood, and to each member of the same; and I will be obedient to my committee and superior officers, and agree to all their articles, laws, rules, and regulations that have been since the commencement, and all amendments added thereto, and to perform all duties imposed on me with loyalty, faith, and fidelity, and I swear that neither hopes or fears, rewards or punishments, shall induce me to give evidence against any brother or brothers for any act or expression of theirs done or made collectively or individually. And, in pursuance of this obligation, I swear to aid as best I can, with purse and person, any brother or brothers who may be in distress; and I further swear to owe no allegiance to any Protestant or heretic sovereign, ruler, prince, or potentate, and that I will not regard any oath delivered to me by them or their subjects, be they judge, magistrate, or else, as binding. And I swear to aid as best I can any brother or brothers who may be on trial for any act or expression of theirs, before magistrate, judge, jury, or else, and to be ready at all times to aid by every means in my power to assist in procuring his or their liberation, and, if myself a witness, to disregard any oath delivered to me on such occasions by judge, jury, magistrate, counsel, clerk, lawyer, official, or else; and that I will not regard such oath as binding. And in revenge for the sufferings of our forefathers, and protection of our rights, I further solemnly swear to aid as best I can in exterminating and extirpating all Protestants and heretics out of Ireland or elsewhere; to hunt, pursue, shoot, and destroy all Protestant or heretic landlords, proprietors, or employers; and also to hunt, shoot, pursue, and destroy all landlords or proprietors belonging to the Church of Rome should he or they evict his or their tenants from any house, land, home, or holding of theirs. And I further solemnly swear to aid as best I can in burning down, sacking, and destroying all Protestant or heretic churches or places of worship, and all houses used as such by members of different heretical denominations in this country, and to level the same to the ground.

"I also solemnly swear to have no intercourse, communion, or trade, neither to buy or sell, barter or exchange, give or take, or have any dealings whatever with said Protestants or heretics, unless on such occasions as cannot be avoided.

"I also swear to defend the farmer, the poor man, the widow, and the orphans of any brother or former brother against the oppression of the landlords and the tyranny of the Saxon laws; and I further solemnly swear to do all in my power to procure the independence of Ireland, and aid as best I can in allowing none but Irishmen to possess Irish land, and Ireland for the Irish.

"I also solemnly swear to shoot, destroy, hunt, and pursue to death any former brother who may turn informer or traitor, or who may refuse to perform any duty ordered by his committee or superior officers, or any duty which may fall by lot or otherwise to execute. And I agree that my person shall be at all times at their service to go wherever required or do whatever sent, and also to aid by every means in my power any brother or brothers of this society executing the orders of other committees or officers belonging thereto, though not in my district; and to aid as best I can he or them in the performance of their duty.

"And I most solemnly swear to keep all secrets, pass-words, signs, orders, or otherwise belonging to this society, and that I shall never divulge the same by word of mouth, or otherwise; and I swear neither to mark, write, or indite with pen, pencil, stone, chalk, or other mineral or substance above or under wood, above or under water, above or under land, above or under air, on the sea or elsewhere, or to use therewith any substance whatever above or under, &c., be it herb, shrub, tree, wood, liquid, mineral, or else, above or below this earth, above or under, &c., or to use therewith any liquid, marking fluid, ink, or any marking substance whatever, above or under, &c., in the sea or elsewhere, to betray or inform of any signs, secrets, passwords, orders, doings, actions, or expressions that have been, that are being, or that will be belonging to this brotherhood."

DIGEST OF SHIPPING LAW CASES.

FROM 1860 TO 1864.

Edited by F. O. CRUMP, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

COSTS (continued).

9. Collision—Exemption of the Crown from costs.—The Court of Admiralty has no power to enforce a decree against the Crown, and therefore is not justified in condemning the Crown, simply on the ground that it would be unwise for any court to make a decree which it cannot carry into effect. The co-plaintiffs, the commander and crew of a Queen's ship, in a collision suit, were, however, condemned in costs, the court believing that the Admiralty would indemnify their officers. The practice as to costs in such cases fully considered with reference to 18 & 19 Vict. c. 90: (The Leda, A. C. Dec. 9, 1862, and Jan. 20, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 298; 7 L. T. Rep. N. S. 864; 9 Jur. N. S. 208; 32 L. J. 58.)

10. Salvage—Steamer—Tender of 150L. over-ruled, and 400L. awarded—Costs given.—A ship abandoned her own voyage, and postponed the more immediate interests and purposes of her owners and employers, for the service of a crippled ship, and carried her successfully into harbour. The former ship, eager to clear a broken hawser, leaped it with her propeller and strained her machinery. This latter fact was taken to be evidence of seal under the circumstances, and the property saved being worth 12,500*l.*, the court awarded a sum of 400*l.* to the salvors, together with their costs, overruling a tender of 150*l.*; and upon an appeal to the Court of Delegates, the judgment of the Court of Admiralty was affirmed, each party to bear their own costs: (The Nimrod, A. C. Ireland, Feb. 10, 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 373; Judgment affirmed by Court of Delegates, 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 893.)

11. Practice—Inevitable accident.—When a collision arose, or there is a strong probability that it does, from inevitable accident, as a general rule no costs will be given. Where there are exceptional circumstances the court will look into them and condemn the plaintiff in the costs if the justice of the case so requires: (Cases relied on, the Itinerant, 2 W. Rob. 244; the Ebeneser, 7 Jur. 1118; the London, A. C. June 2, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 398; 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 348; 9 Jur. N. S. 1380.)

12. Bottomry.—The decision of a registrar and merchants as to reasonableness of agency commission on value of ship and cargo does not altogether depend upon the custom of the place where the bond was given, but the custom of such a charge being made is to be considered in ascertaining if the charge is fair. Pleas as to fairness of charge admitted, but party failing in proof will be condemned in costs: (The Laurel, A. O. Nov. 3 and 16, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 405.)

13. Jurisdiction of Admiralty Court to give costs and damages—Valuation.—The court will give costs where a ship has been arrested in a suit by salvors, although jurisdiction is taken away by a valuation made subsequent to the commencement of the suit proving the value of the property saved is below 1000*l.*; (The Kate, A. C. Jan. 26 and Feb. 2, 1864; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 421.)

1. Sale of cargo free on board, including freight and insurance—Sufficiency of insurance.—It is not necessary that insurance on cargo should be of an amount sufficient to cover freight. The policy should be effected with reference to the value at port of shipment, not at port of discharge. It is a question for the jury whether a policy of insurance tendered was a shipping document within the terms of a contract as to payment being made on production of "usual shipping documents": (Tamaco and others v. Lucas and others, Q. B. May 4, 1861; E. C. June 16, 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 66, 231; 7 Jur. N. S. 1100; 1 B. & S. 185; 30 L. J., N. S., 234; 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 697; 31 L. J. 296, in error.)

2. Claim for damage—Set-off.—A plaintiff having sued in respect of damage to the cargo by reason of the negligence of the crew, the defendant pleaded, as a set-off, that the plaintiff had illegally deducted from the freight and primage a sum greater than the amount of the alleged damage. It was held that the Admiralty Court Act (24 Vict. c. 10) did not confer upon the court jurisdiction to try this issue. The practice of the American courts referred to (Parsons on American Maritime Law, vol. 1. p. 178): (The Don Francisco, A. C. Dec. 3, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 169.)

3. Foreign ship—Arrest—Damage.—A foreign ship is not liable to arrest for damage to goods by fire through negligence before transshipment into another vessel, by which the goods arrived in this country: (The Ironsides, A. C. Feb. 26 and March 4, 1862; see No. 8 hereof; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 200; 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 59; 31 L. J. 129.)

4. Damage to goods—Improper stowage—24 Vict. c. 10, s. 6—Master the agent of shipowner—Practice—Reference to registrar and merchants—Schuster v. McKellar.—A shipowner is prima facie responsible for damage to goods through bad stowage. A shipper of goods is justified in supposing the master to be the agent of the shipowner alone, where the charter-party does not divest the shipowner of possession and make the charterer owner pro hac vice. Practice of court to refer amount of damage to registrar and merchants. Case of Schuster v. McKellar, 7 C. & B. 704, distinguished. Construction to be put upon 24 Vict. c. 10, s. 6, stated: (The St. Cloud, A. C. July 28, Nov. 28, 1862, and Jan. 13, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 369.)

5. Lump freight—Expenses of discharging and re-shipping cargo—Improper stowage—Stevadors employed by charterer—Action for balance of freight—Arrest of ship—Set-off—Statute of Limitations.

—Goods were shipped from London for San Francisco, Victoria, and Vancouver's Island. Freight, at a lump sum, was payable half in London and half in certain proportions at the ports of destination. The expenses of unloading and reloading cargo at San Francisco, in order to get at the goods intended for that port, which was necessary partly by reason of the improper manner in which it had been loaded by the stevadors employed by charterers at ship's expense, were held to be chargeable against the shipowners. But charterers were held not entitled, in an action against them for balance of freight, to plead the settlement of these expenses as a part payment of freight although the captain, in consequence of a threat of the ship being arrested, had signed at San Francisco an agreement to deduct these disbursements, advanced by the mutual agents of the shipowners and charterers, from the freight. Where the parties settle an account of moneys due, and each has cross-items allowed in such account, they may be treated as payments, so as to take the case out of the Statute of Limitations. It was admitted that the plea of set-off was not applicable: (Roberts v. Shaw, Q. B. May 23, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 351; 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 634; 10 Jur. N. S. 147; 32 L. J. 398, Q. B.; 4 B. & S. 45.)

6. Expenses of shipping cargo—Liability of several cargoes.—The charterers of certain vessels for the conveyance of deals under one entire contract having incurred various expenses in removal, shipping, and insuring the cargoes under the contract, were held entitled to a lien for such expenses: (Young v. Neill, Rolls Court, May 22, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 368; 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 9; 9 Jur. N. S. 976; 32 Beav. 529.)

7. Freight—Liability of charterer—Continuing voyage.—A ship was chartered for a lump sum of freight, and a general cargo was put on board by different shippers. The voyage having been broken up by the sale of the cargo an action was brought against the charterer for the chartered freight. The questions were left to the jury whether there was a possibility of carrying a substantial part of the cargo to its destination; or whether the damage was so great, and the delay necessary to set it right such that the voyage could not reasonably be continued: (Blasco v. Fletcher, C. B., Jan. 17 and 20, and July 6, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 390; 14 C. B., N. S., 147; 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 169; 9 Jur. N. S. 1105; 32 L. J. 284, C. P.)

8. Jurisdiction—Admiralty Court Act 1861, s. 6—Remedy of consignee against ship for short delivery of cargo.—Under the Admiralty Court Act 1861, s. 6, the consignee of a cargo has his remedy against the ship after arrival at an English port for non-delivery of part of cargo when the remainder of it has been brought forward in the vessel from the port of shipment. In the case of the Ironsides this condition was not satisfied, transshipment having taken place. See No. 3 hereof: (The Danzig, A. C., July 14, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 392; 32 L. J. 164.)

1. Transshipment—Authority of captain to give lien for freight—Ship incapable, by damage, of proceeding on voyage.—Where a cargo is necessarily transhipped into another vessel, the master is bound to make the best bargain he can in regard to the new rate of freight. Held, therefore, that when the captain was able to engage a ship to convey the cargo for 40*l.* a ton from a port at which the original ship had become incapable by damage through sea perils of proceeding on the voyage, he could not give a lien on the cargo for freight at 70*l.* a ton, but only for the amount of freight due to him on his original contract less the advances which had been made by the charterers. Being able to forward the cargo at less than the original freight according to charter-party, the difference should go to the benefit of the shipowner: (Matthews v. Gibbs, Q. B. Nov. 19, 1860; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 14; 3 L. T. Rep. N. S. 557; 7 Jur. N. S. 186; 30 L. J. 55.)

2. Agent's liability—Shipment of cargo—Regulation.—A contract was entered into by agents of parties resident abroad to ship without any liability for anything done either before, during, or after the shipping. The defendants were sought to be charged with unreasonable delay in shipping; but it was held that this came within the terms of the contract: (Milvain and others v. Peres and others, Q. B., Jan. 18, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 32; 3 L. T. Rep. N. S. 736; 30 L. J. 90, Q. B.)

2a. Construction of letter—Liability for loss on re-charter.—Ship chartered from Taganrog at 60*l.* per ton, contract with a London firm to re-charter her on speculation. When she loaded at Taganrog freights had fallen to 46*l.* a ton. Goods were shipped by the re-charterers on their own account. Charterers held liable for the loss on value of cargo by being shipped at 60*l.* instead of 46*l.*: (Yeames and others v. Lindsay and others, C. B., Jan. 23, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 33; 3 L. T. Rep. N. S. 855.)

3. Bill of lading freight and chartered freight—Lien—Bill of lading passing into hands of third party—Small v. Moates—Gledstanes v. Alton.—The bill of lading freight was less than the charter-party freight, and the charterer's agents claimed to have the goods delivered to them upon payment of the bill of lading freight. In an action the lien of the shipowners for the chartered freight was sustained. Cases relied on by the court—Small v. Moates, 9 Bing. 578; Gledstanes v. Alton, 12 C. B. 202. This case was held distinguishable from those where the bill of lading passes into the hands of a stranger without notice of the terms of the charter-party: (Kerr v. Deslandes, 3, 4, and 6, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 156; 5 L. T. Rep. N. S. 349; 8 Jur. N. S. 194; 30 L. J. 297, 10 C. B., N. S. 205; see Dig. of Mar. Law Cases, 1837 to 1860. No. 1193.)

4. Construction of clause "to proceed with all convenient speed"—Representation or warranty—Ollive v. Booker—Dimesch v. Corlett.—A clause contained these words, "Now in the port of Amsterdam, to proceed with all convenient speed." A question was raised whether it was a representation, or a warranty and a condition precedent to performance of the contract, and it was held to be for the judge to construe with reference to surrounding circumstances and the intention of the parties, irrespective of subsequent events. Definitions of representation and warranty. Cases relative to warranty to sail by a certain day noticed. Numerous cases commented on by the Exchequer Chamber. The present decision governed by Ollive v. Booker, 1 Ex. 416, and not in conflict with Dimesch v. Corlett, 12 Moo. P. C. 199: (Behn v. Burness, Q. B. Jan. 21, 1862; E. C. Nov. 26, 1862 and Feb. 24, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 178, 329; 5 L. T. Rep. N. S. 670; 31 L. J. 73; 8 Jur. N. S. 358; 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 207; 9 Jur. N. S. 620; 32 L. J. 204; see Dig. of Mar. Law Cas. 1837 to 1860. No. 353.)

5. Non-liability of charterers for lump freight—Part cargo taken out and not reshipped.—On a charter-party providing for a ship to proceed to her loading port, or "so near thereunto as she may safely get," the charterers were held not liable for a lump sum of freight specified in charter-party, nor in damages for refusal to re-ship cargo, the vessel having sailed, but being unable to cross the bar from insufficiency of water. The master discharged part of the cargo to float the ship off the ground, put on board again only as much cargo as would reduce the draught of water sufficiently, and offered to re-ship the remainder by means of

ELECTION LAW.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

SCRUTINY—PROCEDURE—BRIBERY.—Where several points are reserved on a scrutiny, and the scrutiny, allowing that all the votes concerning which decision was reserved in favour of the petition, nevertheless is abortive, it is open to the judge to withhold altogether his decision at his discretion. It was alleged against the respondent H., that he bribed personally by promising the wife of a voter land and a cow if her husband voted for him. This was denied by the respondent: Held, that under such circumstances it must be assumed that the wish of the woman was father to the thought, and that she construed the ordinary politeness of a candidate towards the womankind in the house to be an assent not to anything she asked for, but to something that she had very strongly in her mind a desire to get. It was attempted to prove that a promise had been made to a ragman by an agent that he should have his rags; and general evidence was given of various promises as to land: Held, that in deciding upon such evidence the judge ought to have reasonable assurance that there really was a bribe held out, or promise of some particular benefit to the voter in case he voted or abstained from voting; and he ought to be sure that general, and very often exaggerated commendations of the wealth and liberality and other qualities of the candidate have not been tortured by the particular witness into a promise of some special benefit for himself. Everything is corrupt which has a tendency to influence a man's mind with reference to mere lucre. An unsuccessful attempt to intimidate will defeat an election. It was alleged that C., a member of the congregation of a dissenting minister, told the latter that he should give up his pew unless the minister voted for the respondent: held, that had this been made out, it would have been intimidation within the 5th section of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 102. Where the agency of any person is disputed, and there is a scrutiny, it should be put forward prominently in the course of the scrutiny, and not left vague, to be considered by the judge subsequently: (Northallerton Election Petition, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 110. Willes, J.)

SCRUTINY—AGREEMENT TO PAIR OFF.—It was agreed between two voters of different politics that neither would vote. Late on the polling day it was falsely represented to one of them that the other had voted, and he accordingly went and voted. By the 5th section of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 102, anyone who shall by any fraudulent device or contrivance . . . compel, induce, or prevail upon any voter, either to give or to refrain from giving his vote at an election, shall be deemed to have committed the offence of undue influence: Held, that pairing amongst voters is not contrary to law, and that there did not appear to have been a fraudulent contrivance within the above section: Semle, the device or contrivance must be one by which a man is prevented from voting or induced to vote contrary to his opinions: (Thomson's Case, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 113. Willes, J.)

SCRUTINY—EVIDENCE.—B. lived at York, but rented a farm in the borough in which he allowed his sister to live. He had rooms at the farm, owned part of the furniture, paid the rent, and visited the house three or four times a year: Held, a good vote: (Johnston's Case, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 114. Willes, J.)

Whether non-residence after July 25 is a disqualification? Quære. Where the non-residence was before the 21st July, and the revising barrister did not deal with the vote, it was retained: (Ibid.)

Where the wife only resided in the house it was retained: (Bilton's Case, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 115. Willes, J.)

PAROCHIAL RELIEF.—The receipt of relief after July 31 incapacitates: (Ibid.)

A voter's wife and children were in the work-house, but she had committed adultery. This was held to be an answer so far as concerned the wife, but not as regarded the children: (Bernley's Case, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 115. Willes, J.)

BOROUGH FRANCHISE—OCCUPATION.—B. claimed in respect of a cowhouse and land, the cowhouse being separated from the land by intermediate fields. His vote was held to have been rightly disallowed: (Smith's Case, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 115. Willes, J.)

TREATING—CORRUPTION—AGENCY—EVI-

DENCE—BRIBERY AT MUNICIPAL ELECTION.—To act corruptly in connection with an election is to do something which is contrary to the intention of the Act of Parliament. Therefore the giving of meat and drink to be corrupt must be done with the intention of influencing an election generally, as by acquiring popularity, or by inducing a voter to vote or refrain from voting. There is no precise rule by which agency can be determined; but every bit of canvassing and acting for a candidate is evidence to show agency. If a particular corrupt act does not come within the category of acts done by an agent the candidate would not be affected, though the persons corruptly acting had been canvassing the town or speaking on his side. H. was asked by the agent of the candidate to canvass two specific persons. Held, that that would not make him a general agent, so that for anything else he might do the candidate would be made responsible. H. gave a breakfast before the polling, to which the whole town were invited. Everybody was invited to come and have drink there, vehicles were provided to carry voters to the poll, and some were actually so conveyed. On the day of the election the candidates wrote and thanked H. (one of them in the warmest terms) for what he had done. Held, that this went a considerable way, though it was not conclusive, to show that H. had been adopted as an agent to a great extent. H. was also seen canvassing in company with B., a recognised agent of the candidates. Held that this, taken in connection with the above facts, was not conclusive to establish general agency. But it was further proved that committeemen brought voters to H.'s breakfast; that B. had spoken of him after the election as having done much good service. And it was held that all these circumstances taken together so connected H. with the candidates as to cause their election to be voided by reason of the corrupt treating by H. R., a town councillor, gave sums of money to voters who had supported him in the municipal contest. But it appeared that they intended to vote as they did vote: Held, that although this was an improper practice, it could not be said that the votes had been bought for the Parliamentary contest, and that it was not bribery. At a meeting of Parliamentary electors held at a public-house, R. gave a quantity of drink. He said that he gave it because he was asked for it, and because he had been recently elected councillor of the ward: Held, that had this stood alone, the conclusion must have been that R. acted with a corrupt intention. In the bribery particulars 183 cases were put down. On five only evidence was given, and they failed. It was therefore held that, although the petitioners had succeeded, each party should bear their own costs. The court refused to separate the costs, and to give the petitioners the costs of the cases of treating which had been established: (Hereford Election Petition, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 117. Blackburn, J.)

WOMEN AND THE MUNICIPAL FRANCHISE.

"STUFF-GOWN" writes as follows to a local paper:

There is a great deal of talk in all parts of the country among those who try to hasten on "new things," whether they be for better or worse, about females sending in claims to be registered as municipal voters under the 32 & 33 Vict. c. 55.

It seems to me that all this talk is premature. I think so on two distinct grounds. In order to explain these, let me cite the 2nd section of the Act—it runs thus: "Nothing in this Act contained shall affect any existing burgess-roll, but every such roll shall continue in force until the 1st Nov. 1869." I ought further to add that by other sections of the Act, persons may be enrolled after one (instead of three) year's occupation with rating, by the express words of the statute, and that inferentially females may be registered on the roll.

The first question which arises upon this section is, whether the word "until" includes or excludes the day named. And on the meaning of this word most of the combatants rest their contention as to whether women are to vote next November or not. Those who say they are, contend that "until" means "up to," or "down to," and not "during" the day named.

On this point there are numerous decisions of the Superior Courts which establish these two propositions, viz., that if until a particular day is given to do anything, such day is included, but if an act is not to be done until after a certain time, the time or day named is excluded. Now, here, if the statute had said until after the 1st November, no question could have arisen as to the females voting on that day. Still, notwithstanding the omission of the word "after," I think the weight of authority as regards the question so propounded is against them.

But the Act is one that regards registration rather than voting; wherefore the time of its operation should have reference rather to the time of registration, or revision of registers, than the day of elections.

If the Act had not been passed, the existing burgess-rolls would have been, as usual, revised this year, according to the law as it was six months ago.

When the statute says "any existing burgess-roll shall continue in force until the first day of November 1869" it cannot mean that the roll existing on the 2nd Aug. 1869 (the day that the Act received the Royal Assent), should do duty (without revision) on the 1st Nov. 1868, as it had done on the 1st Nov. 1869; for that would have been too absurd for the most Radical Parliament. Of course it meant that in the early part of October the rolls should be revised as heretofore in accordance with the old law; by erasing the names of deceased or departed burgesses, and inserting the names of new claimants being males, who had been householders for three years.

But, if in October next, the names of females were then added to the existing burgess-rolls, how could it be said that nothing in this Act contained affecting existing rolls? Such change could only be effected by virtue of the new statute, and if done in October, it would be in contravention of the words "until the first of November" whatever those words may mean, to a day or two.

It appears to me abundantly clear by the express (if ambiguous) words of the statute—ambiguous as to one day, that neither one year's residents, nor females can affect the current year's burgess-roll by their presence on the register.

By the general law the register can be altered, changed, or affected by the introduction of fresh names only on the revision which takes place before the 15th October. It can be changed, altered, or affected by the introduction of females, or one year's residents, only by virtue of something contained in the new Act, which same Act says that nothing contained in it shall affect any burgess-roll until the 1st November; therefore it cannot be so affected on the 15th October; and therefore the names of females cannot be put upon the roll at the next revision.

As a corollary from the above, I may state that one year's residents cannot be put upon the burgess-roll or municipal register, before some revision to be had either on or after the 1st November next.

These opinions appear to me almost mathematical truths, decisions with regard to which neither sentiment, nor interest, nor prejudice have had anything to do. I would not wrongfully endeavour to keep my countrywomen for an hour from the enjoyment of any right which they have a claim to possess.

THE REGISTRATIONS.

WESTMINSTER.

Mr. Francis Henry Bacon, the barrister appointed to revise the list of voters for members to serve in Parliament for the city and liberty of Westminster, opened his court for that purpose on Wednesday morning in the Lords Justices Court, Westminster.

Mr. J. C. Armstrong, Mr. J. D. Malcolm, and Mr. W. Bennett (Westminster Constitutional Association), represented the Conservatives; and Mr. Price, solicitor and agent to the Liberal Association, appeared for the Liberals.

Proof of the payment of assessed taxes is still necessary.

Several names were expunged in consequence of the nonpayment of assessed taxes. The overseers, it appeared in some instances, had not called for the return, and when asked by the revising barrister were unable to say whether the taxes were paid or not, as they had thought it unnecessary under the new Act.

The Revising Barrister said that the new Reform Act did not apply to the old franchise.

It was stated that the vestry clerks of the various parishes had agreed amongst themselves that the return of assessed taxes defaulters was unnecessary.

The Revising Barrister said that a party of vestry clerks could not agree amongst themselves to repeal an Act of Parliament, and he should require proof of the payment of assessed taxes for the old franchise as much now as before the new Act was passed.

FINSBURY.

Claim in respect of solicitor's offices disallowed.

An application was made on behalf of Mr. Kennedy, solicitor, of Chancery-lane, who sought to be placed on the list of lodgers, his claim being in respect of his offices.

The Barrister.—He does not lodge there. The qualification is for where a lodger lives. It seems that Mr. Kennedy has no qualification as a lodger.

The Applicant.—I desire that you should make it an occupation otherwise than as a lodging.

The Barrister.—If he is not living there how can I do that? I should be altering the fact were I to do so, and not amending his claim. He is not qualified, and no amendment that I can make would alter that fact.

The Applicant said that would shut out an immense number of those occupying offices.

The Barrister.—He (Mr. Kennedy) is not qualified as a lodger, and you say he is not rated, therefore I cannot allow the claim. The Lord Chief Justice has decided that a solicitor's office is a counting-house, and the occupant can claim to be rated, and put on the householders' list, but Mr. Kennedy has not done this.

Claim disallowed.

Claim of a lodger who let a bed disallowed.

Wm. Chilton, the occupier of rooms in Silver-street, Bloomsbury, claimed to be put on the lodger list.

In answer to the Revising Barrister, the claimant said he let a bed.

The Barrister disallowed the claim, as lodgers who let lodgings were not entitled to vote. They were, in fact, joint occupants, and the Act only enfranchised sole occupants.

CHELSEA.

Where it is objected that a claimant is an alien, he must attend personally to prove naturalisation.

A foreigner renting a studio in Thistle-grove, was objected to owing to his being an alien, and no one appearing to give evidence of his naturalisation.

Mr. Gilbert argued in reference to this case that the claimant should be present personally in support of his claim.

The Revising Barrister ruled that that would not be a fatal objection, and read, in support of his ruling, the 40th section of the Act, which stated, "where the name of any person inserted in any list of voters shall have been objected to by the overseers or by any other person, and such other person so objecting shall appeal by himself, or by some one on his behalf, in support of such objection, and shall prove that he gave the notice or notices respectively required by this Act to be given by him, every such barrister shall then require it to be proved that the person so objected to was entitled, on the last day of July then next preceding, to have his name inserted on the list of voters in respect of the qualification described in such list, and in case the same shall not be proved to the satisfaction of such barrister, or in case it shall be proved that such person was then incapacitated by any law or statute from voting in the election of members to serve in Parliament, such barrister shall expunge the name of every such person from the said list."

EAST SURREY.

Overseers' objections.

During this revision Chevallier complained of overseers making objections which it was not within their province to make, but were party objections, and also that the parties objected to not having had notice served on them, were not present, prepared to support their votes.

The Revising Barrister said he considered it a great hardship on the parties objected to not being served with notice, and expressed a very strong opinion that notice should be served by the overseers on the parties, the same as was done by the agents on both sides.

It is necessary to state in the new lists only those who have become entitled since the last revision.

A question was raised on Tuesday at Camberwell, and partly gone into, but was adjourned till Wednesday, at Croydon, where it was resumed, and a long argument ensued, the same point affecting the majority of parishes in that revision. In the parish of St. Giles's, Camberwell, the overseers, in making out their list of voters, did not include in that list persons who were entitled to vote of the rateable value of 12*l.*, but published a separate list.

Chevallier contended that the Reform Act of 1867 provides that the register should contain a list of owners and occupiers, and also a separate list of each year of all upon whom the right to vote was conferred by that Act; and that this latter list should comprise the names of all so entitled in each year. And inasmuch as the list of ratepayers of this parish comprised only those who had become so entitled since the last revision, therefore the names in the prior list must be struck out.

Sidney Smith contended that by the Registration Act (6 Vict. c. 18), from which he quoted and commented, these lists were sufficient.

Chevallier.—And "shall be annually made anew" are the words of the Act.

Sidney Smith.—It is a blunder on the part of the draftsman of the Government.

The Revising Barrister.—There is a difficulty there, certainly.

Chevallier.—After the 31st Dec. the old lists must be expunged; and all that the ratepayers of a county have to do is to look at the entire new list and see that it is correct. De facto a county list is the same as a borough list, and is done for after a certain time.

The Revising Barrister.—I have considered this important question, and shall rule that these lists are sufficient; but I shall be most happy to grant a special case, as I consider it a case of most vital importance. I consider the law just sufficient to carry me over in the opinion I have arrived at, and I think I ought to take a liberal view of the Act, but I have very considerable doubt about it. The point ought to be set at rest for ever. The Act of 6 Vict. c. 18, certainly helps me in the decision to which I have arrived.

Sidney Smith.—I contend that this court is not in a position to act in the matter at all, as no person is objected to. No doubt the overseers have acted upon the opinion of the Clerk of the Peace.

The Revising Barrister.—This point is of great importance, as it would lead to the disfranchisement of so many electors if these lists are decided to be null and void. I shall be only too happy to grant a special case if I can.

The revision of the parish of Croydon was then proceeded with, and the objections to the old list gone into, many of which were jointly agreed to.

THE NEW COMPOUNDING ACT.—On Wednesday the Act of last session as to tenants for short periods paying the poor-rate and deducting the same from the rent took effect. Landlords may now compound for the rates, and vestries, previously to the 29th inst., could enter into arrangements with the owners of small tenements.

NEGLECT CONDUCTING TO ADULTERY.—The wilful neglect or conduct conducing to adultery contemplated by sect. 31 of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, as constituting a bar to divorce, is that which conduces to a woman's first lapse from virtue, and not that which occurs after she has committed adultery: (St. Paul v. St. Paul, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 106. Div. and Mat.)

PRESENTATION TO THE TOWN CLERK OF BEWDLEY.

At a special meeting of the corporation of Bewdley, held at the Town Hall on Wednesday in last week, a most gratifying and appropriate testimonial was presented to Mr. W. N. Marcy, clerk of the peace for the county, and for many years town clerk of Bewdley.

The Corporation were accommodated with seats upon a raised platform, in front of which were arranged the articles for presentation.

The Mayor said the testimonial spoke for itself, and then proceeded to read the following address:

To William Nicholls Marcy, Esq., Town Clerk of the borough of Bewdley, Clerk of the Peace for the county of Worcester, and Captain of the 5th Worcestershire Company of Rifle Volunteers.

An Address from the Town Council of the Borough of Bewdley.

Sir,—At a meeting of the Town Council of the Borough of Bewdley, on the 3rd Aug. 1868, W. H. Ryland, Esq., Mayor, in the chair, it was moved by the Mayor, seconded by Councillor Whittington London, and resolved unanimously:

"That this council having taken into consideration the services of Mr. Marcy, the Town Clerk, for the long period of thirty-five years, desire to testify their high sense of his professional ability, personal courtesy, sterling integrity, and uniform zeal, as well for the interests of the borough as for the rights and dignities of the council, and hereby requests Mr. Marcy to sit for his portrait, to be placed and remain in the Town Hall, Bewdley.

"That in the event of Mr. Marcy's compliance with the foregoing request, a subscription be opened for the expenses of the portrait, and that any balance of subscriptions over such expenses be devoted to some further testimonial for presentation to Mr. Marcy.

"That this council, with other gentlemen, be a committee for carrying out the preceding resolutions, of which W. H. Ryland, Esq., shall be chairman, J. Nicholls, Esq., J. P., secretary, and A. M. Clinch, Esq., J. P., treasurer.

"That considering the fact that Mr. Marcy has held the office of Clerk of the Peace of the county of Worcester for twenty-five years, has been captain of the 5th Worcestershire Company of Rifle Volunteers since its formation, and is otherwise so widely known and respected, the opportunity should be given to his numerous friends outside the limits of the borough, to join in the intended testimonials, and that they be invited to do so by public advertisement and otherwise.

"That the subscription be limited to 1s. 6d., and be payable to the treasurer or secretary above-named, or to the credit of the subscription fund, at the Bewdley Bank, with which an account shall be opened by the treasurer for the purpose."

The subscription thus originated was liberally responded to, not only by members of the town council and other inhabitants of this borough, but also by many of the magistrates of the county of Worcester, and of your numerous professional and personal friends, as is shown by the list of subscribers presented to you with this address.

The sum so subscribed, amounting to 302. 4s. 6d., after payment for the portrait and incidental expenses, left a balance which has been expended by the committee entrusted with its disposal in the purchase of a silver salver and soup tureen, and a dinner service of Worcester porcelain, of which in the name of this council and of the subscribers generally, we hereby beg your acceptance as a small token of the sentiments expressed in the resolutions of this council of the 3rd Aug. 1868, already recited.

We beg at the same time to thank you for sitting for your portrait, and allowing it to be placed in the Town Hall, where it will, we anticipate, appear in its permanent position for the first time when this address is publicly presented to you.

We rejoice in the general opinion that the artist has achieved a very faithful likeness, which will preserve your present familiar features in the present memory of the youngest of those who now know and respect you, and will, we trust, transmit them in honour to many generations yet to come.

But we further rejoice that the occasion of this testimonial is not—as is too often the case—that of your retirement from public life, and we sincerely hope that you may continue to fill for many years each of the honourable offices you now hold, with that credit to yourself and that satisfaction to the public which are hereby emphatically recognised.

Given under our common seal this 22nd Sept. 1869.

The address was beautifully illuminated and printed by Messrs. Day and Son, the eminent lithographers, of London. The presentation service comprised a silver soup tureen and salver, elegantly executed by D. A. Ooper and Son, silversmiths, the Cross, Worcester, and a beautifully executed dinner service in porcelain, executed for the purpose by Mr. Grainger, of Worcester. The salver bore the following inscription:—

"Presented to Wm. Nicholls Marcy, Esq., together with a silver soup tureen and a dinner service of Worcester china, as the surplus of a public subscription originating in a resolution of the Town Council of the borough of Bewdley, Aug. 3rd, 1868, for placing the portrait of Mr. Marcy in the Town Hall, in recognition of his services as Town Clerk of Bewdley for thirty-five years, and as Clerk of the Peace for the county of Worcester for twenty-five years, and as captain of the 5th Worcestershire Company of Rifle Volunteers since its formation.—Whittington London, Esq., Mayor of Bewdley. Sept. 22nd, 1869."

The set of porcelain bore the crest of Mr. Marcy, with the motto "Le Paix et la Liberté de la Paix." The portrait, placed at the lower end of the hall, where it is intended to remain, was at this stage uncovered. The likeness is full length, and reflects the highest credit upon the artist, Mr. Nicol, of Edinburgh, and late of Worcester.

Mr. Marcy, in rising to acknowledge the presentation, was loudly cheered. He said: Mr. Mayor and gentlemen, or perhaps it would be more proper to say on the present occasion ladies and gentlemen, I suppose a speech is the lowest penalty I must expect to pay for the great honour you have this day done me, by the very flattering address just read, and the costly testimonials by which it is accompanied, and yet, to tell the truth, so incompetent do I feel to make one, or at least one worthy of the occasion, that to escape the penalty I should almost, if I had well weighed it beforehand, have rather waived the honour. What I really wish to say is this,—“I thank you, gentlemen with all my heart. I feel your kindness very deeply. I am well aware that I do not in the least deserve it, but I will try hard to be as little undeserving as possible, and I hope to show my sense of obligation to all of you collectively, and to each of you individually, as long as I live.” But I know you will call me shabby if I put you off with so few and such simple words as these. I must, therefore, try to thank you more fully and particularly. To the town council of the borough, then, my thanks are first and chiefly due, as well for having originated this testimonial, as for the far too kindly terms both of the resolutions of the 3rd Aug. 1868, and of their address this day, assurances of esteem, which enhance tenfold the value of the visible tokens, beautiful as they are, which I see before me; and with the members of the town council I must join my fellow-townsmen at large, who have so generally responded to the appeal, and followed the lead of the council. I trust that hereafter I shall be found to serve more zealously than ever in my public capacity, both the council, and those whom they represent, and also to the best of my private means and abilities be ready to advance the interests of the town, or to do a good turn to any one of its inhabitants. (Cheers.) In glancing over the list of subscribers, I must confess to special pride in the names of the Lord Lieutenant of the county of Worcester, of his able and eminent predecessor, Sir John Packington, and of those honourable and learned gentlemen, the late and present vice-chairmen, and of so many of the more active and distinguished magistrates of the county. It induces me to hope that in the opinion of those best qualified to judge I have shown a desire to discharge my duties in a clerkship of even wider and heavier responsibilities than that of this borough.

After the presentation the members of the corporation were entertained by Mr. Marcy to dinner at his residence. The proceedings were of a private character. The bells from the old church rang merrily during the day in honour of the event.

BANKRUPTCY COURT.

Wednesday, Sept. 29.

(Before Mr. Commissioner BACON.)

Re C. H. CHARLTON.

A renewed application for release out of custody was made by Charles Henry Charlton, described as of 26, Farringdon-street, and of 16, Waterloo-road, attorney-at-law. The bankrupt had been twenty-six years in practice, and he now came before the court with debts stated at about 300l.

It appeared that a former bankruptcy, under which the liabilities were 35,000l., had not yet been disposed of, but the bankrupt explained that creditors for 28,000l., who held security had been satisfied, and that he had done all in his power to discharge the claims upon him.

No further opposition was offered to the application, and the bankrupt's release was ordered.

NEW CHANCERY STAMPS.—All fees under the new Act (32 & 33 Vict. c. 91), are now payable by impressed or adhesive stamps in the Courts of Chancery, Admiralty, and Bankruptcy, or any of the offices thereto.

FEES IN THE COURT OF CHANCERY.—Under the new Courts of Justice Act (32 & 33 Vict. c. 91), which took effect yesterday (Friday), the Lord Chancellor, with the advice of three other judges, and with the concurrence of the Treasury, may, by order, increase, reduce, or abolish any or all the fees, and appoint new fees to be taken in the Court of Chancery.

THE CITY SHERIFFS.—The City sheriffs for the ensuing year—Alderman Causton and Mr. Vallentin—have been sworn into office. Mr. A. J. Baylis, Church-court, Old Jewry, is under-sheriff for Alderman Causton; Mr. James Crosley, Biscuit-lane, is under-sheriff for Mr. Vallentin.

DIVORCE.—Notwithstanding the extreme facility of divorce in the Western State of Indiana, it is doubtful whether the proportion of divorces to marriage there or in any other civilised country is equal to that exhibited by the statistics of the old Puritan State of Connecticut, where the annual average since 1860 has been one divorce to every ten marriages. Of the New England States, the next to the bad eminence of Connecticut is Vermont, which has an average of one to twenty. Massachusetts has one to forty-four. The State of Ohio has one to twenty-six. The divorce laws of the United States are very various—ranging from the common English law to those which empower judges to decree divorces for “sufficient causes.”

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.—The change made by the legislation of 1869 in the law of imprisonment for debt gives a special interest to recent returns, which show the extent to which creditors have of late resorted to this mode of enforcing payment of their debts. The number of annual commitments to the prisons of England and Wales for debt and on civil process has been increasing in the last few years. In the year ending at Michaelmas, 1865, it was 9443; in the year 1865-66, 10,598; in 1866-67, 11,647; in 1867-68, 12,833—viz., 12,258 men and 575 women. In this last year six counties had above 500 commitments of this class—Cheshire, 514; Derbyshire, 535; Staffordshire, 701; Yorkshire, 846; Middlesex, 1893; Lancashire, 2648. Neither Yorkshire, Cheshire, Staffordshire nor Derbyshire had so many as 30 women sent to prison in the year for debt or on civil process; but Middlesex had as many as 71, and Lancashire 148. In Cornwall 193 persons were imprisoned in the year for debt, and as many as 48 of them were women; and in Surrey the total was 133, and 46 of them, or one-third, were women. Three-fourths of these imprisonments were on county court commitments, the class that makes it so difficult absolutely to abolish imprisonment for debt.

A USEFUL HINT.—The New York correspondent of the Daily News has written an elaborate account of the American Safe Deposit Companies, established to obviate the alarm caused by the clever bank robberies which have been effected during the last few years. The account is given as of interest with reference to the discussions on this side as to the security of deeds left with bankers. One of the principal objects of the company is to let out safes placed in a specially guarded building for hire at rates of from 2l. to 8l. per annum, the hirer obtaining facilities for inspecting his property. He obtains a key of his own safe, which he keeps, and of which there is no duplicate, and over the key hole there is a lock or stopper of which the company keeps the key. It is thus impossible for anyone to get admission to a safe of which he has not got the key, and other precautions are taken to secure the owner's identity; and as the building and passages are brilliantly lighted at night, and there are watchmen and strong gates and patent locks, the property seems as secure as can be. The company, however, specially declines any responsibility for the safes thus committed to its keeping; so that the proceeding will hardly meet the complaint in England where property is practically safe in banks against theft, and what is wanted is something more in the shape of “insurance.” This insurance however the company also provides for a charge of 1-10th per cent on the nominal value of deeds deposited with them, or the declared value of sealed boxes of jewellery or plate. It is for some such arrangement that those who complain of the present want of a safe deposit for deeds should work. Bankers would be only too glad to be rid of their present onerous and thankless duty.

THE BENCH AND THE BAR.

A requisition is in circulation among the constituents of Mr. H. B. Sheridan, M.P., calling upon him to place his resignation in their hands. The subscribers to the document state that they have “no confidence in their member.”

It is understood that the Government have again pressed Lord Westbury to accept the vacant office of Lord Justice. When the same offer was made in November last Lord Westbury declined it, on the ground that he was of more use to the public in a judicial capacity in the House of Lords; but on the offer being repeated on the present occasion, and on his being urged by Lord Granville and Mr. Gladstone to reconsider the subject, he replied that, while still entertaining the same opinion—as he wished to act simply with a view to the public good, and without any admixture of personal feeling—he would refer the question to the Lord Chancellor, promising that if he considered he would be of more service as Lord Justice he would accept the office, and that if not, the refusal would rest solely on public grounds. It is believed that the Lord Chancellor, after fully considering the question, has very recently decided that it would not be for the public interest that Lord Westbury should be taken away from the appellate tribunal of the House of Lords, in which his talents are so pre-eminently beneficial. We think that the public, as well as Lord Westbury, are to be congratulated at this decision, as anything that would tend to weaken the appellate power of the highest court of judicature would be a serious evil at the present time.

MR. DIGBY SEYMOUR, Q.C., AND THE LATE NOTTINGHAM ELECTION PETITION.—Mr. Digby Seymour was present at a gala at the Trent Bridge Ground, Nottingham. A bullock was roasted on the occasion, and the festivities were got up by the friends of the late Sir R. J. Clifton, the proceeds being devoted to the funds now collecting for the purpose of raising a monument to the hon. baronet. Mr. Seymour having helped to carve the bullock, spoke at considerable length, and alluded to the late Nottingham election inquiry. After some remarks, to show that he had done all he could to further the petition, and that the judge, Baron Martin, was evidently adverse to it, Mr. Seymour went on to complain of Baron Martin's judgment. In his (Mr. Seymour's) humble opinion—he uttered it in all sincerity and with the full sense of the responsibility of what he was saying—that judgment could never carry with it the respect of the British community. (Cheers.) With every personal respect for Mr. Baron Martin as a man and as a judge, he said the moment that Mr. Seely admitted that on the ground or pretext that he had a broken hat or a torn coat, he employed 475 “lamb,” the presiding judge ought to have ruled that fact was fatal to the election. (Cheers.)

MAGISTRATE AND PARISH LAWYER.

CAMBRIDGE BOROUGH MAGISTRATES.

Friday, Sept. 10.

(Before CHARLES BALLS, H. H. HARRIS, and MOSES BROWNE, Esqrs.)

THE GUARDIANS OF THE CAMBRIDGE UNION v. PLUMB.

Husband and wife—Inadmissibility of evidence of wife—32 & 33 Vict. c. 38 s. 3.

Upon an information for neglecting to maintain a wife, and leaving her chargeable to the union, the evidence of the wife is not admissible, even although she was proposed to be called to give evidence of adultery, notwithstanding the 3rd section of the 32 & 33 Vict. c. 38.

This was an information charging George Thomas Plumb with deserting his wife and leaving her chargeable to the Cambridge Union.

Fetch for the complainants.

Poland Adcock for the defendant.

From the evidence it appeared that the wife of the defendant became chargeable to the union, and had been deserted by her husband, who alleged as a reason for not contributing to her support, that she had committed adultery with a man named Webb.

Poland Adcock proposed to examine the wife of the defendant as to the alleged adultery, and quoted the 3rd section of the 32 & 33 Vict. c. 38, which enacts “That the parties to any proceeding instituted in consequence of adultery, and the husbands and wives of such parties, shall be competent to give evidence in such proceedings.”

Eaden, clerk to the magistrates, ruled that this was not such a proceeding as the Act contemplated. As he read the Act, it only extended to cases in the Divorce Court.

Poland Adcock contended that, as the adultery of the woman was a good defence (Reeve v. Ward, 11 L. T. Rep. N. S. 449), the present proceeding was one contemplated by the Act.

The BENCH, however, refused to admit the wife's evidence, but upon other grounds dismissed the complaint.

SAFFRON WALDEN PETTY SESSIONS.

Saturday, Sept. 11.

(Before W. C. SMITH, Esq., Chairman, Rev. J. COLLIER, Capt. ELLIOTT, and J. HOUBLON, Esq.)

Re TANT.

The Beerhouse Act (32 & 33 Vict. c. 37)—Evidence of character.

Upon an application for a certificate for a beer license, it is not sufficient to produce the certificate of character under the old Act, by which the original licence was obtained, and proof of a conviction for selling beer by unjust measures, and keeping open the house during prohibited hours was held to be sufficient evidence of bad character to justify a refusal of the certificate.

This was an application by S. Tant for a certificate under the provisions of the Beerhouse Act, 32 & 33 Vict. c. 37.

Poland Adcock, for the applicant, handed in a certificate of character under the old Act, signed by five out of six ratepayers of the parish, and contended that this general evidence of good character was sufficient, and that the applicant was not compelled to obtain a certificate from the clergyman, churchwardens, and overseers as from various causes and obvious reasons, the obtaining of such certificate might be perfectly impracticable.

The CHAIRMAN.—The certificate put in is not in accordance with the rule adopted in this district.

Captain ELLIOTT handed in a paper to the Bench which the applicant's advocate demanded to see, but was refused.

Poland Adcock then called the superintendent of police, who stated that the applicant had kept the house for which he applied for a certificate for four years, and that it was well and respectably conducted. Applicant had been convicted about a year ago for selling beer during prohibited hours and for using an unjust measure. The superintendent had no other complaint.

Poland Adcock, to witness Flood.—Did not the Bench at the last sitting grant a licence to a person named Beatman without a certificate of character?

The CHAIRMAN ruled the question could not be put.

Poland Adcock proposed to ask under what circumstances the conviction for an unjust measure was obtained.

The CHAIRMAN decided that the question was an improper one; but, after some discussion, the clerk made the following note upon the depositions: “That evidence of a former conviction was tendered to prove how the applicant became possessed of the unjust measure, and under what circumstances the drinking within prohibited hours took place, and that the Bench refused to hear such evidence.”

The application for a certificate was refused.

The next General Quarter Sessions for the borough of Portsmouth will be held on Oct. 16. Recorder, Mr. Serjt. Cox. Ten days notice of appeal to be given.

The compounding Act has been adopted in Salford. It has been resolved that all owners of houses of a rateable value not exceeding 8l. per annum should be rated instead of the occupiers, and 25 per cent. was fixed upon as the abatement to compounders. It was stated that 11,000 out of 18,000 householders in the borough would be affected by the Act.

A FREE PARDON.—The Home Secretary has granted a full pardon to Archibald Brown, who was sentenced at the Kingston spring assizes, 1868, to five years' penal servitude for forgery, an offence to which he pleaded guilty. The youth—for he was but sixteen at the time—was the son of a gentleman, now deceased, who resided at Sorbiton, and by means of forged cheques he got a considerable sum of money from Messrs. Shrubsole's bank at Kingston. The condition of the pardon is that the liberated prisoner shall immediately quit England, and remain abroad during the remainder of the five years.

INSUBORDINATION IN THE ARMY.—The report on the discipline and management of military prisons in 1868, by Capt. E. F. Du Cane, Inspector-General, says: “The governors of military prisons generally concur in the opinion that insubordination has increased in the army during the past year, as evidenced by the number of men charged with that offence received at the prisons. The returns for previous years unfortunately do not give that offence under a separate head, and so do not enable the opinion to be tested or the degree of increase estimated, but it is observed that ‘other crimes’ (which in the returns for 1867 includes insubordination as being a crime not specified under a special heading) amounted to 1628 in 1867, and that the three heads under which these crimes are shown in this year's report, viz., breaking out of barracks 689; insubordination, 608; other crimes not included in the foregoing, 733, amount to 2921, being an increase of 393, which appears to justify the opinion.”

At the last meeting of the Maidstone Town Council the town clerk read a letter from the Lord Chancellor, stating that he had been asked to appoint three gentlemen to the commission of the peace for the borough, namely, Mr. George Edmett, Mr. F. W. Cutbush, and Mr. J. B. Green, and requesting that the names of these gentlemen might be submitted to the council for the purpose of ascertaining if there were any valid objections to their being added to the commission. The council, taking into consideration the onerous duties of the present acting magistrates in consequence of the recent deaths of some and the retirement from active life of others, thought that four new magistrates should be appointed. They, therefore, unanimously approved of the list submitted to them, and recommended the addition of the name of Mr. Alderman Clifford. The Lord Chancellor has now intimated to the town clerk that he has appointed Messrs. Edmett, Green, and Clifford; but that Mr. Cutbush being connected with the local press (the South-Eastern Gazette) he is unable to include his name.

THE SPECIAL FISHERY COMMISSION.—The special commissioners, for inquiring into the legality of fixed engines for taking salmon in the rivers and estuaries of England have given their decision on some important claims made before them by Lord Lonsdale and Lord Leconfield in reference to fixed engines on the West Cumberland coast. The Commissioners were Mr. James Paterson (chairman), Captain Spratt, and Major Scott; secretary, Mr. Brady. Lord Lonsdale's claim had been inquired into two years ago, and in December last judgment was postponed (as reported at the time in The Times) on the application of the Board of Conservators of the Fishery District, which Board had only then just been formed. The case was accordingly now re-heard, Mr. Jackson, solicitor, of Ulverston, appearing for the conservators to oppose the claim, and Mr. Lamb, solicitor, Whitehaven, for Lord Lonsdale. It was a claim for two stake-nets with traps in them on the sea coast, at the mouth of the river Duddon. The existing nets were proved to be respectively in length 77 yards, 220 yards, and 236 yards. One of these was abandoned. It was proved that Lord Lonsdale was lord of the manor of Millom, in which these nets are situate, and old witnesses and tenants of the fishery proved that the nets had been used in the same locality for as long as living memory could reach back. For the opponents of the claim it was contended that Lord Lonsdale had not a several and exclusive fishery at the place in question, but that the public had exercised the right of fishing there in defiance of any such right. One witness named William Cleasby, aged 75 years, swore that when his father fished it at the beginning of the present century, he being then a boy, the net was a small "baulk" without a trap or anything else in it, and that it merely served the purpose of detaining the fish when the tide ebbed; that, moreover, it was then half a mile from the place where the present stake-nets were placed, and that anybody that chose set their "caddles" or small baulks in the neighbourhood without interruption. In about the year 1806 or 1808 a Scotchman, named Irvine, came to the place, and he was the first to set the trap-net of the description of those now used; but before that time pockets or traps were not used in that part of the country. He remained about three years, and then pulled up his stakes and sold them, and others who succeeded him had imitated his mode of fishing since. It appeared that in the estuary of the Duddon—a wide sandy plain, not much below high water mark—the sands frequently shifted, and the channel consequently varied from time to time. In consequence of this the places where the nets were fixed one year would gradually sand up until the fishery there was quite destroyed, and hence the necessity of moving the nets as the sands shifted and the channel changed. The Commissioners decided that this change in the locality of the nets did not, under these circumstances, destroy the title to them, and while giving credit to the witness Cleasby, they considered the balance of evidence as to the user of these nets to be in favour of the noble claimant. They accordingly gave their decision in favour of the claim to the two nets, and decided that while he made due provision for observing the weekly and annual close time, &c., they were prepared to give him a certificate of their legality. The other cases decided were claims made by Lord Leconfield to a fish garth at Ravenglass, on the same coast, and a stop-net thereto at the mouth of the river Esk. Mr. Saul, solicitor, Carlisle, supported Lord Leconfield's claim by a mass of ancient documentary evidence tracing his lordship's title to the manor of Eskdale (in which the fisheries are situate) as far back as 1209, and bringing the evidence of title and mode of user down to the present day by living witnesses who challenged their memory back for 60 years. The claims to the fish garth were supported so satisfactorily that the Commissioners stopped Mr. Saul, and said it was the strongest case of the kind that had yet been brought before them, and they had no hesitation in saying that he had fully established its legality. They also certified for the stop-net, which is a net fixed on stakes across a tidal channel to stop the fish on the ebb tide, the fish being then taken out with a draught net.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

PRIVATE BILL.—LOCUS STANDI.—WATERWORKS.—LANDOWNER.—An Improvement Bill, promoted by the Corporation of St. H., among other objects to sanction the extension of their waterworks, was petitioned against by a landowner apprehensive of injury from the abstraction of underground water. It appeared that the pipes of the corporation would be laid along a road, the soil of which belonged to the petitioner, though the surface had been dedicated to the public: Held (without completing the discussion of the water question), that the petitioner had a locus standi on the ground of interference with the soil: St. Helen's Borough Improvement Bill, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 95. Ct. of Referees.)

WINDING-UP.—CONTRIBUTORY.—A member of a mutual marine assurance association, who had never received a stamped policy of insurance on his own ship was held not to be a contributory: (Smith's case, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 97. L. JJ.)

RAILWAY.—COMPULSORY POWERS.—A railway company was, by an Act passed in 1865, empowered to take compulsorily certain lands for the purposes of the Act, amongst which was the stopping up and appropriating A. street. The plaintiff, owner of lands adjacent, had no notice of the intention to apply for this Act, nor were his lands included or referred to therein, or in the deposited plans. By an Act passed in 1864, the company were, however, empowered so to take his lands, but solely for the purposes of that Act, amongst which the stopping up of A. street was not included: Held, that the company could not avail themselves of the powers of the earlier Act to take the lands of the plaintiff against his will, in order to apply them to the purposes of the later Act, and an injunction granted by James, V. C. was continued by the Court of Appeal. The company already possessed lands sufficient for the new road, but they were desirous of applying those lands to other objects, and therefore would not avail themselves of them, but it was held by Giffard, L. J. that this fact would have afforded no ground for the interference of the court by injunction at the plaintiff's instance, if the company had determined to take his land for purposes duly authorised by the Act under which they were empowered to acquire it: (Lamb v. The North London Railway Company, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 98. L. JJ.)

FIRE INSURANCE.—AGREEMENT WITH AGENT FOR POLICY.—SUBSEQUENT FIRE.—B. insured premises in the C. Company through D. an agent, who, without B.'s knowledge, ceased to be such agent, and became agent for the E. Company, and, on B.'s application for a fresh policy, gave him a printed receipt for deposit for a month until the policy could be made out. B. did not at first discover that the receipt was in the name of the E. Company, but when he did he wrote to D. noting the change, and saying that he knew nothing of the E. Company, and should require to be satisfied of its respectability before he could consent to give them the insurance. Before a policy was made out a fire occurred. The E. office had not communicated to B. its acceptance or refusal of the proposal, but refused to pay on the ground that B. by his letter had repudiated the insurance with them. They were justly held to be liable nevertheless: (Mackie v. The European Insurance Company, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 102. V. C. M.)

THE KERNEL OF THE IRISH LAND QUESTION.

The Post says it is not difficult to see from whence the extreme Irish suggestions come, nor to what it is hoped they will tend. The Romish priests located in Ireland do not regard—never have regarded—the Irish Church Bill as a final measure, or as effecting a settlement of any Irish question. That measure would, if allowed scope and freedom, create religious equality. The Roman Church in Ireland, as elsewhere, abhors religious equality. What they seek is ecclesiastical ascendancy, and, so long as there exists in Ireland a great territorial class attached to the Protestant Church, they never can possess it. The surplus revenues of the disendowed and disestablished Church revert to a considerable extent, in one shape or the other, to the land from which they came, and the land will again voluntarily contribute to the support of a Free Protestant Church. The object of the Roman Catholic clergy is beyond doubt now to obtain the transfer of the soil of Ireland from Protestants to members of their own Church, and they think they see in this manipulation of what is mistakenly called the tenant-right question an opportunity of effecting it. England and an English Parliament can never be at one with them, for the supporters of the Papal system will never be content so long as a Protestant proprietor remains in Ireland.

MERCANTILE LAW.

COMPOUND INTEREST.—It is stated that Dr. Franklin's gift of 1000*l.* to Boston in 1791, which was expected by the donor to increase in the course of 100 years to 131,000*l.* had only up to the beginning of this year (seventy-seven years from the date of the gift) increased to 133,493 dols. 36*c.* This amount converted into pounds is 27,811. Our readers may be interested to know that the rate at which the 1000*l.* was reckoned to increase to 131,000*l.* in 100 years was 5*l.* per cent. compound interest, and that there would then be a margin of 500*l.* for slight variations in calculating—the exact amount being no less than 131,500*l.* At the beginning of this year the amount should have been 42,812*l.* As it was only 27,811*l.* it follows that the money has only produced 4*l.* 8*s.* 3*d.* per cent. compound interest. At this same rate the amount will only reach 75,000*l.* at the end of the 100 years (twenty-three from Jan. 1 last). The full amount of 131,500*l.* may, however, be realised by obtaining 6*l.* 19*s.* 6*d.* per cent. compound interest for the twenty-three years.

ECCLIESIASTICAL LAW.

DISESTABLISHMENT IN WALES.—A petition to the Prime Minister praying that steps may be taken for the disestablishment and disendowment of the Established Church in Wales is being numerously signed in various parts of the principality. The memorialists state that of the present five bishops, one—the Bishop of St. Asaph—is wholly ignorant of the Welsh tongue, and has never been able in such tongue to discharge any function,

(a) This paragraph may be omitted in the case of copies certified by the incumbent. (See 14 & 15 Vict. c. 39, s. 14.)

(b) The register or copy only proves the fact of the baptism, marriage, or death of the person therein named, and is no evidence of the identity of a party: (Powell on Evidence, 3rd edit. 420.)

precisely or episcopal, towards the souls of the Welsh people, and that nevertheless he has received since his appointment above 90,000*l.* sterling in addition to patronage exceeding that vested in the four English bishoprics of Carlisle, Hereford, Lichfield, and Chester. The petitioners state that another of their bishops is a Scotchman and that since the accession of the Hanoverian family no Welshman has ever been advanced to a bishopric in his native land.

BANKRUPTCY LAW.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

DEED OF ASSIGNMENT—INEQUALITY.—The trustees of a deed of assignment made by two partners contracted with certain of the creditors to deal with both the joint and separate estate of the debtors in such a manner as to pay all the creditors, both joint and separate, 5*s.* in the pound; and creditors were induced by the prospect so held out to them to assent to the deed. From the accounts annexed to the deed, it appeared that if this contract were carried into effect the joint creditors would gain an advantage over the separate creditors of both partners, and the separate creditors of one partner an advantage against those of the other: Held, that such a deed could not be sustained against an adjudication in bankruptcy against the debtors: (Re Evans and Evans, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 112. Rank.)

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY, SEPT. 27.

The business disposed of to-day was not of a nature to justify a report.

The public sittings for the hearing of applications by bankrupts to pass their examination and for orders of discharge recommenced on Friday.

The courts of the other learned commissioners will not be reopened until November.

CUSTOMARY HEREDITAMENTS—COVENANT TO SURRENDER.—I send you below a form of admission of A. B. to certain customary hereditaments, situate within the manor of Langdale, in the county of Westmoreland. A. B., after admission, sold the customary hereditaments to E. F. E. F.'s solicitor prepared a deed of covenant from A. B. to surrender into the hands of the lord the said customary premises to the use of E. F., according to the custom. Upon presenting this deed at the lord's court for the manor of Langdale for admission, E. F. is told by the law steward of the Earl of Lonsdale that his deed is erroneous—that a deed of covenant to surrender only applies to copyholds (an assertion which the form of admission in this case makes me doubt), and will only admit upon the deed being altered from a deed of covenant to surrender into an absolute deed of conveyance of the customary hereditaments, using for that purpose the proper operative words. I shall feel obliged by the opinion of some of your readers (having regard to the form of admission of A. B. given below) as to whether the deed of covenant from A. B. to E. F. to surrender was or was not the correct mode of assurance in this case, or whether or not the law steward of the lord was justified in insisting upon the insertion in the deed of the before-named alterations before he would admit E. F.

JOHN WILSON.

Manor of Langdale, of the Marquis fee, in the Barony of Kendal.

Be it remembered this 23rd Dec. 1785 that A. B. of &c., gentleman, petitioned me, the Right Hon. James Earl of Lonsdale, &c., &c., lord of the said manor, and prayed to take of me all that customary messuage, &c., situate, lying, and being in Great Langdale, within the manor or Langdale, of the Marquis fee and yearly customary rent of 1*l.*, which are in my hands upon the surrender of C. D., of &c., yeoman, whereupon I, the said lord, do hereby admit the said A. B., tenant of the said premises, to hold the same unto the said A. B., according to the custom of the said manor, he yielding, paying, and performing for the same, at the days and times accustomed, all such rents, fines, dues, duties, and services as are therefore due and payable to me out of the said premises. And the said A. B. having paid to me the said lord a piece of silver called a God's penny, and the sum of 7*s.* as a fine for his admission, is accordingly admitted tenant of the said premises in manner and form aforesaid.

LONSDALE.

County Court Office, Kendal, 23rd Sept. 1869.

PAYMENT OF COSTS.—Where no agreement is made as to payment of costs on the letting of a property, and the lessor and lessee employ their respective solicitors, is it the practice for the lessee to pay the lessor's solicitor's costs, as well as those of his own solicitor? And will you kindly inform me what is the practice in such a case? A. B.

PHONOGRAPHIC DEED.—Will any of your subscribers kindly inform me if a deed written in phonographic characters would be legal, and if there has been any decision on that point. Yours, &c.

AN ARTICLED CLERK.

SERVICE OF ARTICLED CLERKS.—I should be glad for advice in the interpretation of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, and the illustrations given to it by the Incorporated Law Society. I wish to take an LL.B. degree at London University. I presume working for the examination, whether in or out of office hours, whether at classical subjects for the matriculation, whether at constitutional or Roman law for the 1st LL.B., or at modern law (equity, conveyancing, &c.) for the 2nd LL.B. examination, could in no sense be termed "employment," by which word I understand "service to another." But could the society, supposing the case were brought formally before them, sanction the devotion of a portion (say one hour per diem) of an articulated clerk's time to this indirect self professional education? Of course I assume the principal's compliance. Such a degree, taken before execution of articles, would shorten the time of service by two years, i.e., two-fifths of the whole time. Could the society then object to two-fifths or less (and in practice it would of course be less) of the time of service being devoted to the attainment of the degree. I would also thank my informant if he could tell me anything as to the advantages or disadvantages of the course I propose to a solicitor. INFLUENS.

PROFESSIONAL HONOUR.—Concluding, from my regular perusal of your able and impartial paper, that you are interested in publishing matters which affect the honour of either branch of the legal profession, I ask the favour of your inserting this letter. I am one of those solicitors who consider their avocation a learned profession, requiring a liberal education, and entitling its members to that consideration which is accorded to, and expected by, gentlemen of other professions; but if reports be true a solicitor has met with far different treatment at the hands of the Election Commissioners at Beverley. The Daily News of the 27th Sept. says: "The commissioners were privately talking over the 'situation,' when Serjt. O'Brien, the chief commissioner, remarked that he had noticed some whispering among a number of attorneys and their clerks, and it looked suspicious. Mr. Champney, solicitor, rose and said 'he could explain that.' The chief commissioner said 'he would not hear him.' Mr. Champney said 'he would be heard; and if the commissioner would not hear him he would say it to the public and the press.' The chief commissioner said, 'You shall not.' Mr. Champneys: 'But I shall.' The chief commissioner: 'Remove him.' Mr. Commissioner Barstow: 'Remove him;' and ultimately Mr. Champney had to retire. Now, even assuming that there was something suspicious in the whispering, it is difficult to conceive of any circumstance that could justify the commissioners' refusal to hear Mr. Champney's explanation. Suspicion is only surmise, and not knowledge, and therefore a suspected man always has, or ought to have, an opportunity of exculpating himself before his conduct is censured as being blameworthy; and it is almost impossible to believe that any gentleman (not being a solicitor) would in such a manner have been refused permission to justify himself from an offence which was only supposititious. 'He who strikes should hear.' The mere hardship of the case is, however, only a subordinate matter when compared with the disparagement which the Profession may have suffered in the person of one of its members; and I regard it as a matter of importance, not only to solicitors, but also the public, that professional status and reputation should be jealously preserved, and, if possible, raised. Such 'scenes in court,' however, as that at Beverley can only have a contrary effect. A SOLICITOR.

NOTES AND QUERIES ON POINTS OF PRACTICE.

Queries.

96. AFFIDAVITS—SWEARING BY ATTORNEY NOT OF ROLLS.—Can a man who was formerly an attorney but who was struck off the rolls ten years ago, and never put on since, now swear people to affidavits in the Queen's Bench? Can such affidavits be used in courts of law as valid affidavits? And what is the punishment for swearing people to such affidavits, as I presume the party is not now an officer of the Superior Court. R. E. B.

97. COPYHOLDS—ADMISSION OF MORTGAGEE OF—A. owner in fee of freeholds and copyholds, mortgaged the same to B. The mortgage contained a covenant to surrender the copyholds to B., but he was never admitted during the lifetime of A. A., by his will, devised his real estate to trustees in trust for his wife for life. The trustees were never admitted to the copyholds, but the wife has been admitted as tenant for life. B., the mortgagee, having demanded payment of his mortgage-debt, the wife paid the amount out of her own moneys, and the mortgagee has transferred the mortgage to her. She, requiring payment of the money, has applied to C. to advance her the same on transfer of the mortgage, but he refuses to do so unless she procures his admission on the court rolls; and to do this the steward of the manor states that the trustees must be admitted, then they must surrender to the wife, by three separate surrenders (there being three properties), and then she must surrender to her transferee. It will thus be seen that the lord of the manor receives the four sets of fees, he having been paid fees on the admission of the tenant for life (the wife). The opinion of any of your correspondents is kindly requested on the following points: 1. Whether the steward is right in demanding that the wife be again admitted, she being already on the rolls? 2. Whether the wife can claim from the trustees the fees she may be put to in procuring the admission of herself and her transferee, the covenant in the original mortgage extending to the assigns of the mortgagee? 3. How the ad valorem duty should be distributed, there being three separate copyhold properties and two freehold? W. H. L.

88. SOLICITORS IN INDIA.—I am an articled clerk and intend to go out to India as soon as admitted. Will some one be so good as inform me what is necessary to enable a solicitor to practise in India; is anything requisite beyond being admitted in England? What books should I specially devote myself to? Is the expense of living there any greater than living here? X. Y. Z.

Answers.

(Q. 91.) TITLE DEEDS—SECURITY.—This deposit is a good security. An equitable mortgage is created by the deposit of deeds, &c., with or without writing; such a deposit is of itself evidence of an agreement for a legal mortgage of the estate, of which agreement the creditor may avail himself by filing a bill as of an agreement in writing for that purpose: (Smith's Comp., 3rd edit., 407.) The word used in the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, ss. 77, 79, is "deed." The memorandum referred to in this query requires no acknowledgement by "B."; it is, in fact, only an equitable undertaking to execute a legal mortgage if required. ADVOCATE.

(Q. 92.) JOINT ASSAULT—POWER OF COMMITTING MAGISTRATE TO SEPARATE OFFENCE.—I cannot see upon what ground a magistrate in the case stated would be induced or justified in separating the offence described. As stated it was most clearly a joint assault, and as such would either amount to felony or a serious misdemeanour, and in either case the party aiding or abetting is liable to be tried, indicted, and punished as a principal: (24 & 25 Vict. c. 94, ss. 1, 8.) And as Mr. Oke says (Syn. p. 151), "where the offence arises from the joint act of several persons, each is liable for all the consequences and to the full penalty or imprisonment." ADVOCATE.

(Q. 93.) ARTICLES OF CLERKSHIP—DATE.—Must be dated the day of execution: (See form of affidavit, Gwy's Practice, 9th edit. p. 491.) ADVOCATE.

—The articles cannot be dated back, although the clerk may have been in the office long prior to their execution, and if A. E. D. will refer to the statute 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, he will find it enacted by sect. 3 "That the full term of five years must be prospective, and the articles must not be ante dated nor executed after the term has commenced." Vide also Wharton's Articled Clerks' Manual, 8th edit., Appendix, p. 633. Thus it is expressly forbidden; the rule being that the service runs from the day of the actual signing of the articles. And this is so clearly established in practice that any attempt to evade it would be extremely dangerous. W. L. O.

(Q. 95.) PURCHASE OF PROPERTY—INCUMBRANCES.—Though it is only prudent to do so, yet it is not the duty of a purchaser to search for incumbrances, for if it were, the registry would of itself be notice to all the world, but registration is not of itself notice. Notice to bind a purchaser may be either actual or constructive, but a purchaser or mortgagee is not affected by any incumbrance of which he had neither actual nor constructive notice: (Smith's Comp., 3rd edit., p. 822, et seq.) LAW LIBRARY.

Nationality; or the Law relating to Subjects and Aliens considered with a view to future Legislation. By the Right Hon. Sir A. COCKBURN, Lord Chief Justice of England. London: Ridgway.

The Lord Chief Justice then proceeds to a comparison of this law with the laws of other countries, of which he presents an interesting abstract, concluding with a resumé of the foreign laws regulating

THE NATIONALITY OF MARRIED WOMEN ABROAD.

Before quitting this branch of the subject, it is necessary to say a word as to the nationality of married women in other countries. In every country, except where the English law prevails, the nationality of a woman on marriage merges in that of the husband; she loses her own nationality, and acquires his; whereas, by the law of England, though, as has already been pointed out, since the Act of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 66, an alien woman marrying a British subject becomes naturalized, an English woman marrying an alien still remains a British subject. The law of America is the same. An American woman married to a foreigner retains her American nationality.

Hence, so long as the common law remained unaltered, arose this singular result, pointed out by Mons. Demangeat in his notes to Felix. While an English woman, on marrying a Frenchman, became a French woman, without ceasing to be a British subject, and so acquired a second nationality, a French woman, on marrying a British subject, while she acquired no British nationality, by the operation of the French law, lost her own, and thus ceased to belong to any nation at all. The latter anomaly has been cured; the former remains.

On the other hand, provision is made in all the continental codes for enabling a woman, whose nationality of origin has thus been changed into that of her husband, to resume, if so minded, her original nationality on becoming a widow; on the condition, however, if not resident in the country of origin, of returning to it, for which, in some instances, the authority of the State is required.

The nationality of a married woman being thus merged in that of the husband, it follows that where nationality is made to depend on descent, the nationality of the father is all that need be looked to, so far as the case of legitimate children is concerned. On the other hand, the nationality of natural children depends on that of the mother, except, indeed, where, as can be done by the continental law, as distinguished from that of England, the father by subsequent marriage, or by formal recognition, legitimises the offspring.

Wherever the parents are unknown, they are presumed to have belonged to the country in which the child is found; so that the child of unknown parents always takes the nationality of the country in which he is first found.

These provisions are common to all the continental codes.

The second chapter treats of Naturalization, upon the law of which there is much conflict arising out of the opposing rights and interests of the individual and the governments. Individuals may and do thus endeavour to escape from their obligations to their own government, and governments are subject to claims for protection against the demands of another state; the principal cause of conflict being the conscription. The result has been that "the mode by which, and the conditions under which, the second nationality may be acquired, and its effects when acquired, differ in almost every country," causing constant embarrassment. This is a short statement of the principles of

NATURALIZATION IN ENGLAND.

In this country, naturalization has existed from an early period under two forms. It might be conferred, 1, by the Sovereign by virtue of the prerogative; 2, by Act of Parliament. The first, as distinguished from the second, is known under the name of denization, and persons acquiring the character of subjects under it are termed denizens. When the status of a British subject is conferred by Act of Parliament the proceeding is termed naturalization. Denization can only be effected by letters-patent from the Sovereign; naturalization only by, or under, an Act of the Legislature.

The difference between the two in point of effect is of a substantial character. Denization has no retrospective operation, while by naturalisation, conferred by Act of Parliament, the alien was placed in exactly the same position as if he had been born a subject. A denizen is thus in an intermediate position between an alien and a natural-born subject, and partakes of both these characters. He may take lands by purchase or devise, which an alien may not; but he cannot take by inheritance; for his parent, through whom he must claim, being an alien, had no inheritable blood, and therefore could convey none to his son. And, on account of a like defect of hereditary blood, the issue of a denizen, born before denization, cannot inherit to him; but his issue, born after it, may. On the other hand, the son of a naturalised subject, though born before the naturalization of the father, could always derive descent through the father, and inherit as though the father had been a natural-born subject.

The position of aliens in this country is anomalous. An alien has unlimited ownership of personality, but he may not hold real property for more than a term of twenty-one years, and he is therefore incapable of inheriting a freehold. Consequently, he cannot hold it as trustee for another, nor can an alien husband be tenant by the courtesy of the estate of his wife, being a subject. But, otherwise as to personal property, he enjoys the same rights in all respects as does an Englishman. The Lord Chief Justice cites the quaint but noble language of the Statute of the Staple, 27 Edw. 3, s. 12, c. 17, for the protection of traders who were aliens. It is well worth extraction.

Merchants of enemies' countries shall sell their goods in convenient time and depart; no merchant stranger shall be impeached for another's debt, whereof he is not debtor, pledge, nor mainpignor: Provided, always, that if our liege people, merchants, or others, be endangered by any lords of strange lands, or their subjects, and the said lords duly required fail of right to our said subjects, we shall have the law of marque, and of taking them again, as hath been used in times past, without fraud or deceit; and in case that debate do arise (which God defend) betwixt us and any lords of strange lands, we will not that the people and merchants of the said lands be suddenly subdued in our said realm and lands because of such debate, but that they be warned, and proclamation thereof published, that they shall void the said realm and lands, with their goods, freely, within forty days after the warning and proclamation so made; and that in the meantime they be not impeached, nor let of their passage, or of making their profits of the same merchandises, if they will seek them. And in case that for default of wind, or of ship, or for sickness, or for other evident cause, they cannot avoid our said realms and lands within so short a time, then they shall have other forty days, or more, if need be, within which they may pass conveniently with selling their merchandise as aforesaid.

While on British soil an alien enjoys free access to the courts of law, as against foreigners, for wrongs within the jurisdiction, and on contract for causes of action arising anywhere; and as against British subjects for any cause of action, wheresoever arising. He is subject to the bankrupt laws, and entitled to the benefit of them.

The following are the

INCAPACITIES OF ALIENS.

1. They are incapable of any political rights, including that of holding any office of trust.
2. They cannot hold landed estate except for a term not exceeding twenty-one years.
3. They cannot own British ships.

After reviewing the amendments proposed by the commissioners in their report, approving of some, objecting to others, and suggesting alternatives, Sir A. Cockburn thus states the conclusions at which he has arrived as to the

AMENDMENTS REQUIRED.

The results at which we appear to have arrived are these:—

1. That under a sound system of international law such a thing as a double nationality should not be suffered to exist.
2. That nationality of origin should be derived from descent alone; except in the case of children born of foreigners domiciled in the country of such children's birth—in the first generation, on a claim being made within a fixed period after attaining majority—in the second in the absence of a declaration that they desire not to become subjects. But in both these instances, in order to avoid the evil of a double nationality, the right should be given only where a corresponding law exists in the country of the foreign parent.
3. That it should be free to every one to expatriate and denationalise himself, and to transfer his allegiance to another country.
4. That the effect of naturalization should be to do away altogether with the prior nationality.
5. That emigration with the intention of expatriation and of becoming a citizen of another State should have the effect of putting an end to the relation of subject, unless, prior to naturalization, the party should abandon the intention of becoming naturalized in the foreign country and return to the country of origin with the intention of remaining in it and of resuming the character and status of subject.
6. That, though prior residence may properly form an element in the consideration whether a person should be admitted to be naturalized, no absolute condition should be attached to naturalization, except that of actual bonâ fide domicile at the time of admission.
7. That, in respect of civil rights, with the single exception of the ownership of British shipping, for which settled residence, or even a licence, should be required, aliens should be placed on the same footing as subjects, without any reference to the principle of reciprocity.
8. That, as no one should be admitted to be naturalized except such persons as intend to settle finally in the country and to identify themselves with its interests, it is advisable to admit the naturalized alien to full political as well as civil rights, on the footing of an ordinary subject, making no distinction between his status as a subject at home and abroad.
9. That the nationality of the children of a person thus changing his country, if born after his naturalization, should follow that of the father.

If born before, and minors, they should be subjects of the new country, with a right, however, of disclaiming its citizenship within a given period. If of age, but still forming part of the father's family, they should bear liberty, on declaring their desire, to participate in the newly acquired nationality.

10. That the nationality of a married woman should always follow that of the husband, whether original or acquired, but on widowhood a woman should be entitled to resume her original nationality on returning and settling in her former country.

By a system of law, founded upon and giving effect to these principles, aliens would be placed on the footing which a generous comity should dictate; the inconvenience of a double nationality would be prevented; every one would know where his allegiance was due, without being exposed to the danger of having conflicting claims made on it, and if in need of protection, would know where to look for it; governments would not be troubled by claims for protection involving doubtful and embarrassing questions of nationality; every one would be at liberty to act upon the maxim ubi bene, ibi patria, and to seek fortune and happiness where he thought he was most likely to find it; and Governments might receive eligible citizens into the community without the fear of troublesome disputes or collision with other powers.

Much of what is here proposed, looking to what is now the law of other nations, might be effected by our own legislation; and the comity which should exist among nations, not merely in the administration of the law, but, as to matters of common interest and concern, in legislation also, would probably induce other States to meet in a corresponding spirit the efforts which Her Majesty's Commissioners wisely recommend to be made to settle this department of international law on principles of reciprocity, and would lead them to assist in bringing uniformity and order into it, so as to prevent the possibility of future dispute or conflict on questions nationality.

LEGAL OBITUARY.

THE LATE LORD JUSTICE CLERK.

"All doubt, and all hope, are now at an end—it is ascertained that the Lord Justice Clerk is no more; and it only remains to recall what he was." With these words the Scotsman introduces a memoir, written with a personal knowledge of the late judge, which, after his melancholy end, will be read with a deep though painful interest:—

George Patton was, we believe, about sixty-six years of age. He was born in Perth, and educated in part there and in part at Oxford. His father was sheriff-clerk of Perthshire, an office subsequently held by his eldest brother, James. He was called to the bar in June 1828, on the same day with Lord Deas and Mr. James Anderson, Q.C. His social position and his Perth connection secured him cases to begin with and an introduction to the profession; and his painstaking industry, burning zeal, and unflinching politeness and kindness to all and sundry secured the goodwill of agents and of clients, and even of adversaries. His style of speaking was rather vehement and spasmodic, and was deficient in moderation and in dignity; but it was full of earnestness, and for the most part showed that he had convinced himself as a preparation to attempting to convince others. It was a style better fitted for the pulpit or a Church Court than for forensic pleading. He had a large practice in railway litigations, and was known in some circles by the name of "Railway Patton." He was a Tory in politics, but somehow or other his party neglected him, and allowed him to toil on at his profession without any political recognition or preferment, until in the summer of 1866 they required a Lord Advocate, and his claims were such that they could not be ignored. His Tory predecessor in that office, the M.P. for Bute, had been raised to the bench by the Whigs, and had taken his seat as Lord Mure in January 1865, and Mr. Patton was the Tory advocate whose seniority and extent of practice pointed him out as the right man for that high place. Besides, he was the only Tory advocate in practice who had secured a seat in Parliament, he being in 1866 M.P. for Bridgewater. But, unfortunately, when he, on his appointment to office, presented himself for re-election at Bridgewater, he was defeated by Mr. Vanderbyl, or by his money, or his friends' money. During his tenure of office he prepared a great many bills, some of which passed into law. The most important of these are the Debts Recovery Act, and the Acts directing the taking of evidence by the Court of Session Judges, and permitting it to be taken down by a shorthand writer. Nothing was so trivial as to be beneath his attention. He drafted the provisions of Acts of Parliament, but he also read sheaves of certificates in favour of candidates for Crown presentations to parish churches, and puzzled and groaned, as we happen to know, over the rhetorical exaggerations and gross suppressions of the truth with which they abounded. Nor can we forget one graceful little thing that he did, or helped to do, and that was the obtaining of knighthood for the president of the Royal Academy whom we now all take pleasure in calling Sir George Harvey, R.S.A. The elevation of Lord President McNeill to the peerage was another honour which he probably helped to obtain for Scotland of course not without an ulterior selfish motive, which any man of woman born and in litigation bred may well be excused for having entertained. That event led to his elevation to the chair of the Lord Justice Clerk and the presidency of the second division, in the end of February 1867. He has thus held the important office now fallen vacant by his tragic death for the period of two years and seven months. As a judge, he secured for himself less of that respect and veneration which intellect secures; but if the truth be told, he was far less dreaded than either, and much more liked by a large proportion of the legal profession. The second division was during his reign all but unanimously pronounced to be "a very pleasant court to plead before." No modest, hesitating, young, or tedious old advocate ever complained of being snubbed or "sat" upon by him or extinguished by his questions. His good nature and perfect politeness never failed. He listened with apparent patience to all arguments (some of which must, of course, have been absurd), and neither pleader nor litigant could leave the court without feeling that all that could be urged, or at least all that was urged, had been listened to with courteous attention, and that he and his brethren on the bench—who worked happily and cheerily with him—had striven to ascertain the best that could be advanced on both sides of the question. His weakness as a judge lay in his inability to perceive logical and metaphysical or quasi-metaphysical distinctions. His strength as a judge lay in his earnest desire to do right, which is, after all, the most valuable and essential of all judicial qualifications. His Oxford education, though it had left him in the dark as to logic and metaphysics, had imbued him with a taste for classical literature and the fine arts. He was, we doubt not, born to be a lover of the beautiful, and his taste in painting, sculpture, and in architecture was naturally excellent, and was highly cultivated. He was his own architect and designer, and had his house beautified with ingenious adaptations of the antique of his own devising. He took a great interest in gardening and in forest trees, and spent a good deal of his vacation leisure in planting and otherwise ornamenting his estate of Cairnries, and his brother's estate of Glenalmond, to which he succeeded only three weeks ago. Personally, he was much liked by all who came near him. His most steady and devoted allies were for the most part men of stronger will than his own; but such was the goodness of his heart that it cost him a pang to do an unkind thing to any human being, and he was always disposed to say a kind word or do a kind action if he possibly could. Those who knew him will never forget his genial smile and frank talk, so far from pride and all sort of arrogant pretension, that if any man was oppressed by a sense of inferiority in his company it was no fault of his. Indeed, he was somewhat too modest and timid, and if that conduced to bring about the amiability of his character it also helped to deprive him of that reputation for capacity of original intellectual effort which can never be justly secured without a considerable strength of self-reliance, and a firm faith in the light of a man's own thinking as his most available and trustworthy guide in this world of doubt and deception, and all sorts of flattering or terrifying mists and falsehoods. How far his brother's recent death, the rash consequent erroneous public announcement of his own, and the oblique, but offensive, accusations in the course of being made before the Bridgewater Bribery Commission, may have broken in upon the natural timidity of his mind, and overset it, God alone knows. We do not pretend to judge him at all in his last act, but we shall resolutely think of him in death with that large charity which we are sure in life he always readily accorded to others.

LAW SOCIETIES.

THE SOCIAL SCIENCE CONGRESS.

JURISPRUDENCE.

ON Thursday morning at the aggregate meeting of the members and associates of the Social Science Association at Bristol, Mr. G. W. Hastings delivered his address as president of the Department of Jurisprudence, in the course of which he said that among the branches of moral and economical science which the association pursues, jurisprudence justly occupies the first place, inasmuch as all the leading subjects with which the other branches deal, must ultimately find their expression in law. All the various questions grouped under the head of Social Economy are all continually adding to the statute book. Legislation in a free country is the expression of the popular will, and the more completely it is so, the more safe and beneficial will it be. The impulse of a nation, unless in its most evanescent moods, is to work in accordance with the necessities of the age; and though the impulse may be blind or unconscious, it is not the less unerring in its aim, for the necessities out of which it springs are the silent enduring forces of nature, constant in their operations. These social forces are at work in every nation, at all periods of its history, disintegrating the old, and building up the new; and it is the province of Social Science to investigate the origin and nature of the motive powers which thus act upon society. It has also a more practical work to do in adjusting the machinery of society, so that it may move in harmony with the great necessities that impel its progress, with the wants and aspirations of the people; and this adjustment can be effected only by the instrumentality of law. The whole material universe is self-regulated; but when we come to man we find a change. The free will has opened the flood-gates of evil as well as the infinite possibilities of good. Human society has to win its way through toil, privation, and disease, and the manifold evils that grow with the good fruits of man's companionship have to be repressed or regulated by the strong arm of the law. The question of how to adjust the machine of society to the inexorable necessities of its existence is the great problem to be solved by the law. The object of the criminal law is to reduce crime to the minimum point, and thus provide the highest security for life, property, and honest toil; but the intention, however excellent, must fail in its execution if either the law or its administration is ill-adapted to its purpose. The evils that exist are the result of a want of scientific investigation, and could be wholly eradicated by a proper adjustment of means to the end required. In civil procedure, too, if the process be complicated and costly, if the courts be distant and intermittent, if the law's delay breaks down the weary litigant, the object of legislation is lost. Judicial science is, therefore, needed to prevent procedure from failing of its end. When the question, "What is the law?" is answered by pointing to hundreds of volumes teeming with thousands of decisions, with one-third of which no living lawyer is acquainted, is it not a mockery to speak of the law as an exposition of rights and duties to the people? Yet that mass of chaotic fluidity could be moulded under the hand of science into a compact and luminous code, the reflection of the national spirit and the object of willing reverence to its justice and wisdom. Looking back to the past twelve months, the members of the association had every reason to congratulate themselves on the results attained. The Evidence Bill had, with slight alterations, passed into law, and so far as civil procedure is concerned, the parties to every suit are admissible as evidence. It now remained for Mr. Denman to vindicate the entirety of Lord Denman's preamble by a measure extending to defendants in criminal cases the privilege of giving evidence in their own behalf. With respect to the law of perjury, above all, the present law is a crying absurdity. The Married Women's Property Bill was successfully conducted through the House of Commons, and its principle was admitted by the House of Lords. Our jurisprudence is on this point subject to the heaviest reproach that can be made against the law; it is unequal in its dealings, it has one measure for the rich and another for the poor. It is marvellous that such iniquity should yet be retained as law, and no effort should be spared to cleanse the law of England of this blot on its purity and justice. It was satisfactory to know that the Bankruptcy Act of last session had both vindicated the principles and followed the example of the association. It is imperative that the administrators of justice should be handsomely paid, but not extravagantly. The advice of the association had been followed with good effects in the regulation of convict prisons and the treatment of habitual criminals; and it was to be hoped that the county gaols in Ireland, and also in India would be better managed. The representations of the association had been received with great kindness by the late Secretary for India, now president of the association, and by the present Governor-General. The legislation on the licensing of beerhouses had aroused a hope that great good would result from it, and Mr. Hastings, after referring to the fact that there were a thousand parishes in the province of Canterbury which have no public-house or beerhouse, said that he was in favour of some measure of stringent repression acting uniformly over the whole kingdom, rather than of sporadic efforts in particular localities. The appointment of a public prosecutor was a growing necessity of our times, and the intervention of such an officer was needed, not only in ordinary criminal cases, but in those gigantic frauds and organised offences which were the scourge of the more helpless members of society. The duty of inquiry into the conduct of elections might be safely placed in the hands of a public prosecutor, and the offence of bribery might be quickly repressed by punishment by imprisonment. The great need of the age was for a codification of our national jurisprudence, and instead of a cumbersome body of much-occupied dignitaries, a small commission of three of the judges could perform the work in a reasonable time. The besetting error of every profession was to encrust itself with forms and rules, and thus lose the sympathy of the public, and the only antidote to this failing was to found all legal usage, and to administer all legal procedure on the maxim that the law exists for the people, and not the people for the law.

LEGAL NEWS.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.—The will of the late Mrs. Eliza Doncaster, of Winthorpe, Nottinghamshire, who died June 21 last, was proved under 12,000l. She has bequeathed to the Medical Benevolent Society 200l.; the Clergy Orphan School, the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, the Royal Hospital for Incurables, the Hospital for Paralysis, and the National Lifeboat Institution, each 100l.; and to the Cancer Hospital and the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, each 50l. The will of the Right Hon. James Edmund Baron Cranston, of Creeling, North Britain, was proved in the London Court on the 2nd inst., and the personalty sworn under 45,000l., the executors and trustees appointed being the Right Hon. Elizabeth Baroness Cranston, the relict; Sir Edward Marwood Elton, Bart., and James Marwood Elton, Esq., of Widworthy Court, Devon. The will is made in the Scotch form, bearing date in 1865. His lordship died at his residence, Duncroft House, St. John's-wood, on June 18 last, aged sixty. He leaves his residence, Duncroft House, and the furniture to his wife absolutely, together with all property acquired by marital right. His plate he leaves to his brother and successor, the Hon. Charles Frederick, now Baron Cranston. He directs his estates to be sold, and after securing the payment of some annuities and legacies, he bequeaths one moiety of the interest arising from the residue to his relict, and the other moiety to his daughter, the Hon. Pauline Emily Cranston; and after the decease of his relict, he leaves to his said daughter the principal for the benefit of herself and issue. The will of the Right Hon. Lepel Charlotte Lady Alexander was proved under 7000l.; and that of the Hon. Philip Duggan under a nominal sum. The will of Sir William A. Beckett, retired Chief Justice of the colony of Victoria, was proved in the London Court under 9000l. personalty in England. The executors appointed are Dame Matilda A. Beckett, his relict and second wife, and testator's two brothers, Thomas Turner A. Beckett and Arthur Martin A. Beckett, and Henry Moor, Esq., of Sussex-square, Brighton. The will is dated Aug. 1867, and testator died at his residence, Upper Norwood, on the 27th June last, aged sixty-three. He bequeaths to his wife a legacy of 3000l., and the interest from the rest of his property for her life, and after her decease he leaves two-fifths of the principal to his son Reginald, and the remaining three-fifths between his sons Malvyn and Edward equally. To his son Malvyn he has left the gold paper-knife which was presented to him (the testator) by the attorneys and solicitors of Geelong. The will of Sir Robert Juckes Clifton, Bart., was proved under 5000l. personalty; and that of Sir William John Newton under 4000l. The will of Alexander William Rowland, of Champion-hill, Lower Sydenham, and of Hatton-garden, was proved under 35,000l. personalty. The executors are Charles Bentley Bingley, of 185, Regent-street, and John E. Bennett, of Brunswick-square, Brighton; to each he leaves a legacy of 1000l. The will bears date Jan. 28, 1867, and the testator died June 23, 1869, aged sixty-one. The testator was in partnership with his brother (John Henry Rowland), his son (Henry Edward Rowland), and his nephew (John Alexander Rowland), by a deed of 1866. He directs that his share in the business of manufacturing perfumer shall be purchased by the surviving partners upon terms stated by him. He has divided his property among his sons and daughters in nearly equal shares, excluding therefrom his son Henry Edward, he being provided for under the partnership. There are some annuities to be paid to his two sisters out of his freeholds at St. Bride's-churchyard, Barbican, and Greenwich. The will of Walter Stevenson Davidson, Esq., banker, late of St. James's-street, was proved under 400,000l. personalty. The will of the Right Hon. Caroline Louisa, Viscountess Ranelagh, has just been proved, under a nominal sum. The will of Sir William Bowles, K.C.B., Admiral of the Fleet, was proved in London on the 21st instant, and the personalty sworn under 40,000l. The trustees and executors are his brother, General Sir George Bowles, K.C.B., Admiral Arthur Farquhar, and Thomas Fassett Kent, Esq. The will is dated June 8 last; and the gallant admiral, who entered the navy in 1798, died on the 2nd inst., at the advanced age of 89. Sir William married, in 1820, the Hon. Frances Temple, sister of the late Viscount Palmerston; her ladyship died in 1838. The testator has left to his executor, Mr. Kent, a legacy of 5000l.; to the Adult Orphan Institution, 1000l.; to his butler and housekeeper each 1000l. a year; and to his coachman and footman, each 500l. a year. He has directed that his estates should be sold, the freehold with the consent of his said brother, Sir George Bowles, and out of the income arising therefrom he leaves to his sister, Anne Fowler, 10000l. a year, and the remainder of the income to his said brother, Sir George; and should his said brother leave issue, then the principal to him and his heirs; but in default of issue, the principal, subject to the payment of annuities, is left amongst several of his (testator's) relatives and friends; and to those charitable institutions to which he had been a subscriber a legacy of 2500l. each. The testator has left to his said brother, Gen. Bowles, his residence in Hill-street, Berkeley-square, and his plate, wine, furniture, and other effects absolutely.—Illustrated London News.

Law and the Lawyers.

Mr. YOUNG late Solicitor-General for Scotland, is the new Lord Advocate, in succession to Mr. MONCRIEFF.

As the cold weather is approaching, we wish to call the attention of the Benchers of the Middle Temple to the miserably draughty condition of the library. The building is in an exposed position, but there must be something radically defective in its construction. It is already becoming a matter of difficulty to endure the discomfort arising from the currents of air which prevail from end to end. The Benchers know nothing of this, because they enjoy the privilege of having books taken from the library to their own chambers.

MR. CHISHOLM ANSTEE, one of the Bridgewater Commissioners, has received a threatening letter. Mr. ANSTEE is about the last man in the world to be intimidated, and he promises to follow up the clue to the author. We hope he will. We are certain he would create a precedent which would be valuable in Ireland.

It is only by frequent recurrence to the same topics that we can hope for reform. Consequently we are glad to see that in his address to the Jurisprudence Section of the Social Science Congress Mr. HASTINGS has been careful to place his finger on the blots which disgrace our legal system, and more particularly our system of procedure. But we notice one assumption which a lawyer certainly ought not to have made, namely, that "Legislation in a free country is the immediate expression of the popular will." So far from this being the case, English legislation has generally been the dilatory evolution of thought by a fluctuating majority of representatives speaking the will of an educated minority. The fact is, man assists nature when he legislates, and Mr. HASTINGS speaks thus of human intervention: "but when we come to man we find a change. A moral element has supervened. The free will, which is the grandest heritage of the race, has opened the floodgates of evil as well as the infinite possibilities of good. The actions of mankind, and the consequent development of society, do not spring from the spontaneity of mechanism, but from the intellect of choice." We must take it, therefore, that laws result from the intellect of choice, which differs from the spontaneity of mechanism, and we think this proves that legislation is not the immediate expression of the popular will. But we confess we should find it hard to associate some of our laws with the intellect of choice.

THE County Courts Chronicle draws attention to a question which it observes must constantly recur if steps are not taken to set it at rest. It arose in a case heard at the Darlington Court, where it was contended that the rule which prohibited one attorney from appearing for another does not apply to equity proceedings. The judge, of course, held that the rule applied to proceedings both at law and in equity, and the difficulty was got over by the attorney handing in a retainer from the client. We cannot consider how any doubt could have existed as to the application of the enactment to equity proceedings, for rule 115 says that the provisions of the section (sect. 10 of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 54), shall apply to all proceedings in bankruptcy, and to all other matters which may come before the court. It is quite clear, says the Chronicle, that the enactment ought to be repealed. No protection is afforded to the Bar by its existence, because it is always cheaper and more simple for a retainer to be given by the client to another attorney, and that course would always be taken where the case would not bear counsel's fee. Where it would, we believe solicitors would always feel disposed, being unable to attend themselves, to brief a junior. There is really no more reason why the rule should continue to exist than why there should be a rule made prohibiting one counsel from holding the brief of another. Solicitors have a very simple remedy in their own hands, but it is not always possible to get at the client; frequently, it is very inconvenient. And there being no ground for continuing the rule, we should be glad to see it abrogated.

LAND LAW REFORM.

THE second demand of the Tablet, representing the powerful Roman Catholic interest in Ireland, is

- Fixity of tenure, by
- 1st. Leases for long terms;
- 2nd. Abolition of the landlord's power of arbitrary eviction;
- 3rd. Restriction of the landlord's right of raising rents to cases of increased value (not due to tenant's improvements), shown by public valuations.

These requisitions are manifestly inconsistent with any rights of property. To compel a man to give to some other man the possession of anything that is his for a long term of years, is sheer confiscation in fact, by whatever mild name it may be called. It may be right to rob owners for the benefit of tenants; but it is not the less robbery. If any person really doubts this, let him try it by a simple application of the same doctrine to himself. He has lent 100l. on mortgage. The mortgagor demands that he shall be empowered by law to keep possession of this 100l. for thirty years; that the owner shall not be permitted to call it in so long as interest is paid, nor to raise the rate of interest, whatever the changed value of money. There is no real difference in the principle, whether applied to a loan of money or a loan of land. It is a matter of bargain between the parties. Scarcely less striking in its injustice would be the case of the tenant of a house requiring that the law shall give him a long lease of it, not only without the consent of the owner, but against his will, and not fixity of tenure merely, but fixity of rent!

The abolition of the landlord's power to evict scarcely needs separate statement, for it follows from the first demand for compulsory long leases. If a tenant holds under a lease, he cannot be evicted so long as he performs the covenants of the lease; and we presume that our contemporary does not advocate a general licence to tenants to set aside any covenants inconvenient to perform. Arbitrary eviction can occur only where there is no lease, and the tenant is in only from year to year. As the first proposition is for a compulsory long lease, and that would of itself preclude the possibility of arbitrary eviction, this second one is superfluous.

As to the proposed restriction of the power to raise rents, it is certainly as arbitrary an encroachment on individual liberty as either of the preceding suggestions. A law that should attempt it would be a tyrannical law, opposed not alone to every principle of political economy, but to the freedom of contract recognised by all civilised communities. Equally iniquitous, and for the same reason, would be the third proposal, for an immediate new valuation of poor lands with a view to a general reduction of their rents. What are poor lands? What law is to define the soil that is to be deemed "poor"? Is it to be comparative? If not, by what standard is the poverty to be measured? But farms usually comprise some poor land as well as some rich land, and the rents are calculated upon an average of the whole, the former being set down at less, and the latter at more than their value. How are the poor lands on such a farm to be estimated, for what per centage of poor land is to entitle the tenant to demand a valuation with a view to reduction? Mark, moreover, the consequences that would certainly follow the adoption of such a scheme. Tenants would compete with one another to take a farm at any price, however extravagant, calculating on being enabled to go to an arbitrator for relief from their own deliberate bargain.

The other propositions—pecuniary assistance to necessitous tenants, and a simple machinery for carrying out the design, are, on principle, unobjectionable. But there are practical difficulties in their adoption. A loan would not be made to a tenant farmer by the Government without sufficient security, and what could he offer to the State which he cannot, as it is, offer to private lenders? The owner of an estate can give the land itself as security for money advanced to him by the State for the purpose of improvements, but what security can a tenant give? And as for simplicity in the machinery, it would take the most ingenious to devise a plan whereby all that would be requisite for the proposed transfer of the land from the owner to the tenant could be completed without considerable labour and consequent cost.

Such are the suggestions, or more properly the demands, put forth by the Roman Catholic party in Ireland. We purpose next week to review the more rational scheme proposed by Mr. BRIGHT.

HOW TO STOP BRIBERY.

SUGGESTIONS continue to be made on the subject of checking bribery and corruption generally; but every one must agree that commissioners may sit until they can sit no more, and the story will never be varied, that that story is as simple as it possibly can be, and will always lead to the same conclusions, and that those conclusions are perfectly plain. Corrupt practices prevail to a greater or less extent at every election where there is a contest, and it is about as ridiculous to suppose that the principals who pay the money are not as conscious as the agents of the existence of those practices, as it is to suppose that in ordinary matters they are ignorant whether the articles which are paid for and consumed every day have been supplied.

We have now plenty of material for an entirely new law on the subject of electoral corruption. That new law should begin by hemming in a candidate in every possible way. He and his recognised agents should be compelled to take an oath of allegiance to purity of election. Paid canvassers and agents should be compelled to take out a certificate which should be liable to forfeiture on conviction of any practice calculated to interfere with freedom of election. And the election being over the individual elected should not be allowed to take his seat until he had verified his accounts by affidavit.

Under the existing law there is much that may be done. It is absolutely a farce to issue three commissions when no less than seventy petitions were presented. No commission issues now unless a Judge reports that corrupt practices have extensively prevailed. This he cannot do if evidence is not adduced before him, and people who present petitions are too much concerned for their own interests to let the Judge know all. The fact is, election petitions are a mistake. They may be withdrawn; and the judge is bound to accept the affidavits of the immediate parties that there has been no collusion. His hands are tied, and he certifies to the Speaker that in his opinion no collusion existed. Again, at the trial he is mocked. He knows there is something behind which he cannot get at, but no evidence being presented to justify a report of extensive prevalence of corrupt practices, he makes a return to the Speaker simply as affecting the seat attacked.

On this head there cannot be a doubt that petitions ought to be taken out of the hands of private individuals. Or, if that be impossible, it should be open to any twelve inhabitants being voters to present a memorial to Parliament or the Home Office praying an inquiry. A single Judge would effect the objects of a commission just as well, and indeed far better than three barristers: he would compel more respect; he would, of course, have more competent assistance than is afforded the commissioners by a single secretary; and, by this arrangement, we might have a score of commissions effectually exposing the rottenness of as many English constituencies instead of threescore petitions (of which two-thirds are withdrawn and half the remainder fail), and three commissions sitting all the autumn on three unhappy boroughs, who are the scapegoats of the kingdom.

And a word about these commissions. The gentlemen engaged are remunerated by the payment of so many guineas per diem. We do not for an instant say that the present commissioners have a conscious desire to receive a single shilling from the country which is not well-earned and necessarily incurred. But no Judges ought to be paid by the day. An inquiry into electoral corruption may be indefinitely prolonged, and with perfect apparent justification, and the best of us is open to the temptation to justify a prolongation of an inquiry which is comfortably remunerative. The question is what is the object of a commission? Is it to convict a borough of corruption so as to call for disfranchisement? Apparently it is, because everyone who gives evidence fairly receives a certificate protecting him from prosecution. Therefore there should be a point at which conviction for the purpose of disfranchisement should be declared. All that the commissions are now doing is to afford amusement to the public by disclosures affecting individuals. Those disclosures cannot punish the members more effectually than the disfranchisement of the boroughs. In Bridge-water the end is attained. The borough is self-condemned. In Norwich no one will tell the truth, according to the Chief Commissioner, and this being so it is difficult to see how the presence of three virtuous gentlemen and their secretary can instil the necessary amount of veracity into the constituency to bring to light the misdeeds which were undoubtedly perpetrated at the last election.

But as we have said Judges should be directed to try suspected boroughs, and to exercise inquisitorial powers. Assisted by a public prosecutor a Judge would get through the work in one-third of the time occupied by the commissioners, and the result would be more satisfactory to the constituencies and the country.

MUNICIPAL AND PARLIAMENTARY ELECTIONS.

NO. IV.

TREATING (continued.)

THE question of corrupt treating has been dealt with in almost every case. It arose before Mr. Justice Willes in the Windsor Petition, 19 L. T. Rep. N. S. 613; and in the Lichfield Petition, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 11. As we have already shown, it formed the main ground of Baron Martin's decision in the Bradford Petition, 19 L. T. Rep. N. S. 718; and Mr. Justice Blackburn had occasion to consider it in the Bewdley Petition, at p. 676 of the same volume. In the first-named case Mr. Justice Willes held that wine supplied by a candidate at the dinner of a non-political society was not treating; but he took the opportunity of saying, "I must express the opinion, for I entertain it, that this is a questionable proceeding, and that it would be well if such proceedings were refrained from in the future; the more so because no one but a man possessed of wealth could afford to expend 27l. in a single evening on drink for other people." And there is no doubt that if, after this expression, such a proceeding was resorted to, it would imperil the seat, Mr. Justice Blackburn having said, in the Hereford Petition, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 120, that if that is done at an election which on a previous petition was reprehended by a judge, it would avoid the election. That is to say, a wilful breach of the law would introduce the operation of the word corrupt. In the Lichfield petition Mr. Justice Willes said, "In order to prove treating, it must be shown not merely that eating and drinking went on during the election, and went on under the eyes of the candidate (eating and drinking must always go on), but it must be shown that the eating and drinking was supplied at the expense or upon the credit of the candidate, either by his authority or by the authority of one or more of his agents in order to influence voters."

In the Bewdley petition Mr. Justice Blackburn directed his particular attention to the force of the word corrupt as applicable to treating. He—as we have noted that Baron Martin did—adopted the view taken by Mr. Justice Willes as to the meaning of the word. "Those who framed the Act," he said, "appear to have intended that it should comprehend almost everything that can by any possibility happen in this way at an election; but they have governed it all by the word 'corruptly.' The interpretation of this word, as explained, and in my opinion rightly explained, by Mr. Justice Willes, is not 'wickedly,' 'immorally,' or anything of that sort, but embraces such conduct as it was evidently the intention of the Legislature to discountenance." Then as to what amounts to corrupt treating, and what is merely evidence of it, his Lordship said, "Where it is shown that even the smallest quantity of meat or drink is supplied that is, of course, admissible as evidence of treating;" but, he added, "more than that would be required to make out a corrupt intention. Each individual case may in itself be slight—a mere feather weight—but all taken together will be of importance if there are many such cases."

Then comes the question as to the nature of such evidence to satisfy the mind of the Judge. To this an answer is in a measure given by the Wallingford Petition, 19 L. T. Rep. N. S. 767, where Mr. Justice Blackburn based his decision on the quantity of refreshment which was given, and he "thought upon the evidence brought forward by the petitioner there was quite sufficient to void the election had it not been contradicted." The evidence in contradiction was that of the respondent and his agents who stated that they had discouraged treating, and it was positively sworn by the agents that they took great care to prevent treating, and to declare that if it was done they would not pay for it. The Judge considered, however, that the sitting member had imperilled his seat by having "scores" at public-houses, and took occasion to say that he would have it laid down as a principle that having a score at a public-house amounted to treating, and as a matter of prudence he advised all candidates to have no score at all. "Let the member pay his agents handsomely, let them pay others, and let everyone find himself in refreshments. Then the candidate's seat could not be imperilled."

Further, on the subject of corrupt intention in giving refreshment, we may notice a discussion between Judge and counsel in the Coventry case (at p. 406 of 20 L. T. Rep. N. S.), from which it appears that a thing is not to be inferred to have been corruptly done simply because an election was going on at the time. Counsel stated his intention to prove that persons to whom, from their position, spirits might be considered a luxury, had spirits supplied to them—chiefly gin and water—at all times of the day, and had suppers provided for them, and were then canvassed for their votes. "Numerous acts," said Mr. Justice Willes, "of that scattered kind, and those small quantities would furnish a strong inference of an intention to influence voters, and therefore would amount to treating. But scattered acts of that kind occurring every day are really of no account simply because an election is going on." And in his judgment his Lordship remarked, "Eating and drinking must go on, notwithstanding an election coming, in the ordinary and usual course. When that eating and drinking takes the form of inviting people for the purpose of inducing them to change their minds and to vote for the party to which they do not belong, then it becomes corrupt, and is forbidden by the statute."

It would not occur to many that there is any difference in the offence whether the treating be by means of eating or drinking, but in the Norfolk petition (Part II. printed judgments, p. 276) Mr. Justice Blackburn said, "there is a very great difference between meat and drink, although the statute makes no difference at all as to the law of the matter . . . No doubt a man may be influenced as to his vote by giving him a sandwich to eat, and on the other hand, a man may be made extremely drunk without influencing his vote. But when we come to look at the probability of what a man intended, there is a very great difference indeed." And in considering probabilities, this is undoubtedly a matter for consideration. As his Lordship said, "It comes to a question of degree and extent, and the Judges have power to consider whether or not it was intended to produce the effect contemplated."

From these authorities this branch of the subject may be easily summed up. Ordinary hospitality is not struck at by the Legislature; and where the giving of drink or refreshment is shown to have gone beyond the ordinary scope of hospitality, it must have been systematic or clearly given with a corrupt intention of making voters vote against the party to which they belong. Keeping scores at public houses, and opening public houses and giving an unlimited discretion to the landlord as to the amount of drink he is to supply without receiving payment, are, the one dangerous, and the other fatal practices. There being a corrupt intention proved, the quantity of meat or drink supplied is immaterial.

UNDUE INFLUENCE.

Every person who shall, directly or indirectly, by himself or by any other person on his behalf, make use of, or threaten to make use of, any force, violence, or restraint, or threaten the infliction, by himself, or by or through any other person, any injury, damage, harm, or loss or in any other manner practise intimidation upon or against any person in order to induce or compel such person to vote or refrain from voting, or on account of such person having voted or refrained from voting at any election, or who shall by abduction, duress, or any fraudulent device or contrivance, impede, prevent, or otherwise interfere with the free exercise of the franchise of any voter, or shall thereby compel, induce, or prevail upon any voter either to give or refrain from giving his vote at any election, shall be deemed to have committed the offence of undue influence.

That is the definition of undue influence contained in the 5th section of the Corrupt Practices Act 1854, and it has received interpretation at the hands of two most eminent Judges, Justices Willes and Blackburn. Indeed we have only to turn to the Westbury case to find a clear and distinct statement of what is undue influence within the section: (20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 22.)

His Lordship was inclined at first to consider the meaning of the words injury, damage, harm, or loss. He said that a question might arise whether not only damage must be shown, but damage the result of some injury for which an action might be maintained at law, and to which it might be pleaded that the damage resulting from being dismissed from an employment where the master had a legal right to dismiss was not a damage coming within that description, and therefore not within the statute. He, however, thought it unnecessary to express an opinion upon that point, "because the following words are large enough to include every sort of intimidation, every sort of conduct which would operate upon the mind of another, and terrify or alarm him into doing what the person misconducting himself willed, against his own free will."

In the Norfolk (North Division) petition (Part II, printed judgments, at page 270), Mr. Justice Blackburn also states his view of the Act. He said, "I think there can be no doubt, when you look at the earlier part of it, that it is meant and intended to say, that where there is any force, violence or restraint, or any threat of injury, or any injury, those are cases which of course would embrace all the cases where a wrongful act is threatened; but I do not think the Act is at all confined to that." Further on he said, "I think it would apply to cases where, though a person has a perfect right to do it, if he does not do it with the motive of affecting the vote, yet the doing of it does inflict harm upon the other side." This he applies to the important question as between landlord and tenant. "I take it," he said, "that where a tenant who holds his land from year to year, to whom consequently the landlord can at any moment give six months' notice to quit, the landlord has a perfect right to choose his tenant and turn him out; but if the landlord threatens to inflict, or does inflict, that turning out of his tenant for his vote, that is inflicting harm or loss within the meaning of the Act." And again as to the question discussed in the Westbury and Blackburn petitions, the act of a master in dismissing his servant, Mr. Justice Blackburn, says that if it is done on account of the vote, and for the purpose of coercing the voter, it is within the statute. Referring to the events which occurred at Blackburn, and to which we shall presently refer, his Lordship said that, in his opinion, it was rightly held "that though the loss and harm to be done to the man is not an illegal harm, not a matter that would be a crime like bribing the man, or destroying his property, yet if it be a loss inflicted for that purpose, viz., to force workpeople to vote, 'it is brought within the statute.' And, finally he went to the limit suggested by counsel, of a lady looking at a box of ribbons, and on learning the politics of the tradesman, refusing to purchase. That he held to be such a trifling thing that it could hardly be acted upon; but considered the withdrawal of custom, or the threat to withdraw it, a question of degree, and that where it seriously affected the saleable value of the goodwill of a man's business it would clearly be a loss within the meaning of the statute."

The definition of the compass of the statute given by Mr. Justice Willes, in the Westbury petition, coincides with that of Mr. Justice Blackburn. He reads the 5th section by the light of the 2nd, and held, to use his own not particularly happy but still intelligible expression, "that that which it is bribery to promise the enjoyment of is in this case, and with reference to these circumstances, dismissal of servants by a master, 'intimidation to threaten the deprivation of.'" To promise employment is bribery; to threaten to withdraw employment is intimidation.

We now arrive at the most important question which arose in the Blackburn Petition, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 823, regarding intimidation amongst workmen by persons having power to dismiss them, and by fellow workmen. We have already noticed that Mr. Justice Blackburn in the Norfolk petition said that dismissing a man on account of his vote is intimidation. As a commentary on this, the remarks of Mr. Justice Willes, in the Blackburn case, should be considered. They do not, in any degree, conflict with the observations of Mr. Justice Blackburn, but forcibly illustrate them.

In the dismissal of a servant for his political opinions, "a good deal would depend," said Mr. Justice Willes (p. 827, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S.), "upon whether the injury inflicted upon him was an injury which would make him likely to change his mind in order that he might be received back into the service of the person who had discharged him, or that he might be taken notwithstanding that discharge into the service of some other person of the same political opinions as the master who had dismissed him; and dealing with reference to the individual case or even several cases of dismissal from one mill in Blackburn, for instance, it might be material to consider whether there were not a great many other mills of the same colour as that from which the man or men had been discharged, and at which it might be impressed on their minds by the improper discharge that they were less likely to be received unless they chose to change their political mind, and to give at the election a vote different from that which they had announced their intention of giving; and although with reference to one or more persons who were determined in their political views, the effect might be the very contrary of influence, yet with respect to bodies of persons, and in business where there is a large class of employers of the same mode of thinking as the one who was guilty of the wrongful discharge, it may be that a different result would be produced. But the matter is not at all concluded here, because the section says that the undue influence which is reprehended by it shall not be practised, whether directly, or indirectly, and it is not because the one man who may be shoved or hooted, or pelted with mud, or dismissed from his employment on account of his political opinions may, if he is a man of independence, be only the more fortified in them, and only be influenced against the persons who ill-treated him, that therefore no influence is exercised upon other persons in the same class; on the contrary, whilst the strong-minded would be influenced against the intimidation, the weak-minded and the waverers, whether in the same employment or in others, under like circumstances, would or might be deterred. That they might be deterred is sufficient." And his Lordship concluded: "The Legislature, in the 5th section, has used language which makes it undue influence to practise intimidation, directly or indirectly, with intent to influence the vote of a single voter. Whether that voter be the person ill-treated, or whether the ill-treatment be violence or damage done by the removal of custom or business, or employment, is immaterial. If it is done with a view to affect votes, or interfere with the free exercise of the franchise, it is within the prohibition of the 5th section. I think, therefore, that the wrongful dismissal by an employer of a voter or voters from his employment shortly before a general election, upon the ground of his political opinions, is evidence of intimidation within the 5th section, upon which the court is bound to act, if it believes that evidence."

LORD WESTBURY AND THE COURTS OF APPEAL.

It is a question at present somewhat discussed whether the LORD CHANCELLOR exercised the wisest discretion in recommending Lord Westbury to decline the office of Lord Justice of Appeal. And this question gives rise to another concerning the efficiency of the House of Lords as a court of final resort. It is perfectly plain that the House of Lords as a court of appeal is at present in such a condition that it can ill afford to lose so valuable a member as Lord Westbury, and that appears to have been Lord HATHERLEY's only ground for coming to the conclusion at which he arrived. But it seems to us that there is another matter which ought to have received consideration, and that is the waste of judicial power by the confinement of Lord Westbury to the House of Lords. A contemporary expresses the regret which every practical lawyer must feel that so good a lawyer as Lord Westbury is not more regularly employed than in hearing arguments four or five hours four days in the week during the Parliamentary session, and it is correctly observed that in the capacity of Lord Justice he would get through a much larger amount of work without any exceptional strain being put upon either mind or body.

But the important matter, to which we not long since directed attention, is the state of all our courts of appeal. Appeals lie from the equity and the common law courts to the House of Lords; but the procedure is very different in the one case and in the other. In equity an appeal is carried to the Lords Justices or the Lord Chancellor from a Vice-Chancellor or the Master of the Rolls. These are the settled and never changing appellate Judges. At common law, on the other hand, we have that ridiculous anomaly the Court of Exchequer Chamber, a fluctuating, shifting, and uncertain body of Judges. We like to hear a lay journal on these matters, and it is the opinion of the Spectator, comparing the Exchequer Chamber with the House of Lords, that "no system can well be devised that is more calculated to produce uncertainty than the one by which the judgments of any court of common law are referred to two other courts of co-ordinate jurisdiction. The only principle which underlies this system is the numerical principle, and even that not always followed. The House of Lords has at least prestige and authority. The Exchequer Chamber is made up at haphazard, feels that it is free from final responsibility, knows that the judgment it has reversed may be confirmed on another occasion, and acts less by settled rule than by the accident of its composition or of its guiding spirit."

Great injustice is done here to the learned Judges who from time to time sit in the Exchequer Chamber. We believe that they are always, as much from constant habit as anything else, sedulously careful and most painstaking in their judgments, excluding entirely from their minds all calculations concerning final responsibility. Of course it is satisfactory to every Judge, when a difficult point is discussed before him, to feel that if he is wrong in his decision, it can be reviewed by superior authority. But judicial pride is quite sufficient to ensure an avoidance of unsound judgments which must be overruled in the court above. And it is a further mistake to suppose that the court acts "less by settled rule than by the accident of its composition or of its guiding spirit." More particularly does very little depend upon the influence of a guiding spirit. The chiefs are considered, we assume, to be the guiding spirits when they are present, but only recently the LORD CHIEF BARON delivered a judgment with which a majority of the court did not concur. The writer in our contemporary evidently little appreciates the independence of thought and character which happily characterises our Judges.

There is, however, the need of reform still existing. It would be highly desirable that the intermediate common law court of appeal should be abolished. According to the contemporary whom we have thought worth while to quote, the establishment of one court of appeal, composed of regular Judges, and chosen on the only sound principle of preferment, that of preferment by merit, is the real cure for the evils which have been specified. He would not follow the suggestion of the Judicature Commission as to the annual choice of three Judges, and their return at the end of the year to the court from which they had been taken; but would have the Judges of Appeal chosen from among the Judges of the Superior Courts after a certain period of service, or from among those who had held the post of Lord Chancellor. There is an exploded notion contained in these remarks, namely, that promotion to the judicial bench is in any great degree the reward of political services. We think it may be fairly said that at present there is not a single Judge on the bench who ought not to be there, and if there be, we doubt whether it could be said that he owed his elevation to political service. The chiefs of the three common law courts possibly received their appointments because they were law officers. Can it be said that anyone of the three could be advantageously removed in favour of any member of the Bar to whom a Judgeship has not been offered? We have very little doubt about the answer.

Undeniedly there is a difficulty about the Chancellorship, which by its nature is a semi-political office. At present the appeals to the Chancellor being all equity or bankruptcy matters, it is at least undesirable that a common lawyer should be promoted to the position. The Spectator proposes that Judges should go through a course of training for the Court of Appeal—that ex-Chancellors should sit for a time in the Superior Courts of Common Law. Imagine Lord Westbury a puisne in the Exchequer, or Lord CATRAN assisting at a registration appeal in the Common Pleas! If, as the Judicature

Commissioners propose, there was one regular court of appeal of great strength, to which only Judges of the highest available ability would be promoted, there would never be any difficulty in dealing with the business, wherever it might come from. Our contemporary lastly complains of the time during which the Lord Justiceship has remained unfilled "between the claims of persons and those of the public." The writer does not make his meaning very clear, but the claims of the public have not had any existence, the court having been closed for the recess for nearly two months past.

INSURANCE AGENCIES.

UNDER this title in our last number we discussed a case of Mackie v. The European Assurance Society, and incidentally, from an inadvertence, stated that the Commercial Union Insurance Company had "ceased to do fire business." This remark should, as appears by the report of the case at p. 104 of 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. have been applied to the European Company.

We have been applied to by the directors of the Commercial Union to repair, by the publication of the present article, any injury which the misstatement may have caused, or may be likely to cause that office. The Commercial Union transacts fire business, we are informed, on a very large scale in London and the country, and has agents in most of the principal towns, several of whom are solicitors. We are happy to be able further to state that the agent against whom negligence was alleged by the European ceased to be an agent of the Commercial Union at the instance of the directors, after which he became an agent of the European, never having been agent for both companies at the same time. A remark is fairly made in the letter which we have received from the solicitors of the Commercial Union, that, "the litigation" in Mackie's case "seems to have been caused by his (the agent's) attempt to transfer an insurance from the Commercial Union (with which office the assured was perfectly satisfied) to the European Company."

We very much regret that the misstatement complained of should have occurred, but most of our readers being probably well acquainted with the Commercial Union, we trust that the injury sustained may prove to be very small.

DIGEST OF SHIPPING LAW CASES. FROM 1860 TO 1864.

Edited by F. O. CRUMP, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

CHARTER-PARTY.

7. Lump freight—Stipulation as to capacity of ship—Remedy of charterer by cross action.—A lump sum of freight, 1500*l.*, was agreed to be paid on condition that the ship took a cargo of not less than 1000 tons weight and measurement. It was held that the stipulation as to the capacity of the ship was not a condition precedent, and the plea that the full cargo was not and could not be shipped was held to be no answer to an action for the freight. The remedy of the charterer was by a cross action, or a reduction of damages: (Pust v. Dowie, Q. B. April 28, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 333; 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 243; 2 Jur. N. S. 1322; 33 L. J. 172; 5 B. & S. 21, in error; 34 L. J. 127.)

7A. Broker's commission—Remoteness of services—Introducing shipowner to broker.—A shipbroker having introduced a shipowner to another broker, who was also a merchant, and through whose introduction to a London broker a charter-party was entered into, was held entitled to commission on that charter. Evidence as to who was the proper person to receive the commission. Remoteness of a claimant's services in respect of procuring charter: (See "Commission" and "Broker":) (Kynaston v. Nicholson and others, C. E. June 5, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 350; 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 671.)

8. Shipbroker's authority to bind owner.—A shipbroker has no general authority to charter a ship for a voyage contrary to instructions given by the owner not communicated by the broker to the merchant. Where a broker signs a charter-party "by authority of captain," it has the same effect as if he signed "by procuration," and he is in such a case limited to his specific instructions; and in every such case the merchant should inquire what those instructions are. A ship was chartered to and from Miramichi, the captain having received an unsigned charter-party stipulating for leave to take outward cargo to another port. Loss of market for cargo occurred by delay through ship going on an intermediate voyage. A verdict against the captain for damages on account of loss of market for cargo ordered to be set aside and a new trial had: (Spraight v. Beyer- lieb, E. C. Ireland, April 29, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 375; 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 31, affirming judgment of the Court of Exchequer, Ireland, May 13, 1862.)

9. Construction of clause—Description of ship—Warranty—Agent's authority.—Charter-party entered into between the shipowner's agent at New York and a merchant there, British subjects, described the ship as "a British ship, A 1." Held, on the authority of Belin v. Burness, 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 207, that this was a warranty that the ship was classed A 1 in Lloyd's register. The agent was authorised under a certain power of attorney, to enter into a charter-party with such an undertaking, and the owners were held liable for the higher rate of premium which shippers had to pay in consequence of the ship having run off her class. The ship was not specified as A 1 in the power of attorney, and the vessel had run off the list in the same month as the power of attorney was dated, and fraud was not alleged: (Routh v. McMillan, C. E. Nov. 3, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 402; 33 L. J. 38, Ex.; 10 Jur. N. S. 158; 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 541; 2 H. & C. 750.)

10. Broken stowage.—A charter-party stipulated for a full and complete cargo, and, as regarded freight, it was stipulated that what goods might be shipped as broken stowage, were to pay freight as customary. It was held that broken stowage was part of the produce contemplated, and that the shipowner was bound to receive it. In Moorsom v. Page (4 Camp. 103) the charterer was entitled to ship a complete cargo of tallow, and it was held that the fact that if he had loaded the ship in some other way the owner would have received more freight, did not render it compulsory on him to do so: (Cole v. Meek, C. B., Jan. 14, 1864; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 415; 33 L. J. 183; 15 C. B., N. S. 795.)

11—15.—See future digest—1864 to 1867.

16. Construction of clause to proceed with cargo to a safe port.—A charter-party provided that the vessel chartered should proceed to a safe port in Chili. She was bound for Valparaiso for orders. Arriving there, she received orders to proceed to the port of Carrisal Bajo. Before a port had been named, this one had been stopped up by a prohibition of Government, and the Government refused to give the ship a permit to enter. It was held that the merchant was bound to name a place which at the time he named it was in such a state that the ship could safely enter, and not such a port that, if she had entered, she would have been confiscated: (Ogden v. Graham, Nov. 27, 1861, Q. B.; 5 L. T. Rep. N. S. 396; 31 L. J. 26, Q. B.)

17. Memorandum in charter-party—Whether part of contract—Whether applicable to homeward as well as outward voyage—Evidence.—This was the clause—"Commission to be paid to charterer, to whom the vessel is to be addressed, on her return to London," the charter being only for an outward voyage, and making no mention of a homeward voyage. It was ruled that the jury must say on the evidence what was the definite and known meaning of the clause: (Hibberd v. Omen, 2 F. & F. 502, Cockburn, C.J.) (This case occurs out of its order in the reports, and is dated 1859.)

18. Claim against broker who had chartered ship without authority, for difference of freight on procuring another ship.—In such a case, the second ship being much larger than the first, it was held that the broker was liable at the utmost for the difference of the freights on the whole of the cargo of the substituted ship, credit being given for the profit on the surplus cargo carried. But it was left to the jury to say whether the plaintiffs might have got a smaller ship, or whether they improperly neglected to give the defendant notice of the substituted charter so as to give him the option of using the surplus space: (Mitchell v. Kahl, 1862; 2 F. & F. 709.)

19. Ship aground—Cargo discharged and transhipped.—An action was brought against charterers for not supplying a cargo pursuant to charter-party. The vessel having taken three-fourths of the cargo on board, while proceeding to another part of the river for the purpose of receiving on board the remainder, took the ground and sustained damage. The master thereupon required the charterers' agent to take out what was shipped; he did so, and loaded it on board other vessels. Under these circumstances it was held that the action against the charterers was not maintainable: (Strugnell v. Friedrichsen, May 27, 1862; 12 C. B., N. S., 452; 9 Jur. N. S. 77.)

19A. Case relative to damages and expenses—Construction of clause in charter-party.—A ship was chartered from Liverpool to Puerto Cabello. A clause was added to the charter-party giving the charterer the option of sending a portion of the cargo to Macarabo, which provided that any and every expense the vessel might incur in consequence of this additional clause should be borne by the charterer. The master was prohibited from landing the cargo for Puerto Cabello on the false ground that some of the goods were contraband; but he was given permission to clear if he could pay a fine. This he was unable to pay, took legal proceedings, and incurred other expenses. It was held that, the expenses being incurred solely because the master could not pay the fine, the shipowner could not recover them against the charterer: (Sully v. Duranty, June 1, 1864; 33 L. J. 319, Ex.; 3 H. & C. 270.)

Voyage interrupted by war.—Master of an Austrian ship held to be justified in pausing to proceed to Copenhagen, to which port he was ordered, lest he should be captured by French cruisers, war having broken out between France and Austria: (Avery v. Bowden, 6 B. & B. 583.) Orders were afterwards given to go to Plymouth: Held, that it was a proper question for the jury, whether this was a revocation of the original order: (Pole and others v. Cetecovich, C. B., Nov. 23, 1860; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 2; 3 L. T. Rep. N. S. 438.)

2. Injunction—Jurisdiction of Rolls Court.—Injunction granted to restrain defendants from entering into sub-charter-party inconsistent with the terms of contract of affreightment with shipowner. The court has undoubted jurisdiction in such a case: (Servin v. Delandes, M. R., Dec. 13, 1860; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 1.)

3. Principal and agent—Mistake.—Equitable plea that it was understood between the shipowner and the agent of the charterer, before entering into the contract, that the agent should not be personally liable, but that, by mistake, the charter-party was so framed as to make him liable on the face of it. It was held that this was a good equitable defence to an action at the instance of the shipowner against the agent for breach of charter-party. Per Bramwell, B. the above was a good legal plea: (Pym v. Campbell, 9 Ell. & Bl. 370; 25 L. J. 277, Q. B.; Davies v. Stambank, 6 DeG. M. & G. 679; Wake (executor, &c.) v. Harrop and another, C. 1. Set-off against freight—Demurrage—Delay by master refusing to ship acids and gunpowder.—Charterers held not to have a right to set-off against freight as demurrage, a claim on account of delay arising in consequence of master's refusal to take acids and gunpowder on board. It could be only a ground of action against the master for the refusal to take the goods. There was a stipulation that the master should attend daily at broker's office to sign bills of lading which was not duly performed. It was held that the performance of it was not a condition precedent to the shipowner's right to sue for freight: (Seymour v. Duthie and others, E. C., Nov. 30, 1860; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 3 (Error from the Common Bench).)

2. Charterer handing copies of bills of lading to shipowners—Consular manifest—Custom at Liverpool—Action for fraudulent misrepresentation.—Charterers are not bound to hand over to shipowners copies of bills of lading, in order that consular manifest may be made out. It was alleged that there was a custom at Liverpool for shippers of goods to make out for the captain a correct copy of bill of lading, but there was nothing in the declaration to show that this was a duty cast upon the defendant, and it was held that the declaration could not be supported. There was a further allegation that the defendant only handed over copies of six out of the eight bills of lading "as for the whole." This was relied upon by the plaintiffs, but it was held to be a mere misrepresentation, for which, if deceitfully or improperly made, an action might lie at the suit of the bailors: (Dutton v. Powles, Q. B. Jan. 22 and 25, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 22; E. C. Feb. 3 and 8, 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 209; 3 L. T. Rep. N. S. 695; 31 L. J. 191, Q. B.; 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 224; 2 B. & S. 174, in error, 8 Jur. N. S. 970.)

3. Limitation of agents' liability—Shipment of cargo—Regular turn.—A contract was made by defendants as agents for principals abroad to ship cargo without any liability on the part of the agents for anything done either before, during, or after the shipping. The cargo was not shipped in regular turn, but as the plaintiff contended, too late. The cargo was, however, shipped before the suit commenced, and it was held that the defendants were protected by the provision in the contract. Ingleby v. Iglesias, 1 E. B. & E. 933, considered an authority for defendants: (Milvain and others v. Peres and others, Q. B. Jan. 18, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 32; 3 L. T. Rep. N. S. 736; 30 L. J. 90.)

ELECTION LAW.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

ELECTION PETITION—ILLEGAL ACTS OF AN ASSOCIATION—EFFECT OF CANDIDATE'S SUBSCRIPTION TO.—Some acts may be done at an election of which the judge disapproves, but which do not vitiate it. These may be looked to, however, to explain other acts which are ambiguous, and if upon a future election petition arising out of another election at the same place, acts similar to those of which the judge had expressed his disapproval were proved to have been repeated, the judge who tried the second petition might well take them into consideration to aid his conclusion that the act upon which the validity of the election depended was a corrupt and dishonest act. There is no partnership privity between the parties subscribing to a political association; nor does the fact of subscribing confer any authority upon the person who manages it to make them responsible for an illegal act done by the manager. S. was the acting agent and sole representative of a Liberal association, and evidence was given to show that he paid the rates of voters to enable them to be registered. The respondents were Liberals, and subscribed to the funds of the association, but did not interfere personally: Held, that they were not responsible for the acts of S. Semble, it is necessary in order to establish that a person had corruptly paid a rate when the rate was in fact paid by a third person, to show that that person was authorised by the person sought to be charged to pay the rate. Where the candidature has been honest, the strictest proof of illegal acts by agents is required: (Wigan Election Petition, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 122. Martin, B.)

BOROUGH—OCCUPATION OF CHAMBERS.—B. rented a set of chambers in the Temple. Each room was separated from the other, and opened into a vestibule which communicated with a landing on a public staircase. The claimant had the exclusive occupation of one of the rooms, over the door of which, opening on the vestibule, he had exclusive control. This was held not to be "a house" or "other building" within the meaning of the Act: (Cuthbertson v. Butterworth, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 140. C. P.)

CAN A PEW BE A FREEHOLD?—At the revision court for the Northern Division of Staffordshire, at Hanley, a question was raised as to the right of pew-owners in St. John's Church to vote as freeholders. It was stated that there had been a regular traffic in the pews, some of which had been sold for 150l. each, the purchasers being desirous of acquiring votes. Mr. Sheelen, the barrister, said it was inconsistent with the rights of the church that a person should have such an estate in a pew in the church as would entitle him to a vote for knights of the shire. There had been a conveyance, under a special Act, of a right to sit in a certain pew, but no right to vote. The vote was disallowed.

COUNTY CONSTITUENCIES.—As many as 202,676 of the county electors in England and Wales on the registers now in force, rather more than a fourth of the whole 791,916 electors on the county registers, are persons entitled to vote (under the Reform Act of 1867) as 12l. occupiers. The total number of male occupiers (exclusive of those who are owners) at a gross estimated rental of 14l. and under 50l. in 1866 was 224,363. The proportion of the constituency on the register as 12l. occupiers varies greatly in different counties. In Middlesex as many as 9764 of the whole constituency of 25,196 are persons entitled to vote as 12l. occupiers; in Mid-Surrey as many as 5017 of the whole 10,565; in West Kent 4064 of the whole 8828; in South Essex 3024 of the 7127; in South West Lancashire 9583 of the 21,261. On the other hand, the registers show also such numbers as the following:—In West Cumberland only 960 of the whole 5675 electors are persons entitled to vote as 12l. occupiers; in North Durham only 1526 of the whole 10,576; in South Derbyshire 1295 of the 7833; in East Gloucestershire 1189 of the 8853, and in West Gloucestershire 1422 of the 11,463; in South Leicestershire 937 of the 8308; in South Northamptonshire 647 of the 6338; in North Nottinghamshire 839 of the 5205; in West Somerset 1225 of the 7671, and in all Somerset 4572 of the 24,830; in East Suffolk 1499 of the 9024; in North Wiltshire 931 of the 6857, and in South Wiltshire 550 of the 3810; in West Worcestershire 911 of the 6311; in North Yorkshire 3587 of the 19205. In all England the occupiers of 12l. and upwards now on the registers are 185,457 of the whole county constituency of 728,780; in Wales 17,219 of the whole 63,136.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

ACCEPTANCE OF TRUSTEESHIP—CREDITORS.—Where there is an acceptance of a trusteeship under seal, and nothing more, that does not amount to a covenant by the trustee. And consequently cestui que trust of a defaulting trustee who had been appointed by a deed which merely contained a recital that it was desired to appoint him, and, in the operative part, his appointment in pursuance of that desire, were held (differing from Stuart, V.C.), not to be specialty creditors in a suit to administer the trustee's estate: (Holland v. Holland, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 129. Ch.)

TRUSTEE—VEXATIOUS REFUSAL TO HAND OVER FUND—COSTS.—A testator left all his property to trustees on trust for his wife for life, and all the residue to A. H., daughter of his brother W. H., absolutely. The testator's brother W. had three daughters, E., M., and M. A., the plaintiff, who had long prior to the will been Mrs. S., and on the ground of the doubt of identity the trustees refused to pay over the residue: Held, that the refusal was not warranted by the circumstances; that the plaintiff's second name being A., and she being a daughter of the testator's brother W., was sufficient, and, on bill filed for payment, decree, with costs: (Southwell v. Martin, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 135. V.C. M.)

SIGNATURE OF NOTARY.—The signature of a notary to an act done by him in a foreign country must be duly authenticated by a person in England: (Re Davis's Trusts, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 137. V.C. J.)

PAYMENT OF FEES TO DEPUTY STEWARD OF MANOR—CROSSED CHEQUE.—The defendant having purchased a copyhold tenement, the steward of the manor wrote to C., the defendant's attorney, inclosing a draft admittance, and informing him that he might admit the defendant as deputy steward. C. accordingly admitted the defendant, the admittance being in the usual form, and stating that the defendant paid his fine. The defendant, did not, in fact, pay the fine, and C., by letter, informed the steward that he would pay it in a few days. The steward replied that he ought to have paid it at the time, and hoped he should receive a cheque in a few days. The defendant afterwards gave C. a cheque for an amount, including the fine, fees, and C.'s charges, and at the request of C. crossed the cheque, with the name of C.'s bankers. C. paid the cheque into his bankers, and it was duly honoured; but C.'s account being overdrawn, his bankers refused to pay him the money, and C. not having paid over the fine, the lord sued the defendant: Held, per Bovill, C. J. and M. Smith, J. (Byles, J. dissente), that assuming that C. had authority to receive the fine, he had no authority to receive it otherwise than in cash, or what was equivalent to cash, and that a cheque crossed with the name of C.'s bankers, and including money due to C., was not a good payment as against the lord. Held, per Byles, J., that such payment was a good payment as between the lord and the defendant: (Bridges v. Garrett, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 141. C. P.)

ALIMONY—PROOF.—In a case where the husband had filed no answer to his wife's petition for alimony, the court to save expense allowed the wife to prove the husband's faculties by affidavits: but it required that the husband should have notice of the filing of the affidavits served on him, and also of the motion to ask for alimony upon them: (Mumby v. Mumby, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 144. Div.)

CUSTODY OF CHILDREN—MAINTENANCE.—Where the wife had obtained a decree of judicial separation by reason of the gross and profligate adultery of the husband, though his father and sister offered to take charge of the children—two daughters aged ten and twelve—and to educate them suitably, the court declined to deprive the mother of their custody. And in addition to permanent alimony at the rate of one-third of the joint income, of which the wife contributed nearly half, it ordered the husband to pay 30*l.* a year towards the maintenance and education of the children: (Milford v. Milford, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 155. Div. & Mat.)

THE EDMUNDS SCANDAL.—This cause célèbre will come on in the Court of Arbitration (Court of Common Pleas, Westminster Hall) on Thursday, the 21st inst., at ten o'clock, and there is now every prospect of this long protracted litigation, which has subsisted for nearly six years, being brought to a final determination. The arbitrators are the Hon. G. Denman, Q.C. and Mr. C. Pollock, Q.C.; the umpire, Mr. Manisty, Q.C.

THE LATE MR. CHESTER.—The following has been addressed to the Times:—"Sir,—Archdeacon Utterson, in his letter to you, giving information of the death of Mr. Henry Chester, by a fall on the Lyskamme Alp, states Mr. Chester's age to have been sixty-nine. Will you kindly allow me to state that he was only fifty-five when he met with his untimely end? On behalf of a wide circle of his friends and fellow-parishioners, I venture to write and express the deep regret which is entertained at his premature death. As a man of talent and public spirit, and as a large-hearted Christian, his loss will be severely felt. He was a most liberal supporter of every good work in South London. Having been in charge to the parish of St. Mary, Newington, for the last seven years, I was well acquainted with Mr. Chester, who was solicitor and vestry clerk to the parish, and I can testify to his great worth. I never asked his assistance in cases of either public or private charity without meeting with a liberal response. Before leaving home for his annual excursion in Switzerland, he made arrangements for increasing his annual donations to the various charities. He was much respected by all the members of the vestry, and was regarded as a most able and judicious adviser. Being possessed of considerable landed and personal property, he did not accept the full income attached to the office of vestry clerk. Earnestly trusting that the loss of two such valuable lives as those of the Rev. Mr. Elliott and Mr. Chester may induce Alpine travellers to exercise the most rigid precautions in ascending those walls of death,—I remain, Sir, yours truly, ALFRED CAY, Vicar of Whetstone."

THE BENCH AND THE BAR.

The Temple Church was re-opened on Sunday for Divine Service, it having been closed for two months during the recess. The preachers were, in the morning, the Rev. C. N. Edgington, M.A., of Magdalen Hall, Oxford; and in the afternoon, the Rev. Alfred Ainger, M.A., of Trinity Hall, Cambridge.

Mr. H. B. Sheridan has addressed a long letter to his constituents at Dudley, explanatory of his transactions with the Albert and other companies. He argues that commission equal in amount to that which he received from the Albert would, for the same consideration, have been obtained from any amalgamating company. His first transaction related to the purchase by the Albert of the Times Company—a business undoubtedly sound. In this company Mr. Sheridan says he had an income secured for life of 700*l.* This interest was bought by the Albert for 8700*l.*, the value according to the published tables of the company, but it was stipulated that he should hold himself at their disposal for the guarantee business for a certain time and should not for five years accept any appointment similar to that which he had relinquished. Subsequently he negotiated the transfer of several businesses to the Albert, for which he was paid in commission 28,000*l.*, or 2 per cent. The amount of these transfers was nearly 250,000*l.* per annum. The payment of this commission extended over several years. Mr. Sheridan enters into a statement of the amount of commissions usually paid to show that what he received was not an exorbitant sum, and appeals to the most eminent commercial authorities, such as Baron Rothschild, Mr. Goschen, and Mr. Baring, whether they are not sanctioned by the practice of other insurance companies. The affairs of the Albert, Mr. Sheridan says, were investigated in 1862 by Professor De Morgan, when it was stated that there were enough assets for every liability, and profit besides, and therefore the sum of 50,000*l.* was divided as profit. With the amalgamation with the Western, which took place subsequently, Mr. Sheridan was in no way concerned. Mr. Sheridan adds that he has made this explanation voluntarily, and says he believes his constituents are incapable of condemning him without an inquiry.

AN AMERICAN JURIST ON THE ALABAMA QUESTION.—The Hon. William Beach Lawrence, formerly American Minister to the Court of St. James's, editor of Wheaton's International Jurist, and believed to be one of the ablest of living authorities on that subject, made a speech on Monday night at the Social Science Congress, from which we take the following important passage:—"What I am going to say on the question now understood to be pending between the United States and Great Britain will be said as a publicist, and not as a citizen of my country. I am strictly a private individual, and no one, save myself, can be responsible for any sentiments that I may utter. This is not the occasion to go into discussion of the Alabama claims. As to them I will only remark that, whatever might be the construction of the law of nations, in a case where powers other than the United States and England were concerned, it may be asked whether, as between us, the indemnities accorded under the treaties of 1794, for vessels captured by French privateers fitted out in our ports, and for vessels captured within our waters, and which it was not in our power to return, do not form a precedent entitled to weighty consideration. On the other hand, as far as respects the complaint founded on the recognition of the belligerent rights of the Confederates, I cannot use too strong language in pronouncing its utterly baseless character. No tyro in international law is ignorant that belligerency is a simple question of fact. With the late Sir Cornwall Lewis, we may ask, if the array of a million of men on each side does not constitute belligerency, what is belligerency? But what was the proclamation of the President, followed up by the condemnation of your ships and cargoes for a violation of the blockade which is established, but a recognition of a state of war? At this moment the United States, in claiming the property of the late Confederate Government, place before your tribunals their title on the fact of their being the successors of a de facto government. I repeat that, however valid our claims may be against you on other grounds, there is not the slightest pretext for any claim against you based on the public admission of a notorious fact, the existence of which has been recognised by every department of the Federal Government."

MAGISTRATE AND PARISH LAWYER.

NOTES ON NEW DECISIONS.

ANCIENT MARKET—DISTURBANCE OF—NEW MARKET—MUNICIPAL CORPORATION.—The corporation of an ancient municipal borough, the limits of which were, for Parliamentary purposes, enlarged and fixed by the 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 64, s. 35, schedule O, are entitled, under the Municipal Corporation Act (5 & 6 Will. c. 76), sects 9 and 8, to hold their ancient market anywhere within such enlarged limits, notwithstanding that the same may be without the original limits of such ancient municipal borough. An interference in the affairs and management of a new market, as, e. g., receiving rent in the nature of a stallage, or any increased rent of the field used for such new market above that which, otherwise, would be obtainable, is sufficient to fix a defendant in an action for disturbance of market (see Mosley v. Chadwick, 7 B. & C. 47, note), and it is not necessary for that purpose that he should have actually sold. To hold a new market in a town upon the same day that an ancient market is held there "shall be intended to be a nuisance," and, therefore, amounts in law to a disturbance; but to hold it on a different day is only evidence of a disturbance to be laid before the jury (see Yard v. Ford, 2 Wms. Saund. 174, note). So held by the Court of Exchequer (Channell, Pigott, and Cleasby, BB.): (The Mayor &c., of Dorchester v. Ensor, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 145. Ex.)

MIDDLESEX SESSIONS.

Monday, Oct. 4.

This was the first occasion of Sir W. Bodkin, the assistant-judge, presiding since his vacation, and many of the justices present congratulated the learned gentleman upon his improved health. His address to the grand jury contains matter of considerable interest and importance, and we therefore print it in extenso.

Sir W. BODKIN.—Gentlemen of the Grand Jury,—Upon a perusal of the depositions returned to this court I have not met with any case out of the usual description or calling for any special remark, but since I last sat here several very important changes in the criminal law have occurred, to some of which I am desirous of shortly referring. By the Habitual Criminals Act, passed in the last session of Parliament, it is enacted that whoever shall be found guilty of felony or of certain specified misdemeanors after a previous conviction shall, in addition to the punishment which may be awarded, be placed under the supervision of the police for the period of seven years. The carrying out this salutary provision will require anxious care, lest the vigilance of the police should unintentionally interfere with any bona fide endeavour to earn future support by honest means. Complaints of such a result from similar interference have often been made, but it may be expected that the new and uniform system to be now inaugurated will prevent any such abuse. The Act contains also a very serious change in the law respecting receivers of stolen goods, a subject which I need not say has a most important bearing on our criminal proceedings. No one can view without regret the facilities too often afforded for the disposal of stolen property, or doubt that any substantial check judiciously imposed upon the present practice must tend to reduce the number of persons engaged in dishonest courses. Hitherto receivers of stolen goods have been tried without reference to any previous offence, and it has often happened that after their acquittal the jury have heard with surprise and dismay of former convictions. This rule is altered, and it will now be competent to the prosecutor to lay before the jury any former conviction as evidence of guilty knowledge. The 11th clause, which provides for the admissibility of this evidence, does not in the early part declare that such evidence shall be conclusive; but there are subsequent words which will probably occasion some difficulty, it being made necessary that notice shall be given to the accused of the intention to prove a former conviction, and by which notice the accused is to be informed that guilty knowledge will be assumed until the contrary is proved. It does not appear to me that this notice is intended to enlarge the previous enactment, or that a former conviction is thereby made conclusive evidence of guilty knowledge, and, until an authoritative decision forbids it, I shall feel bound to hold that the jury may consider the question of guilty knowledge upon its merits, although the accused does not adduce any evidence to prove the contrary. I can easily imagine the case of a person found in the possession of stolen goods who had unfortunately (perhaps in early life) been convicted summarily of some trivial and wholly different kind of offence, who might, if any other construction were upheld, be convicted of receiving goods with a guilty knowledge, although really innocent of the crime. By the same Act evidence may now be given of the possession of other stolen property, although not stolen from or being the property of the prosecutor. It is also made an offence for marine store-dealers to purchase lead or copper in small quantities, which if enforced will prevent a large number of petty robberies of those metals. By these stringent regulations it may be hoped that habitual criminals will find the disposal of the fruits of dishonesty more difficult and that the amount of crime will be thereby lessened. It cannot, I fear, be expected that the business of criminal courts will be much diminished. By another Act of the last session, a variety of offences newly created under the Bankruptcy Laws are made triable in courts of quarter sessions, and may largely increase the present heavy business of this court; but this Act does not come into operation until the 1st Jan. 1870. On the other hand, a very useful enactment was passed in the previous session giving to the magistrates of the police-courts jurisdiction to determine cases of embezzlement of small amount, which we may hope will be frequently exercised, and that we may no longer see a grand and petty jury compelled to try such unimportant charges. Power has also been given to the police magistrates summarily to dispose of charges of assault on the police, which, no doubt, will be promptly and firmly acted upon, delay in such cases being generally productive of injustice. Foremost among the fruitful sources of crime undoubtedly stands the prevalent habit of intoxication, and I am thoroughly convinced that a very large proportion of the cases which are brought before criminal courts may be clearly traced to the direct or indirect effects of this hateful vice, and especially those cases of personal injury of so savage and brutal a nature, as to evince a total disregard of the safety of human life. I perceive by a notice given by a member of the House of Commons that an effort to deal with habitual drunkards is likely to be made, and if so difficult a task should be successfully accomplished, the benefit to the public would be incalculable. In the mean time it is gratifying to observe that by Bands of Hope and other analogous associations attempts are being zealously made to teach the rising generation a due abhorrence of this degrading habit. I may now, I think, gentlemen, remit you to the performance of your duty, of the nature of which I have no doubt you are aware. I had hoped that before this the interference of grand juries in the metropolitan district might have been in a great measure dispensed with, and a considerable saving of time and expense effected. The cases which will come before you have been already investigated by learned magistrates, and your duty is, in fact, of a very formal kind. If, therefore, you carefully confine yourselves to ascertaining whether a prima facie case is made out in support of each indictment, I hope to be able at an early hour to-morrow to release you from further attendance. The Assistant-Judge said that, as the court would be occupied with the music and dancing licences on Thursday and Friday, the cases in which accused persons are on bail would be tried on the bail day of the next session, and he hoped that, with the assistance of the Bar, the whole of the cases of prisoners in custody would be disposed of before Wednesday evening.

CAMBRIDGE DIVISION COUNTY MAGISTRATES.

Saturday, Sept. 25.

(Before the Rev. JOHN THORNHILL, Chairman; C. W. PEMBERTON, and H. W. PEMBERTON, Esqrs.)

The Beerhouse Act 1869—Proof of rateable value—Conviction for using false measures—What to be deemed a second offence.

Upon an application for a certificate under the Beerhouse Act 1869:

Held, that the applicant was bound to produce proof that the house for which the certificate was applied for was of sufficient rateable value, even although the house had been previously licensed by the excise:

Held, further, that a conviction for using false measures is not a conviction of such a nature as the justices will take cognisance of in considering the application; and

Held, lastly, that in order to constitute a second offence there must have been a conviction which rendered the licence liable to forfeiture after the passing of the Act.

Martha Norfield applied for the justices' certificate for the beerhouse called the Old Spring situate at Chesterton, which had been adjourned to furnish evidence of good character.

J. W. Cooper (instructed by Ellison) for the applicant, produced a memorial signed by twenty-nine inhabitants, including the vicar, testifying to her good character. He also produced another memorial signed by sixty of her neighbours certifying as to the orderly character of the house. He submitted that this was satisfactory evidence to warrant the granting of the certificate.

The CHAIRMAN.—There are four convictions recorded against the house besides one in November, but the last named being at the time of the borough election, we shall not attach weight to it.

J. W. Cooper said the fact of four convictions took him by surprise, he was prepared to admit one in November, and also that the applicant had been cautioned on two occasions, once for keeping open after eleven p.m., and another time for having a pack of cards in the house. The other convictions were, no doubt, long anterior to the passing of the Act. He hoped some limit would be placed upon the length of time of previous convictions.

The CHAIRMAN.—We can go back five years.

J. W. Cooper.—The applicant has only had the management of the house for three years.

The CHAIRMAN.—The report of the police is calculated to mislead. [The convictions were then referred to, when it appeared that one was for using false measures.] We take no notice of convictions for that offence in applications of this nature.

J. W. Cooper pointed out that the conviction must be for an offence subjecting the licence to forfeiture, and argued that there must have been a conviction for such an offence since the passing of the new Act to cause a previous conviction to be counted a second or a third offence.

The BENCH adopted that view.

The CHAIRMAN asked for proof that the house was of sufficient rateable value.

J. W. Cooper said he was not prepared with such proof. He contended that the fact of the licence having previously been granted by the Excise was sufficient; at all events it was prima facie proof which ought to be rebutted.

The CHAIRMAN.—Insufficiency of rateable value is one of the grounds upon which we can refuse the application; therefore you are bound to satisfy us upon the point. The Excise authorities were not very strict as to rateable value.

Mr. Elkin, the landlord, here stated the house was rated high enough.

The CHAIRMAN.—That will do; but in all future cases we shall require proof of rateable value. In the present case the certificate will be granted.

Application granted.

Public-house licence—Evidence.

Upon an application for the renewal of a public-house licence the reports of a police-constable to his superior officer not made at the time, but some days afterwards, were received in evidence, and he was allowed to read from them, and even to refresh his memory from them upon cross-examination.

This was an application by John Rich for the renewal of the licence to the public-house, the Portland Arms, situate at Chesterton.

Wayman and Eaden for the applicant.

From the evidence of Police-constable Ash, it appeared that prostitutes were allowed to assemble, and that gambling was carried on. The applicant had been cautioned several times. The police-constable produced minutes of what had occurred in the form of a report to his superior officer, and was reading from them in evidence when Eaden asked when the minutes were taken, and it appeared that they were made several days after the occurrence. He objected to their admissibility.

The CHAIRMAN overruled the objection, and upon cross-examination by Wayman, the constable was allowed to refresh his memory by referring to them.

License refused.

MARCH PETTY SESSIONS.

Tuesday, Sept. 21.

(Before J. POPE, T. RICHARDSON, and J. RICHARDSON, Esqrs.)

PEARSON v. FOUNTAIN.

Cattle straying on the highway—Pound breach.

It is an offence to rescue cattle lawfully impounded either to or from the pound under the 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 124. But where cattle were found on a highway under the care of a man fifty yards from them:

Held, on the authority of Morris v. Jeffries, 13

L. T. Rep. N. S. 629, that they were not liable to seizure, and a summons charging the defendant with rescuing cattle impounded under such circumstances was dismissed.

This was a complaint made by William Pearson, of Apwell Pindar, against the defendant, William Fountain, of Maul, for having unlawfully rescued from the complainant's lawful custody three cows, two calves, and one ass, then on their way to the pound.

Vipan, for the defendant, submitted that, under the 124th section of 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, it was no offence to rescue cattle going to or from the pound; but that the section applied in cases where they were confined in the pound. He cited Oke's Magisterial Synopsis upon the point.

The BENCH overruled the objection.

The case then proceeded, and from the evidence of the complainant it appeared he was driving from March, on the west turnpike road, and observed the animals named in the indictment in the road, the defendant being about fifty yards from them. The defendant impounded the cattle, and was driving them towards March, when the defendant came up and recued them from his custody.

Vipan, for the defence, cited the decision in Morris v. Jeffries, 13 L. T. Rep. N. S. 629, where it was held that cattle could not be said to be straying, and liable to seizure, if under the control of some person. In this case they were under the control of the defendant. Therefore, as they were not in the legal custody of the complainant no offence had been committed.

The BENCH dismissed the case.

The next General Quarter Sessions for the borough of Portsmouth will be holden on Oct. 22, and not on Oct. 16, as stated last week. Recorder, Mr. Serjeant Cox. Ten days notice of appeal to be given.

POOR LAW BOARD.—It is to be hoped, for the sake of the public and the public service, the announcement of a contemporary, that Mr. John Lambert, of the Poor Law Board, will succeed Mr. Hamilton as Secretary of the Treasury, is well founded. Mr. Lambert is one of those useful and unobtrusive Government servants whose proceedings in the interest of the commonweal are in their results before the world, while their originators, outside official circles, are quite unknown. During the cotton famine, this gentleman, we are informed, perfected the scheme and drafted the Act under which the Lancashire operatives were employed in carrying out numerous improvements in the undrained and unpaved towns of the palatinate. When, under popular outcry, something had to be done to remedy the shortcomings of metropolitan workhouse management, that something was accomplished by the same ready hand. Mr. Lambert's exertions in gathering and digesting electoral statistics, first for the Reform Bill of Earl Russell's Cabinet, subsequently for that of Lord Derby, were important labours acknowledged at the time by Liberals as well as by Conservatives. If this appointment should be made, Mr. Gladstone will have secured to Downing-street the services of a variously gifted adviser and worker.—Pall-Mall Gazette.

CONVICTS.—The population of the convict prisons of England, on the 1st April 1869, consisted of 6966 males, and 1157 females; and there were 552 males at Gibraltar. The number of convicts in prison must increase, owing to the greater length of sentences. The number of male convicts received into convict prisons in England in the year 1868 was 1732; 88 of them were men whose licences were revoked, and among the remaining 1644 there were 363 who had been previously sentenced to penal servitude; 233 female convicts were received in the year, 39 being women whose licences were revoked, and among the remaining 250 there were 76 who had been previously sentenced to penal servitude. The number both of men and women who had been previously sentenced to penal servitude was fewer than in 1867. The earnings of convicts in the year, the value of their labour shows the following averages:—Males—tailors, 7½d. a day; shoemakers, 9d.; weavers, 8½d.; matmakers, 8d.; oakum pickers, 1½d.; females—needlewomen, 3d.; knitters, 1½d.; washers, 11d. The employment of male convicts on large public works for which they are adapted is much more remunerative. At Chatham they were employed in brickmaking, &c., and earned in 1868 2s. 7½d. a day; at Portland, quarrying and dressing stone, &c., 2s. 3½d.; at Portsmouth, brickmaking, excavating, &c., 2s. 2½d. at Dartmoor, reclaiming land, farm labour, &c., 1s. 3d.; at Woking, building new female prison, &c., 2s. 7½d. At the three prisons—Portland, Portsmouth, and Chatham—the labour of the prisoners was valued by measurement at 124,500l., and the cost of the prisoners was but 116,870l. leaving a profit of 7630l. From 1850 to Dec. 1867, these three prisons have cost 1,686,472l., and have earned 1,386,936l., leaving a net cost of 299,536l. for maintaining an average of 2766 prisoners for seventeen years.

PROSECUTION OF THE DIRECTORS OF THE ALBERT.—There is a look of unreality in the prosecution of the directors of the Albert Insurance Company. The charge is one of conspiracy to defraud, and it is hardly consistent with such a charge to find the prosecutor expressing anxiety for a thorough investigation, and a wish to try whether directors could save themselves by trusting a manager, rather than any earnest belief that the directors had been knowingly lending themselves to a deception. The inconsistency is made apparent by the light treatment of the magistrate who grants a postponement of the hearing for three weeks, and meanwhile leaves the defendants to be at large on their own recognizances for the nominal amount of 10l. each. The difficulty of bringing home such a charge will perhaps be greater in the case of the directors of insurance companies than in regard to almost any other directors. An insurance balance-sheet depends so much on actuarial rules, the losses and profits are so much mere figures in account, that the proof of wilful concealment of the truth becomes very difficult, even if juries could be trusted to understand the points at all when brought before them ex post facto. It is moreover quite intelligible that with actual figures meaning insolvency before them, incompetent directors might have interpreted them very differently. The case is very unlike that of a simple business, such as a bank, where directors, however stupid about accounts, can distinguish liabilities and assets, and see easily enough whether there is insolvency or not. Whether the law should not be so framed as to render criminal gross incompetency in a place of trust—whether it should not assume a reasonable knowledge of the subject in those who send forth technical accounts to the world—is a different matter; and we believe that improvement in this direction is not impossible.—Economist.

REAL PROPERTY LAWYER AND CONVEYANCER.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

CHARGE FOR YOUNGER CHILDREN—LEGACY LEFT TO TENANT FOR LIFE—SET-OFF.—B., entitled as a younger child to a portion of a charge on an estate, the tenant for life only partially kept down the interest, and B. left him by will 1000l. On his death more than that sum was due to B.'s estate, in respect of the unpaid interest, but it was held that no right of set-off existed: (Morley v. Saunders, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 132. V.C.M.)

WILL—CONSTRUCTION.—A testator gave all his property to trustees absolutely, and to divide the whole amongst his four children equally, with benefit of survivorship; in case any of them should die without issue; and in case any of them should die leaving any child or children, the shares original and accruing to be divided between such children equally, if more than one, and if only one, then the whole to such one. All four survived the testator, attained twenty-one, and three had families: Held, that the period referred to was the death of the testator, and the four children took absolutely as tenants in common: (Bowers v. Bowers, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 134. V.C.M.)

WILL—SIGNATURE.—A testator made a will drawn by a competent solicitor from his instructions. It was attested by the solicitor and his clerk. For the purpose of obtaining probate in common form, the solicitor made an affidavit as to execution which was prepared by the other attesting witness. The solicitor died a short time afterwards, and the other attesting witness then for the first time stated that the will had not been attested in the presence of the deceased. There was no evidence the other way, and the court, under all the circumstances, not being satisfied with the evidence of the surviving attesting witness, granted probate: (Wright v. Rogers, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 134. Prob.)

WILL—CONSTRUCTION.—B. gave the residue of his estate to his three children, naming them equally, willing his daughter's shares to be invested, the interest only to be paid to them, and neither they nor any husband to have any control over the principal, except that the daughters should have power to will at their decease. They were held to take an absolute interest: (Bousfield v. Bousfield, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 136. V.C.M.)

ANOTHER DEVELOPMENT OF THE LAND QUESTION.—A "labourers' club" has held a meeting at Kanturk, county Cork, in order to bring their case under the attention of Parliament. They passed a resolution asking for a "clause in the contemplated Irish Land Bill which will provide for each labourer or working man a house to live in, and one plantation acre, or one acre two roods and nineteen perches statute, of land attached to each house, at the farmer's rent, or at a fair rent." The chairman, Mr. O'Riordan, referred to Her Majesty's sympathy with the poor, and her gracious statement that the daughters of Erin are "beautiful and fair." He also alludes to the Marquis of Hartington's speech at Lismore on the labourer's claims, and added, "Let the working man get a comfortable homestead and one acre of land attached, and all secret societies will disappear from the country, and the Government can remove the soldiers from Ireland to defend the British Isles from foreign aggression." They earnestly called on their fellow labourers to "establish clubs" in their localities to "aid in advancing the working class, the bone and sinew of the land."

AMERICAN OPINION ON THE IRISH LAND QUESTION.—The Toronto Globe makes the following remarks on this subject:—"The only way in which Mr. Bright's plan can be at all utilised seems to us the following. In the peculiar circumstances of Ireland the natural process of distribution, from land being put on the same footing as any other article of commerce, might be thought too slow, though it would be far the surest and most satisfactory. That might, perhaps, be somewhat quickened by estates being bought up in the way Mr. Bright proposes, and re-sold in small portions, not necessarily to their present occupants, but to whomsoever will pay a fair price for the property, and that fair price to be determined by a valuation below which it is not to be sold, and anything above to be determined by auction. The drawback in the disposal of land is, that it is put up in such large quantities that thrifty working men cannot set their faces to the idea of purchase. It is so much more convenient, and upon the whole profitable, to have one purchaser for a whole estate comprising thousands of acres than to sell it farm by farm, and these farms of only a few acres in extent, that even though bankrupt landlords may be sold out, others come in and purchase the whole en bloc. Let the Government guard against this by organising a plan something like the land system of the United States, so far as applicable to Ireland, and let everyone get a chance of a farm so far as possible. Why should a thrifty tradesman or labourer in a town, who has managed to lay past a few pounds, not have a chance to get a few acres in the country if he is inclined that way and can pay for them; while the shiftless fellow, who has for years scarcely managed to keep soul and body together, is put in possession of a farm which is not his, and on terms with which he can never comply, but for the non-performance of which he will never be evicted, except at the risk to the ruling authority of being accused of tyranny and oppression and heartlessness, which it would like better altogether to avoid?"

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

ADVANCES—GUARANTEE.—The bank of L. had made advances to M'H. upon the security of a guarantee by B. and Co. The loan was from time to time renewed, but ultimately the bank expressed its desire to have the transaction closed. M'H. and B. and Co. then induced the I. Association to grant M'H. a credit enabling him to discharge the debt, B. and Co. giving to the association a similar guarantee. Subsequently the bank gave to the association a counter-guarantee, by which they guaranteed to provide funds to meet the liability of the association in the event of B. and Co. making default; and upon this state of facts the bills given to secure the debt were renewed from time to time, and were ultimately met by the bank. All the companies were ordered to be wound-up, and upon the claim of the bank it was held (reversing the decision of the Master of the Rolls), that B. and Co. were liable to the bank for the amount paid, inasmuch as the guarantee given by them entitled the bank which had paid the money to stand in the place of the association to whom it was given, a right which the bank had not in any way released by its counter-guarantee. The position of the bank was not, by reason of its having been the original guarantor, at all affected; but it stood exactly as any third independent company, from which the association might have obtained such a guarantee would have stood on paying the amount of the advances: (Re Barnard's Banking Company, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 126. L.J.)

WINDING-UP—PRACTICE—NON-REGISTRATION.

—F., on the register of the company for twenty shares, executed a transfer of them to S., by whom it was also executed, and it was left at the company's office for registration on the 15th Feb. 1866. A board meeting was held on the 1st March, but from some unexplained cause the transfer was not then registered. On the 7th March 1866 a petition to wind-up the company was presented, and on the 17th a winding-up order was made. F.'s name continued on the register, and he was summoned in June 1866 to show cause why his name should not be placed on the list of contributories. According to his affidavit he "successfully resisted" the summons, but his name was not removed, nor did it appear to have been settled on the list, as in April 1869 a summons to settle him finally on the list was served on him on the part of the official liquidator. Upon this he applied to have his name removed, and it was held (reversing the decision of the Master of the Rolls), that as the delay in registering the transfer was the fault of the company, and as it was not incumbent on F. to procure the substitution of S.'s name for his own, and as there had been no delay at all on the part of F., his name must be removed from the list: (Dr. Fyfe's case, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 131. Giffard, L.J.)

Lord William Hay has sent to the papers a proposal made by Mr. Lewis, the secretary of the Alliance Assurance Company, with respect to the affairs of the Albert Company. Mr. Lewis suggests that the assets of the Albert should be realised, and that some company of high standing should be entrusted with the working of the assurance account for a fixed commission. He thinks the commission might be fixed at 5 per cent. Lord William Hay states that the main features of the proposal have been favourably viewed by the London committee of Albert policyholders, and the secretary of the Alliance offers to lay it before his directors.

COUNTY COURTS.

NEWPORT COUNTY COURT.

(Before C. J. GALE, Esq., Judge.)

BURT v. VINCENT.

Residence—Jurisdiction.

A defendant resided in London, but took a house for six months in the Isle of Wight:

Held, that his place of residence was London, and that he could not be sued in the Isle of Wight.

This was an equity case, the suit being instituted to enforce the specific performance of an agreement for the purchase of a house at Brading.

J. H. Hearn appeared for the plaintiff, who lives at Brading, and Barber, barrister-at-law, for the defendant, an independent gentleman, living at 2, Hyde-park-terrace, London.

Barber raised a preliminary objection, on the ground of his Honour's jurisdiction. He submitted that the judge had no jurisdiction in this case, as the proceedings were not commenced in the district in which the defendant permanently resided. Under ordinary circumstances, he should have been indisposed to make this objection, but he was induced to take it on this occasion on account of the absence, through serious illness, of the defendant. His objection was this—that the summons not having been served upon the defendant in the district in which he resided, his Honour had no jurisdiction. The defendant had taken a house at Brading as a temporary residence, but kept up his establishment in London, where he had lived for twenty years, and when the summons was served at Brading he had permanently left that place. The learned counsel quoted several cases in support of his contention. In one of these Baron Martin was reported to have said that where a man had a house in Richmond and one in London, both were his dwelling-places, but when a man went to a watering-place for a time he could not be said to dwell there. He added that it would be impossible to decide the case in the defendant's absence, as he was a very material witness. The whole matter was mixed up with a Chancery case, and he was sure his Honour would hesitate to prejudge the case while it was under judicature in another court.

Mrs. Georgiana Vincent, wife of the defendant, was called and stated that she lived at 2, Hyde Park-terrace, London. Her husband was a great invalid, and he was recommended to try the air of the Isle of Wight. They took a house at Brading for about six months. While there their establishment in London was kept up, servants being left in charge of the house. They left Brading after being there about three months—her husband left first, and when the summons was served at Brading he had permanently left, and was in London to be under his medical adviser.

After Hearn had been heard in reply,

His HONOUR decided that he had no jurisdiction.

Barber asked for costs, and
The JUDGE said they must follow the event.

WINCHESTER COUNTY COURT.

(Before Mr. RUSSELL, Deputy-Judge.)

Payment of deposit for costs.

W. H. Woodbridge applied to the court for repayment to his client, Mr. Boyes, a sum of 150*l.*, deposited to cover possible costs in a suit instituted for a malicious prosecution, alleged against Mr. Phillips, a neighbour. Mr. Boyes proposed to remove the suit to a Superior Court, but as Mr. Phillips made no sign of proceeding there he wished to have his deposit for the costs of the Superior Court returned to him.

His HONOUR thought the application ought to be made to the Superior Court.

W. Woodbridge said the court above was not cognisant of the matter; no writ had been issued; there was, in fact, no action pending there, and his client was losing the use of the 150*l.*

His HONOUR advised adjourning the matter till next court day, plaintiff having leave to apply in the meantime to the court above, if thought advisable.

Leigh, who represented the defendant, raised no objection.

BANKRUPTCY LAW.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

APPLICATION TO DISMISS A PETITION FOR ADJUDICATION OF BANKRUPTCY AFTER REGISTRATION OF A TRUST-DEED.—The court, in sect. 3 of the Bankruptcy Amendment Act 1868, held to mean the court described in sect. 8 as having jurisdiction under trust-deeds, and to be the proper court to which application for further time to register a deed should be made, after a stay of proceedings under a petition for adjudication of bankruptcy filed pending the time allowed for registration, and which application should be made before the expiration of such time. The proceeding referred to in sect. 8 as not impeachable held to mean one subsequent to registration. Application to a district court to dismiss a petition for adjudication, on the ground that a trust-deed had been duly registered by order of a London Commissioner made on an application for extension of time, subsequently to the expiration of the time allowed for registering the deed, refused. Costs to abide event of an appeal. Choice of assignees meanwhile postponed: (Re James Downie, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 154. Abrahall, Comm.)

THE NEW BANKRUPTCY LAW.

We have received the following, which we gladly insert:

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—In the article under this head, appearing in the LAW TIMES of Sept. 25, 1869, p. 387, in the remarks upon "Acts of Bankruptcy," clause f, says, "Service of a debtor's summons similar in form to a writ, requiring payment of a sum exceeding 50*l.*" &c. This is incorrect; the words of the Act being, "of an amount of not less than 50*l.*" Also under clause c, the words, "or suffered himself to be outlawed," are omitted. As correctness in the articles appearing in your paper are of moment, I venture to point out the above, and remain, yours respectfully,

F. F. POLLIT.

33, South King-street, Manchester, Oct. 2, 1869.

COMPOSITIONS.—At a meeting of the Council of the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce it was resolved, on the motion of Mr. Clark, the president, to ask the Lord Chancellor to make some rules with respect to the composition clause No. 126 of the new Bankruptcy Bill, which should mitigate the evils likely to arise from the extreme ambiguity of the clause in question. A special committee was also appointed to consider the banking laws.

CORRESPONDENCE OF THE PROFESSION.

[NOTE.—This department of the LAW TIMES being open to free discussion on all professional topics, the Editor is not responsible for any opinions or statements contained in it.]

FRIENDLY SOCIETIES.—The 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63, s. 31, authorises payment on death of a member of not exceeding 50*l.* to his nominee, being a child or other relative, as there particularised. I shall be glad to be informed through the medium of your columns what is the usual and proper course to be adopted as to making this payment where the nominee is at the death an infant, in the case of the member leaving an executor, and also where there is no executor or administrator. LEX.

LAND LAWS.—A very small alteration in appearance often produces great effects. The result of the following change upon large landed estates has not been, I believe, considered; namely, if instead of allowing a tenant in tail in remainder to bar the entail, with the consent of the tenant for life, an entail might only be barred when in possession. This sounds like an additional restraint, but it is only so in sound. The Profession will know that a tenant in tail in remainder cannot help himself, but because he has the power to bar the entail, the tenant for life (on whom he is usually dependent) will compel him to cut down his interest to a life estate. This power being destroyed (in alternate generations at least) the owner will be absolute master of the estate. Improvident successors from time to time might happen to squander a fine estate, but the freedom that would ensure to provident owners would be so beneficial as to counterbalance this. There seems no sound reason why the practical perpetuity which the pressure on tenant in tail in remainder creates should be permitted, when the law so decidedly prevents perpetuity in other forms. M. G.

THE PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION.—Will some of the readers of your valuable paper, who have been article without passing the Preliminary, oblige by informing me of the means necessary to be adopted to effect that end? Also the form of certificate to comply with the requisitions of the Act, and whether such certificate must necessarily show the dates between which a person was a bona fide clerk, or will a certificate specifying the period of service, but omitting the dates, suffice.

A TEN YEARS' MANAGING CLERK.

COSTS.—Your correspondent "A. B." inquires in your last number whether, "where no agreement is made upon the letting of a property, and the lessor and lessee employ their respective solicitors, it is the practice for the lessee to pay the lessor's solicitor's costs, as well as those of his own solicitor?" There is no doubt that it is. Questions of this nature come very frequently before us in our business of cost settlers, and we can assure your correspondent that the settled practice is that in the absence of any specific understanding to the contrary, the lessee pays all the costs, both of the lessor's solicitor and his own. In some rural districts a custom exists that the costs of agricultural leases shall be divided between the lessor and lessee; but unless such a custom could be distinctly proved to prevail in the district where the property demised was situated, it could not be relied upon to exempt the lessee from the operation of the general and settled rule.

HABITUAL CRIMINALS ACT (32 & 33 VICT. c. 99).—Can you explain to what section of this Act the third form of conviction by the magistrates, contained in the third schedule, has relation? It will be seen that the conviction is grounded on proof of the prisoner having been convicted three times of felony, and of then having brought himself within the provisions of part of the 8th section of the Act; but I find no mention in the 8th section, or in any part of the Act, of three convictions for felony being a ground for conviction by the magistrates. This form does not, like the second form, recite that the prisoner is "a person subject to the provisions of the Habitual Criminals Act 1869." S.

Queries.

99. TITLE DEEDS—SECURITY—MARRIED WOMAN'S ESTATE—SEARCHING FOR INCUMBRANCES BEFORE SETTLEMENT OF PURCHASES OF FREEHOLDS, COPYHOLDS, AND LEASEHOLDS.—Will some of your readers consider the correctness of the answer of "Advocate" to Queries 91 and 95, in your issue of last week, and, in reference to the latter answer, see and consider Smith's Compendium, 3rd edit., p. 441: an article in 39 LAW TIMES, 446; 41 LAW TIMES, 249, Query 28; and Halliday, p. 215, 3rd edit. and oblige A SUBSCRIBER.

100. ASSUMING NEW NAME.—Can a man assume a family name, in addition to his original, by simply signing himself as such. E. W. B.

101. LEASES AND SALES OF SETTLED ESTATES ACT.—By The Leases and Sales of Settled Estates Act, a tenant for life is empowered to lease all but "the principal mansion and demesne lands," under certain restrictions. A, the tenant for life of a farm and farmhouse, leases the same and dies. Will the clause preventing the lease of the principal mansion, &c., operate in this case, the farmhouse being the only building on the estate, or will the lease hold good against the tenant in tail? P. O. T.

102. DEED OF EXCHANGE—COVENANT—PRODUCTION OF DEEDS.—Will any of your able correspondents kindly say whether mutual covenants for the production of deeds ought properly to be inserted in an ordinary deed of exchange in cases where the exchange is effected by one instrument. None of the modern printed precedents contain such covenants. A reference to authorities will oblige. H. H.

103. LIBEL.—Would either you or any of your many and learned correspondents kindly say, is a newspaper liable to an action for libel, for publishing evidence given before a Select Committee of the House of Commons, where the evidence is not given on oath? Is the person giving such evidence, it being false and libellous, liable at law. DUBLINENSIS.

104. CONVEYANCE—COVERTURE.—Is a conveyance of land to a married woman temporarily separated from her husband a valid instrument of assurance? The purchase-money is under 10*l.*, and was paid for by S. B., the purchaser, out of her own earnings, and after separation by mutual consent of husband and wife. If not, in whom does the legal estate now vest? Can the purchaser (the married woman) to whom the conveyance was taken in 1867 convey to a purchaser for value, with privity &c. of husband, who would join therein? If not, who are entitled at law to do this? There was no order of protection obtained in 1864 nor in 1867, nor has there been any since, and husband and wife are at present separate. W. W.

Answers.

(Q. 91.) TITLE DEEDS—SECURITY.—In answer to query No. 91, I submit that a memorandum of deposit signed by A. and B. (husband and wife) would not operate as a charge on B's estate, but merely on that of A. jure mariti. By the Fines and Recoveries Act (sect. 77), a married woman is rendered incapable of disposing of lands or of any estate therein, except by "deed" duly acknowledged; and, therefore, any charge, otherwise than by such deed, is inoperative, assuming she has not secured to herself a particular power of disposition: (Sp. Eq. vol. 2, 492.) If a husband and wife could create, by deposit, an equitable mortgage of her estate, the object of the Act would be defeated, and the wife would not have the protection sought to be afforded her. The creditor would not establish in equity a right to specific performance of the agreement to charge the estate of the wife and execute a legal mortgage: (Wilkinson v. Castle, 18 L. T. Rep. N. S. 101. V. C. S.) After the perusal of "Advocate's" answer, mine is offered with diffidence. R. P.

— "Advocate's" answer is incorrect. A married woman can bind her real estate, not settled to her separate use only, by a deed acknowledged. Z. Y.

(Q. 95) PURCHASE OF PROPERTY—INCUMBRANCES.—It is not quite safe to omit the usual searches, and a solicitor who, without express authority from his client, should omit such searches, would probably be chargeable with gross negligence, if any loss accrued by reason of the omission. Although by 27 & 28 Vict. c. 112, no judgment, &c. entered up after the passing of the Act (19th July 1864) affects lands until the same shall have been delivered in execution, judgments entered up prior to that date, if registered or re-registered within five years antecedent to the purchase, would affect freeholds or copyholds. As to such prior judgments as were entered up subsequent to the passing of the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38 (23rd July 1860), they would of course only operate subject to the provisions of that Act. A judgment or writ of execution entered up prior to the 27 & 28 Vict. c. 112, being a legal charge, would in general be paramount to the estate taken by the purchaser, and in such a case a purchaser could not shelter himself under the absence of notice. Z. Y.

(Q. 97.) COPYHOLDS—ADMISSION OF MORTGAGEE—FINES—STAMP DUTY.—The statement of "W. H." in your last number is not quite so explicit as it might be. For the purpose of an answer, I will assume that A., the owner of freeholds, and the admitted tenant in fee of copyholds, executed a mortgage of both properties to B. as to the copyholds, by the ordinary covenant to surrender, upon which no surrender was made, and consequently no admittance granted. A. then dies, and by his will (made after the 1st Jan. 1833), devises his real estate, including of course his copyholds, to trustees and their heirs, upon trust, say either (1) to permit his wife to receive the rents and profits for her life, with a direct devise over; or (2) to pay the rent and profits to the wife for life, then to sell, or for other purposes which would continue the trusteeship. On A.'s death, the trustees were not admitted, but the wife was, as tenant for life. B., the mortgagee, called in his money, and the wife (the tenant for life, and who for this purpose may be treated as an independent transferee), paid off the mortgage and took a transfer by assignment simpliciter. She now requires repayment, and asks C. to pay her off, and take a transfer of her security; but C. declines to do so without a surrender and admittance—i.e., without having the legal estate. In the one case (1) the trustees would take no estate under the will, but in the other (2) they would take the legal estate upon admittance under the will, in the first alternative (if the trust was to pay, &c.) for the life of the wife; and in the other (if the trust was for sale, &c.) until sale, or until the property vests absolutely in some other person: (Player v. Nicholson, 1 B. & C. 339; Watson v. Pearson, 2 Ex. 581; Blagrove v. Blagrove, 4 Ex. 550.) If the devise by A. was to the trustees to permit the wife to receive the rents for life, with a direct demise over, then the wife was properly admitted as tenant for life, the trustees taking no estate; but if the devise by A. was to the trustees to pay the rents to the wife for life, then for sale, or for other purposes contermining the trusteeship, then the trustees should have been admitted to the legal estate, as in that case the trustees, and not the cestui que trust, were the proper persons to be admitted the lord's tenants. The legal estate could only pass to the trustees of A's will by their admission under the devise if the trust was to pay the rents to the wife, and then to sell, &c.; in the other case (to permit the wife to receive the rents, with a direct devise over) the trustees took no estate, and the wife was properly admitted as stated, and therefore she has the legal estate. If there had been a surrender from A. to B., in pursuance of the covenant, although no admittance, the wife, as assignee of B., could claim admittance under the surrender made to him (B.) by the covenantor (A.), upon payment to the lord of such fine, &c., as he would have been entitled to by the admittance of B.: (Rev v. The Lord and Steward of the Manor of Hendon, 2 T. R. 484; 1 Seriv. Com. 292.) No notice whatever can be taken by the lord of a simple covenant to surrender, therefore B. took only an equity in the copyholds under his mortgage, which is all the wife (the transferee) has, as B's assignee: (Wharton's Conv. 233.) C., the proposed transferee from the wife, has a right to call for a surrender and admittance if he chooses; and if, as stated, the trustees should have been admitted, as having an estate under the will, they should concur with the wife in surrendering to C., who could then compel admission upon the payment of a single fine: (Steinh. Com. 611, 612); or, if the trustees took no estate, as stated, then the wife can surrender the legal estate, and assign her equitable interest under the transfer to her from B. (Garland v. Aston, 31 L. T. Rep. 207) to the new transferee C., who can compel admission on the surrender of the legal estate, in like manner, upon payment of a single fine: (Wharton, 231.) If A. and B. had both been living, and the transaction between them rested in covenant, and B. had assigned his interest by deed, and A. had surrendered to the assignee, such assignee might have compelled the lord by mandamus to admit him without a double fine: (Rev v. Hendon, 2 T. R. 484.) If the wife is properly admitted, her admission, it is apprehended, would enture to the remainderman, as, without a special custom for it, the remainderman is not liable, on the death of the tenant for life to pay a fine: (Wharton, 234.) The wife having been admitted as tenant for life under the will, she would of course, on that occasion, pay the fine, &c., under sect. 4, of the Wills Act 1837 attention is directed to sects. 3, 4, and 5 of that Act. If there are three trustees who should be admitted, as entitled to the legal estate under the will of the testator, they, being joint tenants, will have to pay but one fine, which will be calculated thus: Two years' value for the first life, half of that for the second, and half of that sum on the third. If the trustees be admitted, as above stated, so as to concur in the proposed new surrender, the costs, including the fines, may be tacked to the mortgage debt and interest. If the trustees are not necessary parties for the reasons stated, then the executors of A's will should concur, so that the costs, &c., may be so tacked: (Vide Re Ratcliffe, 37 L. T. Rep. N. S. 61; 22 Beav. 201.) W. H.'s object (as to getting the legal estate, saving double fines, tacking costs, &c.) may be practically gained by the admission of the trustees (if they took an estate under the will, and a surrender from them (with the concurrence of the wife as tenant for life and mortgagee) to the new mortgagee (C.), for a sum commensurate with the aggregate amount of the original mortgage debt, interest, fines, costs, &c., accompanied by a deed of covenants, embracing a grant of the freehold and assignment of the equity in the copyholders, and of the mortgage debt and securities. The new surrenderee (C.) need not be admitted unless and until he wants to enforce his security. O. W. H.'s object may be effected, in case the trustees took no estate under the will, by a surrender from the wife of the legal estate, and a similar deed of covenants, grant, and assignment. The covenant, grant, and assignment, in either case, being by one deed as an ordinary mortgage security, varied according to the circumstances. The covenant and assignment may be drawn so as to precede, or follow, the surrender, and both documents may be signed simultaneously; the preparation of them will present no practical difficulties to an experienced draftsman. The ad valorem mortgage stamp duty, or the aggregate amount to be secured by the new mortgage, should be impressed on the assignment and grant, and the duty payable on the surrender will be the amount of such ad valorem duty, if such last-mentioned duty does not exceed 20s., and if it amounts to or exceeds that sum, then 20s. I have no present access to the Reports mentioned, but rely upon the accuracy of my own M.S. note books.—

INTERNATIONAL AND MUNICIPAL LAW. THE OWNERSHIP AND OCCUPATION OF LAND.

Mr. Frederic Hill read a paper, which, after considering the principle on which the original appropriation of land would have been most advantageously based, passed on to consider the question of occupation, maintaining that the principle of the tenancy of land on the basis of the occupier having the benefit of all additional value he might give to his farm, and on the other hand of his being required to make good any diminution of value, was applicable not only to cases in which land might belong to the state, but to those of private ownership; subject, however, to the proviso that both landlords and tenants should be free to enter into any other agreement. The application of this principle Mr. Hill believed was most urgently needed in Ireland, and would do much toward solving the land difficulty. As regards tenant right the writer was opposed to its further continuance, but considered the State should, in the absence of private agreement of both parties, step in (on application in a reasonable period) and enforce the payment of an equitable sum by the landlord to every tenant entitled by custom to this right. Fixity of tenure was also disapproved of, as endless division and sub-division of land would be its probable result, and a body of tenants would thus be perpetuated who were not possessed of the special aptitudes and of the capital necessary for the efficient cultivation of the land. The system of small holdings was condemned on the ground that large farms would be more productive; but it was pointed out that it was just as possible in agriculture as in trade to introduce the systems of payment of wages varying in part with the rate of profit, of industrial partnerships, and of co-operation, so that every labourer might become a partner in the farm on which he worked.

Mr. W. D. Henderson (of Belfast), who followed with a paper devoted to the same subject, having special reference to Ireland, advocated freedom of contract, which, as regarded land, was shown to involve the very minimum of change; and after dwelling on various questions of detail, the writer discussed the claim for continuous occupancy, which was shown to arise from the facts that the tenant had made the improvements, and that owing to the smallness of the farms he must continue to do so. Continuous occupancy, it was urged, had sprung from the past history of the people, who had been accustomed till lately to a tribal system of ownership, which gave them joint rights, and which was in various ways recognised by the landlords. Passing from the question of tenant-right, which the writer considered to have its root in continuous occupancy, though comprising other elements besides, the various modes which had been suggested of settling the land question were then discussed at some length. The proposal, that the landlord should be compelled to buy out the rights of his tenants, either by a long lease or by cash, Mr. Henderson insisted would simply confirm the tenant in the idea that the land was his; while another plan, that the tenant should be compelled to buy out the landlord, took the form of fixity of tenure. He then proposed that the law should recognise both of the elements of tenant right. The unexhausted improvements could be estimated by the County Courts, subject to an appeal to the judges of assize. The compensation for breach of the implied contract that the tenant should continue to occupy might be estimated in two ways, either one-half of the value of the unexhausted improvements or three or four years' rent of the land, whichever was lowest. The question of waste lands was then touched on; and the paper concluded with a reference to land banks and their organisation, which in many of their details would resemble the system of building societies.

Mr. Serjeant Cox read a very luminous paper on the subject of land law reform as applied to England. His suggestions were, first, that in cases of intestacy, land should pass as personality that now passed under the Statute of Distributions. Having the power to give it otherwise by his will, if the owner omitted to make a will it may be reasonably presumed that he preferred the provision made by the law. His second suggestion referred to the difficulties, delays, and costs that attend the transfer of real property; he said that these were mainly the consequence of the power of charging land with other claims than those of the owner and occupier. The necessary result of this was, that land could not be transferred without an inquiry not only into ownership, but also into the charges that have been or might have been imposed on it; and as the limits of such power of charging are very wide, the investigation of title must be equally so. He further suggested that to facilitate such discharges, all incumbrances upon real estate not accompanied with possession should be registered, and that all unregistered charges should be void.

Mr. I. J. Murphy read a short paper on tenant-right as it exists in the province of Ulster, which was bought and sold like good will.

Mr. Hancock (from the North of Ireland) remarked he was glad to find a unanimity of opinion enunciated in the papers read—that the land law ought to be improved. He believed the value of tenant-right arose from the facility that existed for the transfer of land, which was done in the agent's office by a mere stroke of the pen, without the slightest investigation. He thought courts of compensation were the proper way to deal with the question in order to get into some mode of measuring the value of the land, and he suggested that the Irish Courts of Quarter Session, which corresponded to English County Courts, might be constituted courts of compensation. Adverting to the general policy whether land ought to be held in large quantities or small, Mr. Hancock considered the experiment might be fairly tried in the case of the Irish Church lands, which must be disposed of by the commissioners during the next ten years. (Hear.) There ought to be a more clear and definite understanding on all that belonged to land. Scotland was much in advance of England and Ireland.

The President adverted to the land question, and expressed his conviction that the landowners of England must make up their minds for radical changes in the land laws. In the social circumstances of this country it would be impossible in future times that owners should be allowed to exercise undisputed control over their land to the injury of their neighbours. He insisted on the expropriation of land when it was needed for public purposes, remarking that it would not much longer be tolerated that an owner of land should absolutely check the growth of, and as it were kill, communities because he did not choose, through pleasure, convenience, or caprice, to part with his land at any price. Referring to the obstacles in the way of a transfer of land, the president considered a 30 years' ownership of land ought to be sufficient to form an indefeasible title, and so make the disposal of it a matter of ease. (Hear, hear.) Coming to the Irish land question, the speaker urged that Ireland in this respect needed special legislation. The idea was deeply rooted in the Irish mind that continuous occupancy conferred a right of ownership, and he feared no legislation would ever eradicate that feeling. In conclusion, Mr. Hastings said he was strongly in favour of giving an absolute right of compensation for improvements, and also of a modified tenure of 7, 14, or 21 years, and at the end of that time a revision of the improvements that had been made, and compensation for them; and if the tenant was not willing to give the increased value, his tenancy must cease; but subject to that the tenant to be preserved in his holding.

INQUIRE.—The cases mentioned decide that when a person sued in a court of law for an alleged violation of private right, pleads that the act was done under the authority of an order of the House of Commons, the court is not precluded, on the ground of Parliamentary privilege, from considering whether the authority of the House constitutes in point of law a sufficient justification of the act, nor from giving judgment in favour of the plaintiff if it deems the justification insufficient.

THE Law and the Lawyers.

Mr. ANDREW RUTHERFORD CLARK, advocate, has been appointed Solicitor-General for Scotland, in the room of Mr. YOUNG, who has succeeded Mr. MONCREIFF as Lord-Advocate.

DURING the past legal year there has been considerable depression in legal business owing partly to the operation of recent legislation and partly to the commercial ruin which generally prevailed. We understand that matters are now looking up, and that an improvement may be looked for in the ensuing term.

A CORRESPONDENT has called our attention to a matter connected with solicitors' offices, which we think deserves attention. He writes: "I have for some time past been desirous of drawing your attention to the practice which very commonly exists of solicitors paying their managing clerks a commission or per centage upon all business conducted by them, the result of which is, that it tends to promote and increase litigation to an extent which is most injurious to the client, and detrimental to the solicitor's reputation. The fact has for years past been known to me, but very recently it has come under my notice, when I was seeking for a managing clerk. Almost every one I have seen has stipulated, in addition to a salary, that he should receive a per centage upon all business passing through his hands. Upon my objecting to this principle of remuneration, they have declined further negotiation, stating that it has now become almost universally the practice, adding at the same time that I would find that this mode of remuneration was both profitable and advantageous to both parties. I am perfectly satisfied that it is, but at the same time highly objectionable to the client, and most unprofessional as well as illegal." We can thoroughly well understand the evils which must result from this practice. All that we can do is to ventilate the matter in this form, for it is so clearly within the control of the Profession, and all its features are so well known, that unless solicitors themselves are disposed to do away with it for the benefit of their clients, nothing that could be advanced in argument would have any effect.

THE colonial press is discussing the possible introduction of the English practice of restraining the comments of the press during the progress of a suit. The Toronto Evening Globe remarks that "no attempt to put this obnoxious principle in force has been made in Canada, but a contemporary law journal threatens that the court here will be shortly called upon to exercise it. An attempt to introduce this procedure into Ontario would be most ill-advised, and we trust that our Judges are far too enlightened to think of it. It would most assuredly call forth the condemnation of the country, and legislation which would curb the judicial powers. Every interest of justice is sufficiently protected in general by the character of the bench and press, and if anything further is wanted a trial by jury should suffice." It is somewhat remarkable that the courts of the Vice-Chancellors have been to the largest extent the scenes of applications to commit newspapers for contempt. Nothing could be more absurd than to suppose that a Vice-Chancellor would be influenced by newspaper criticism. Of course it is the principle which is cherished, and the question is whether it should be maintained, and, if so, to what extent it should be carried.

DOUBLE FUNCTIONS OF SOLICITORS.

SOLICITORS are as frequently, by necessity as by interest, called upon to discharge what we have called double functions. They may be required to act as agents for a proprietor amongst whose creditors or tenants are some of their own clients; and upon such occasions it would appear to be highly necessary that the discharge of the several functions should be kept as far as possible distinct.

The case of Bridges v. Garrett, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 143, is the one which we have in view as illustrating this subject. It was a case in which Mr. Justice Byles differed from the rest of the court on the point whether a cheque given by a surrenderee to a deputy steward of a manor for fees payable on admittance and the charges of the deputy steward, who was the surrenderee's own solicitor, was a good payment to the lord. The question arose because the cheque was crossed with the names of the deputy steward's bankers, and the deputy steward having overdrawn his account, they refused to pay him the amount of the cheque. A Mr. Mills was the steward of a certain lord of the manor. Garrett, the defendant, desired to be admitted to a copyhold. Mr. Mills authorised Mr. Craig, who was Garrett's solicitor, to take the admittance in these terms: "I beg to acknowledge receipt of this surrender and draft admittance approved by you, and return your copy surrender. You can take the admission as deputy steward at once, if you please." This was done, and Craig received a cheque for 87l. 10s. 8d.; the fine being 78l. 15s., steward's fees 4l. 11s. 8d., and Craig's costs 4l. 4s. Craig, being in difficulties, applied to Mills for time to pay over the amount of the fine and steward's fees, but Mills wrote, "I cannot recognise his subsequent payment to you at all, or acquiesce in any delay. Mr. Garrett must pay his fine and fees to me, and must recover from you the money he appears to have paid to you for the purpose."

The question whether the steward of a manor has power to appoint a deputy to take a fine was argued but not decided. The court, however, agreed that Craig had authority to take the admittance. But our principal object now is to see how the double functions of the deputy steward interfered with his proper discharge of either, and in this respect we find the majority of the court held that if Craig had authority to take the fine, he was bound to take it in cash, and therefore by taking a cheque, which included his own charges, he defeated the payment by his client. "The proper conclusion to be drawn from all the facts," said Chief Justice Bovill, agreeing with Mr. Justice M. Smith, "we think, is that Craig received the cheque as Garrett's solicitor, and not as agent for Mills or the lord, and that he was the agent of Garrett to hand over a portion of the amount when received, to Mills, and until the cheque was paid, or indeed at any time whilst the money remained in the hands of Craig, we think it would have been competent for Garrett to have countermanded the authority to hand over the amount to Mills."

Now, Mr. Justice Byles differed, as we have stated, from the rest of the court, notwithstanding it was he who said, in Sweeting v. Pearce, 7 C. B., N. S., 485, that the general rule of law is, that an authority to an agent to receive money implies that he is to receive it in cash. "If," he said, giving the reason of the rule, "the agent receives the money in cash, the probability is that he will hand it over to the principal. But if he is allowed to receive it by a settlement of accounts between himself and the debtor, he might not be able to pay it over. At all events it would very much diminish the chance of the principal ever receiving it; and upon that principle it has been held that the agent, as a general rule, cannot receive payment in anything else but cash. Unless, therefore, there is some usage to control it, payment to the agent must be made in money." But his ground for deciding in favour of the validity of the payment as between the surrenderee and the lord was, that the receipt of the money by the deputy steward was a receipt by the steward and that such made by a receipt, although cheque including other items, created a debt as between the lord and the steward. And the learned Judge put the case that the steward himself had taken the admittance and received the fines, he himself acting as the surrenderee's attorney. "And suppose," he adds, "the money stopped in the hands of the steward's bankers, or the steward was otherwise unable to pay the lord, would not that have been a good payment as between the lord and the surrenderee, although the steward sustained the double character of surrenderee's attorney and of steward when he received the money? I think it would have been a good payment; but it would of course have been no payment as between the lord and the steward. The lord would have had his remedy against the steward as in the case now before us he has his remedy both against the steward and the deputy steward."

One word explains the apparent conflict in the different judgments of Mr. Justice Byles on the question of the mode of payment. The cheque in the present case, he observed, was a good cheque, duly paid on presentment, and it was, he said, as if the deputy steward, after receiving the cheque, had sent it to be cashed by a clerk or servant of his own, who received the money and appropriated the payment to a debt of his own due to him from his master. The crossing of the cheque, which made it payable through Craig's bankers, was done at Craig's request, and he held that not to alter the effect of the payment by Garrett. The money actually came to the hands of Craig's bankers, who were his agents for the purpose of receiving it. Craig was not bound to send the identical cheque which he received on to the steward, and a division of the gross amount received would in any event have been necessary. Accordingly the learned Judge held that the payment was good as between the surrenderee and the lord.

The question of payment by cheque to a person who is agent of both parties is a very important one, and particularly so in the case of solicitors who would generally include their own charges in the amount to be paid. A case somewhat in point is that of Williams and others v. Evans, 35 L. J. 111, Q. B., in which an auctioneer bound by the conditions to receive payment only in cash took a bill for part of a purchase, but before it came to maturity the vendor gave the purchaser notice not to pay any more money to the auctioneer. The bill, however, was paid at maturity, the auctioneer failed to pay over the proceeds to the vendor, who sued the purchaser, and he was held entitled to recover. But Mr. Justice Blackburn remarked "That if the bill had matured before the authority to the auctioneer to receive payment had been revoked, I think then the payment by the bill would have been equivalent to money handed to the auctioneer." And he took occasion to say of the rule as to payment in cash, "We are not now concerned as to whether this is a good rule, but there is authority for it, and that is sufficient for this case." Mr. Justice Mellor indeed would seem to qualify the effect of the rule by the mode in which he states it, for he says, "The general rule is that an agent to receive payment must not receive it so as to tie up the right of his principal to immediate payment." Story, in his work on Agency, sect. 181, says that circumstances may vary the rule, and he puts the case of an agent being the creditor of the principal, and being authorised to deduct the sum due to himself; "it will be sufficient," he says, "for the agent to receive the balance in cash which will remain due to the principal after deducting the sum due to himself." And, pari ratione, it would seem that if a debt due from the debtor to the agent be included in a gross amount which covers the sum due to the principal the payment of the gross sum to the agent in a manner to enable him to separate the debts, and hand the balance in cash over to the principal ought to be good.

The abrogation of the rule would be of use, though of no very great use, to solicitors, who, we are glad to say, are ordinarily very careful to transfer payments made to them to the right pocket. It would be of use in giving confidence to clients in that convenient mode of payment, payment by cheque.

LAND LAW REFORM.

MR. BRIGHT'S scheme for Land Law Reform in Ireland has been much canvassed, very much misrepresented and assailed with more real or assumed indignation than many of its successors. Carefully read, no reason will be found for the wrath that it evoked. It may be an impracticable plan; there may be grounds of state policy for objecting to it; but it is a thoroughly honest scheme. There is no trace in it of that spirit which may be termed "felonious;" that cool repudiation of the rights of property, and that desire for wholesale confiscation, which underlies the demands of the agitators of the time. But Mr. BRIGHT shall speak for himself, and his proposal was fully described in a speech delivered at Dublin in Nov. 1866, from which we extract the following passage:

I propose to introduce a system which would gradually, no doubt rapidly and easily, without injuring anybody, make many thousands who are now tenant farmers, without lease and security, the owners of their farms in this island. This is my plan, and I want to restate it with a little further explanation, in order that these gentlemen to whom I have referred may not repeat the very untrue, and I may say dishonourable, comments which they have made upon me. There are many large estates in Ireland which belong to rich families in England—families not only of the highest rank, but of the highest character—because I will venture to say there are not to be found amongst the English nobility families of more perfect honourableness and worth than some of those to whom my plan would be offered; and, therefore, I am not speaking against the aristocracy, against those families, or against property, or against anybody, or against anything that is good. I say, that if Parliament were to appoint a commission, and give it, say, at first, up to the amount of five millions sterling, the power to negotiate or treat with those great families in England who have great estates in Ireland, it is probable that some of those great estates might be bought at a not very unreasonable price. I am of opinion that it would be the cheapest money that the Imperial Parliament ever expended, even though it became possessed of those estates at a price considerably above the market price. But I propose it should be worked in this way. I will take a case, I will assume that this commission has got a considerable estate into its possession, bought from some present owner of it. I will take one farm, which I will assume to be worth 1000*l.*, for which the present tenant is paying a rent of 50*l.* a year. He has no lease. He has no security. He makes almost no permanent improvement of any kind; and he is not quite sure whether, when he has saved a little more money, he will not take his family off to the United States. Now we will assume ourselves, if you like, to be that commission, and that we have before us the farmer who is the tenant on that particular farm, for which he pays 50*l.* a year, without lease or security, and which I assume to be worth 1000*l.* The Government, I believe, lends money to Irish landowners for drainage purposes at about $\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. per annum. Suppose the Government were to go to this farmer and say, "You would not have any objection to become possessed of this farm?" "No, not the slightest," he might say, "But how is that to be done?" In this way; tell the farmer—you may pay 50*l.* a year, that is, 5 per cent. on 1000*l.*; the Government can afford to do these transactions for $\frac{3}{4}$ per cent.; if you will pay 60*l.* a year for a given number of years, which any of the actuaries of the insurance offices, or any good arithmetician may soon calculate—if you will pay 60*l.* for your rent instead of 50*l.*, it may be fifteen or twenty years, or more—at the end of that time the farm will be yours without any further payment. I want you to understand how this is. If the farmer paid 10*l.* a year more towards buying his farm, the fact is, that the 1000*l.* the Government would pay for the farm would not cost the Government more than 35*l.*, and therefore the difference between 35*l.* and 60*l.* being 25*l.* would be the sum which that farmer in his rent would be paying to the commission, that is the Government, for the redemption of his farm. Thus, at the end of a very few years the farmer would possess his own farm, having a perfect security. All the time nobody could turn him out if he paid his rent, and nobody could touch him for any improvement he made on his land. The next morning after he made that agreement, he would speak to his wife and to his big boy, who had perhaps been idling about for a long time, and there would not be a stone on the land that would not be removed, not a weed that he would not pull up, not a particle of manure that he would not save; there would not be anything that he would not do with a zeal and an enthusiasm which he had never known before to cultivate that farm; and by the time the few years had run on when the farm should become his without any further purchase, he would have turned a dilapidated, miserable little farm into a garden for himself and family. Now, this statement may be commented on by some of the newspapers. You will understand that I do not propose a forced purchase, or confiscation. I would undertake even to give—if I were the Government—to everyone of those landlords 20 per cent. more for his estate than it will fetch in any market in London or in Dublin, and I say that to do this would produce a marvellous change in the sentiments of the people and in the condition of agriculture in Ireland.

Certainly it seems to us that nothing can be more just, temperate, and unobjectionable than the propositions here set forth. A voluntary sale by landowners, a voluntary purchase by tenants:—What is there in this that even savours of wrong to any person of any class? It is nothing more than the application on a large scale of the principle of the benefit building societies—that is to say, a payment of the purchase-money by instalments so small as to be an almost imperceptible addition to what would otherwise be paid as rent.

The real objection to Mr. BRIGHT'S land scheme is economical. The State would pay more and receive less than a private speculator, and would be certain to make a bad bargain. As soon as it was determined that the Government should go into the land market, the price of land would assuredly rise, and all kinds of tricks would be devised to give a temporary artificial value to the estates the public were expected to buy. When bought, the State must hold them as landlord, until the tenants agree to purchase, and, dealing with public property, they, in their turn, would expect to make a better bargain than with private dealers, and would stand out for low prices. In the mean while, the State must play the part of landlord, and experience has proved that of all landlords the State is the worst. But the greatest danger is the last. The tenants who buy would not continue to pay their monthly contributions. Having obtained by agitation the transfer of the land to themselves, they would never be content to pay rent and purchase-money for thirty years. They would agitate to rid themselves of that burden more actively than they agitated for the possession, and the certain end would be that, in the strife of political parties for power, to win the Irish vote some faction would consent to sacrifice the residue, and all the taxpayers of the United Kingdom would be robbed for the sole benefit of the Irish. These are substantial objections to Mr. BRIGHT'S scheme, which must have presented themselves to his own sagacious mind, and to which we have looked anxiously for his answer. He is now the most influential man in the Cabinet pledged to a measure for the settlement of the land law question in Ireland, and it will be interesting to see if he still persists in the plan upon which he had evidently bestowed much thought, and which he did not produce without careful consideration. Should it form a part of the Government Bill, as we anticipate, we trust he will be prepared to answer the grave objections stated above.

Very different from Mr. BRIGHT'S honest scheme is one put forth by a very much smaller man, to wit, Professor ROGERS, of University College. This is done in the form of a letter to Sir JOHN GRAY, and as it affects to be practical, and a solution of the problem that is perplexing the brain of every British statesman at this moment, it is entitled to notice, if only to clear the ground for future discussion.

Mr. ROGERS proposes the "turning of the non-occupying landlord into the recipient of a fixed rentcharge, payable in money, but calculated to save changes in the value of money, in produce." This he would do without making compensation. There is no mistake about it—it is a scheme of gigantic robbery. It is taking from one man to give to another man. He contends that it would not be unjust, because the landowner does nothing for the land, and, therefore, having placed himself in the position of a mere recipient of rent, he cannot fairly complain if his rent be given to him and nothing more. But Mr. ROGERS forgets that the owner does, in fact, possess an interest having a money value beyond the rent received by him for the time being, and that it would be an act of spoliation to take from him this property—at least without full compensation. True that the advocates of this new phase of plunder point to the Irish Church Act as a precedent, and say that, if the Legislature could justly confiscate the property of the Church for the public good, it might, with equal justice, confiscate the property of the landowners. But the example does not illustrate the argument; for the property of the Church was confiscated because it was held to be public property, and, moreover, even in that measure of confiscation private rights were studiously respected. "I cannot see," says the Professor, "that the prospective rights of landowners are more sacred than the prospective rights of lay impropiators." He goes further. The owner is to have no control over his own land even when unoccupied. "Occupation and ownership," he says, "must go together." "Unless the landowner occupies the land himself, he must be bound to re-let at the old valuation."

And it having been objected to this scheme for robbing the landowners that it would drive them from Ireland, he proposes to mulct them further by imposing on absentee proprietors of rentcharges a treble income-tax!

These are the deliberate propositions of a Professor of some repute, who boasts himself a lover of liberty, and a political economist!

Such a scheme does not need formal refutation; it answers itself. But it is noteworthy as indicating the ultimate aims of the school of "advanced Liberals" to which Mr. ROGERS belongs. He speaks the opinions, not of himself alone, but of the Land Tenure League, of which he is one of the most energetic and able members. What he demands for Ireland, they demand for England. The Property Protection League will not come into existence an hour too soon, if it is to build up a barrier against the revolution that has been thus inaugurated.

RESULTS OF THE REFORM ACT.

During the controversy that preceded the passing of Mr. DISRAELI'S Reform Act, we published an elaborate table, showing what would be the probable operation of household suffrage in the extension of the constituencies. From this it appeared that they would be doubled in number. The actual result has confirmed those anticipations. A Parliamentary paper has just issued, giving a comparative statement of the number of electors in each county and borough before and since the Reform Act. For the following totals we are indebted to Mr. DUDLEY BAXTER. In the boroughs, the electors before the Reform Act were 514,026; now they are 1,220,715, being an increase of 706,639. Remembering that these numbers include lodgers, the new boroughs and the extended boundaries of the old boroughs, the estimate was singularly correct.

In the counties, the constituencies have increased from 542,633 to 791,916, being about 43 per cent.

There has been an addition of 137 per cent. to the borough constituencies.

Together the increase has been from about one million to two millions; strictly 90½ per cent.

BRIBERY AND CORRUPTION.

THE revelations of the Election Commissions produce a periodical display of upturned whites of the eyes and hypocritical exclamations of "Who would have thought it?" mingled with cries of "Shame!" Bridgewater is just now the "horrible example" exhibited by the sleek political Pharisee, who tries to prove his own purity by denouncing the venality that has been unluckily traced to his neighbour.

Bridgewater is very bad, but it is not worse than many other boroughs. It was always corrupt, but its corruption differs only in degree from that of other constituencies. It is not the price asked or paid for a vote, but the fact of the bargain and sale of a vote that constitutes the offence, legally and morally. To buy or sell a vote for a shilling is in every respect as bad as if 20*l.* were given and taken. The degree of corruption in any constituency is to be measured by the number who sell, or are willing to sell, their votes for something given or expected as the price, and not by the magnitude of the sum demanded or paid. Indeed, the small bribe is worse than the great one, inasmuch as the barter of a public duty for a trifling temptation proves the entire disregard of a virtue that could be so cheaply parted with.

Much moralising has been indulged in by newspaper critics upon the range of corruption in Bridgewater—the class of men who took bribes including even a dissenting minister—and the generally lax tone of the community in relation to bribery, nobody being thought the worse of by his townsmen for either accepting or giving a bribe. But are not these critics aware that in all circles of society everywhere political corruption is looked upon as a very pardonable sin. It is frowned at and denounced in public.

Every man pretends to hold it in the utmost abhorrence, and does greatly abhor it—when practised by the opposing party against his own party. But he is silent, if not assenting and applauding, when it is used to promote the success of his own party. In his secret mind, the wrong is not in the thing itself, but accordingly as it is employed for or against him. Are there ten men in any borough in the United Kingdom who would prefer that their party should be beaten rather than that a bribe should be given? Is there one man who would put his veto upon the ground of morality, against buying half-a-dozen votes at 10*l.* a-piece, if that purchase would save the election? The plain truth is, that in spite of all that is spoken and written about it, all the affectations of horror at the crime, and all the hypocritical pretences of purity, there is not one who really feels that buying the vote of a man, who does not care how he gives it, and who therefore is not induced thereby to vote against his conscience, is a crime, like murder or robbery. Bribes are given and taken without the same sense of having committed a moral offence that attends the robbery of a till or the cutting of a throat. If bribery were not prohibited by law, would any person really feel his conscience grievously pained by the act of buying the vote of a man who cares not how he gives it? Or would that man be naturally ashamed to sell his vote to A., the choice being between A. and B., whom he equally regards, and between whom there is, in truth, but small preference for him? If, then, but for the legal prohibition, there would be little or no moral reprobation attending the process, it follows that bribery is a law-made crime, and not a crime in itself, or at least that society has not learned to look upon it as a crime. Now it is a characteristic of all law-made offences that, instead of siding with the law and helping to enforce it, everybody tries to defeat it, and so that he does not bring himself within the letter of the law, a man does not feel at all conscience stricken for having evaded such a law. As a matter of fact, does any human being feel in his own mind that he has done a very wicked thing when he has bought a venal vote? He has done wrong in breaking a law of the land—he must admit so much—but is he conscious that he has sinned morally in the act of giving a poor man a sovereign for a vote which that man, having no political leanings of his own, and being quite careless how he disposes of it, would as readily give to one candidate as to another?

If bribery were really felt to be a crime, would it not have been suppressed long ago by the voluntary action of the community? There is an easy method of stopping it. Let all the honest men in the borough, without distinction of party, agree together not to vote for any candidate by whom, or on whose behalf, bribery is practised. Let them exact a distinct and unequivocal pledge to this effect. Let the honest men of each party destroy the market of the venal by making a serious contest impossible. Let the Conservatives vote for the Liberal as well as for their own man, and let the Liberals do the like, and they will return their men against any opposition that could be brought into the field by those who trade in electioneering. This method of extirpating bribery would be certainly successful. But it is not adopted, as it would be if bribery were really looked upon as a crime. Even they who talk loudest about purity of election will not sacrifice to it a particle of their partisanship, by dividing the representation. They prefer a party triumph to the suppression of what they pretend to hold to be a great crime!

And wherefore is it that we witness everywhere this opposition of practice to profession? Why do not men in their hearts (as shown by their conduct) believe that it is a great sin to give a piece of gold to a poor man for a vote to which he attaches no political value, because he knows little and cares less about politics? The reason is plain. Everybody is conscious that bribery is not limited to gold, and that the poor are not the only persons bribed and bribable. Bribery is not the giving of cash or beer only; it is the obtaining of a vote by any other than conscientious preference of the candidate voted for. As a matter of fact, does not bribery in some form prevail in every class? Do not ministers buy votes by giving places? Do not lawyers attach themselves to this or that party with an eye to the good things to be got from it? Are not nobles bought by titles and blue ribands? Do not the middle classes count upon "berths" for their children? Are not the electioneering services of a great landowner, or large employer, or of a big man in a borough, bought by baronetries and knighthoods? Notwithstanding the affected horror with which journalists, themselves looking out for something good, write of the venality of the poor man who sells his vote for half a sovereign, is he, in very truth, in the slightest degree worse than his betters whose price is higher, and who expect, not money, but money's worth? Is it seriously imagined that the labourer to whom a sovereign is food for hungry bellies and clothes for naked backs, when he permits it to turn the scale of his choice between SMITH and JONES (for each of whom he has an equal respect, and the preference of either of whom is wholly immaterial to him), does not reconcile to his own mind the substantial benefit he has received by thinking how Mr. BROWN the grocer, got his son into a good place by voting Blue, how Sir JOHN JAMES was made a baronet because he carried the election for the Buffs, and how still greater men have changed their principles for the sake of place and power?

THE LIMITS OF LIBEL.

FOR some reason or other we are daily becoming more tender of our reputations and more anxious to avenge by proceedings at law any attack upon them. And we confess we watch with some interest actions of this nature in order to see to what limit the Judges will follow a suitor in his efforts to obtain redress. The question of libel or no libel is one of very great importance. It is now left to the jury, except in cases which are so obviously for the Judge that he can stop the case.

First, then, we have to look to the point where a Judge's functions end, and those of the jury begin. Chief Baron Kelly said in a case which we reported last week (Cox v. Lee, Reports, p. 180, Ex.), "In my opinion a Judge is only justified in withdrawing the question of libel or no libel from the consideration of the jury in cases where he is clearly of opinion that the matter complained of is not a libel, and that if the jury were to find it a libel, their verdict would be set aside by the court above. That is simply saying that if a Judge thinks that an alleged libel is not a libel he should withhold the question from the jury. In the famous case of Fray v. Fray, 17 C. B., N. S., 602, Chief Justice Erle said that the court could not take upon itself to say that under no circumstances could the letter complained of be libellous. But we think it may be laid down that in all cases, except the most glaring, and they are very rare, it is for the judge to do, as stated by Baron Parke in Parmeter v. Coupland, 6 M. & W., at p. 108, namely, first to give a legal definition of the offence, and then to leave it to the jury to say whether the facts necessary to constitute that offence are proved to their satisfaction. It is quite clear that the Judge ought not to state whether an alleged libel is a libel, for Baron Alderson, in the above case, said "I think that if he were to take upon himself to say that it was a libel, he would be wrong in doing so." This supports us in the other proposition that it must be a very extreme case in which a Judge can say that a publication is not a libel. And we may observe that Baron Cleasby in Cox v. Lee, said distinctly, "I think that a Judge who, in an action for libel, should tell the jury distinctly, one way or the other, either that he had or that he had not a cause of action, would be wrong." At the utmost the court, as observed by Baron Alderson in the argument, is to consider whether in any reasonable sense the words may be innocent.

Proceeding then, to the evidence which the cases give us to show the limits of libel, of course we see that any imputation of corrupt motives is libellous, whether the capacity of the person libelled be public or private: (Parmeter v. Coupland.) That which may tend to lower the plaintiff in the estimation of others cannot be withheld from a jury: (Fray v. Fray, Chief Justice Erle in argument.) It is not necessary that there should be any damage to the plaintiff by reason of the libel: (Ibid.) We conceive that we get to the limits of libel when we reach allegations that a person is "unworthy," or "ungrateful," or "litigious." We find the first expression condemned in Hoare v. Silverlock, 12 Ad. & Ell. N. S. 624, following, it is to be assumed, the case of Lord Townshend v. Hughes, 2 Mod. 150, where the words were, "He is an unworthy man, and acts against law and reason." Mr. Justice Scroggs, in the latter case, said, "to say 'he is an unworthy man,' is so much as to say 'he is a vicious person,' and is the same as to call him a corrupt man." It was objected in Hoare v. Silverlock, that nothing was imputed but a want of gratitude, but Chief Justice Denman said: "Even want of gratitude is a serious imputation." And there also, words which "inferred misconduct," to use the expression of Mr. Justice Patteson, were considered unjustifiable.

Now, to come to the most recent case, which is even nearer the limit than Townsend v. Hughes and Hoare v. Silverlock. In Cox v. Lee, the defendant printed a speech of Mr. Frewen, in which he spoke of a statement made by Mr. Cox, and said, "Such a statement was most ungrateful on the part of Mr. Cox, who would never have been proprietor of that journal but for the help he (Mr. Frewen) had given. He was in a great strait, and asked him (the speaker) to assist him. He would certainly say that the debt had been most honourably repaid, and he would never have mentioned it but for such ungrateful conduct on the part of Mr. Cox."

It must be mentioned that Mr. Cox owned a county journal, and Mr. Frewen was a candidate for the county, and in the speech made by the latter, he stated why he thought Mr. Cox ungrateful, namely, for having borrowed money of him to start a journal and then used it as an organ against him. The Lord Chief Baron, in considering the verdict of the jury in favour of the plaintiff, passed by the consideration of the charge of ingratitude, holding that the plaintiff had been damaged by the reference to his pecuniary capacity. But Baron Bramwell supported the verdict expressly on the ground that a charge of ingratitude had been made and not justified. Whilst upon this case we must notice what we venture to think singular ruling on the part of Chief Baron Kelly. Mr. Frewen stated that he had lent Mr. Cox money, "which had been honourably repaid," but that, notwithstanding, he thought him guilty of ingratitude. Chief Baron Kelly said: "Passing by the bearing of the statement itself on the charge of ingratitude, and whether or not it would induce the hearers of it to conclude that a man who had so acted was truly guilty of ingratitude, surely to say of a man of business in independent circumstances, that before he could purchase the property now owned by him, he was, being without the necessary means himself, obliged to borrow money requisite for the purchase of a third person, is a statement which reflects on the man thus spoken of in a way likely to be not only most painful to his feelings, but injurious and disparaging to his credit and commercial reputation amongst his fellows and neighbours, and in the county generally."

We may be wrong in our inference, but this would seem to mean that the plaintiff was entitled to the verdict, apart from the question of ingratitude, purely on the ground that some damage had been sustained by the statement of a fact. We do not see how the charge of ingratitude, and the statement of the fact of the loan could be dissociated. The point, however, remains that a charge of ingratitude, for which there was some primæ facie ground, but which surrounding circumstances showed did not exist, was held libellous.

The decisions on this subject have now, we conceive, gone far enough. The limit is tolerably well defined, but it is difficult to say what words under particular circumstances may not give ground for an action.

FORENSIC MONOPOLY.

THE prosecutor in the case of Overend and Gurney, the redoubtable Dr. THOM, has issued a pamphlet in which he declares that if he cannot obtain funds to secure counsel, he will himself boldly ventilate the question of his right to be heard in his own cause in opposition to judicial tyranny and forensic monopoly. We are not quite sure what the learned pamphleteer means by judicial tyranny. Is it tyranny on the part of a Judge to make rules for the conduct of business in his court? There is at present a very strong outcry against the law's delay, but what would it become if the Superior Courts were open to every private suitor who might choose to conduct his own cause? Everyone who has heard a suitor addressing the court has seen hours of valuable public time absolutely wasted, and at such times the Judges, so far from being tyrannical, exercise a degree of patience which is truly extraordinary. No counsel could peril his reputation by persistently wearying the court with the same application in different forms, as private suitors do almost daily during term; and, indeed, the judicial tyranny complained of is really kindness in disguise whenever it restrains an individual from being his own advocate.

Secondly as to forensic monopoly. With all respect for Dr. THOM, we consider that it is ridiculous to speak of the right of the Bar to sole audience in the Superior Courts as a monopoly. It is no more a monopoly than the practice of sworn brokers is a monopoly. It is a privilege purchased at very great expense both in point of labour and money, and before it is overridden some very great public advantage ought to be shown as likely to be attained. On this point we expect that Dr. THOM will find "judicial tyranny" will prove too strong for him.

MUNICIPAL AND PARLIAMENTARY ELECTIONS.

NO. V.

WE have been speaking hitherto almost entirely of that species of intimidation which is practised upon individual voters, and we have now to consider the effect of rioting and organised, extensive intimidation. This form of undue influence appeared to a very small extent in England during the last election, the only case in which it was brought forward, if our memory serves us, being the borough of Stafford case, which we report this week. There a vigilance committee was formed by an agent of one of the members, and the agent himself exhorted a body of people to prevent voters on the other side from voting. This they did, and the return was invalidated, but the judge did not report that the practice had extensively prevailed. It is from Ireland, of course, that we get that extensive prevalence of intimidation by means of mob riot.

But whatever be the nature of the intimidation it must necessarily, to be illegal from a Parliamentary point of view, affect the freedom of election. In the old Roxburgh case before a committee, there were riots beyond doubt, this being the report: "That it appears to this committee that at the last election for the county of Roxburgh, riotous and tumultuous proceedings took place, in consequence of which, according to the evidence produced before this committee, prosecutions were instituted in the Justiciary Court of Scotland, upon which prosecutions certain of the offenders were convicted. That the committee are of opinion that the riots were not of such a nature, nor of so long duration, as to prevent the votes of the electors of the same county of Roxburgh being taken in the matter of such election." But the committee were not unanimous, the adjournment and premature close of the poll at one place being considered by three members out of the nine, a ground for avoiding the return. That this ground would have amply satisfied the mind of a judge there cannot be the least doubt. A very important question arises here, and that is, whether the very fact of a riot existing ought not to render an election invalid. In the Stafford borough petition Mr. Justice Blackburn took the view that general intimidation not traceable to the member, must be considered in connection with the nature of the majority obtained, that where a majority is small it may have effect, and that where it is large it may not. Mr. Justice Keogh, in the Drogheda petition, discussed this matter very fully, it being contended by both the counsel for the sitting member, that freedom of election is secured provided that the majority of a constituency are shown to have had the power of recording their votes. This his Lordship denied altogether, holding that where intimidation by riot is proved, the public interest has to be looked to over and above the interest of the parties to the petition. He observed (Printed Judgments, Part II., p. 528), "The liberties of the people of this country are involved in the freedom of election; and I say that the humblest individual, the poorest unit in the whole of the constituency of the county of the town of Drogheda, has as good a right freely, without fear, without favour, without intimidation of any kind or description, to come into this court house upon the day of the election, as the richest man upon the register, and as good a right as the great majority of the constituency." "Take it," he continued, "that a candidate has, by the most legitimate means, without any injury whatsoever being inflicted upon anyone, without any coercion, without any bribery or treating, obtained the votes of nine-tenths of the constituency in his favour, yet it is of vital importance to the public weal that the remaining tenth should be able to record their votes and to express their opinions." There is a great deal more than may at first sight appear in this argument, as we shall see if we proceed to look further into the judgment. "If," said Mr. Justice Keogh, "the majority are not only to be able to choose their representatives, but having the strong arm with them are to drive from the very hustings the minority, who are seeking, though unavailingly, to make their opinions triumphant . . . If they are to drive by terror and with ignominy, with scorn and with denunciation, the minority from the poll, what becomes of freedom in this country?"

The principle underlying the law for preventing undue influence is that every man shall be free to record his vote, and if every person, who would vote at an election does not vote by reason of the terrorism which exists, it is difficult to see upon what ground an election is to be upheld simply because the votes of a majority have been recorded. In the Stafford borough petition, Mr. Justice Blackburn intimated his inclination to take a middle course, and judge according to the extent of the majority, so as to ascertain whether, putting the degree of intimidation against the majority, the probabilities would be in favour of the conclusion that the intimidation materially affected the election. Now, evidence of intimidation is never very satisfactory in its nature. As remarked by Mr. Justice Keogh (p. 334), in bribery and treating you have something to lay your hands upon—you have money, you have food, you have drink; but, he asks, who is there that will venture to gauge the influences of intimidation? who will say how far that reaches, who will be able to tell what the effect of intimidation is upon the human mind? His Lordship took an illustration not uncommon in Ireland. "Supposing," he said, "that a minister of religion were to say to an individual voter, 'If you do not vote in a particular way, and if anything should happen to you between this time and the time at which you should reach your dwelling-house, your immortal soul, your salvation, will be perilled,' who is to say what would be the extent of the influence of that observation, proceeding from the mouth of a minister of religion, upon a whole congregation?" And clearly in such case the argument, as to numbers falls to the ground. A scrutiny would be valueless, and therefore we must conclude that in all cases of the existence of mob riot or spiritual intimidation an election should be looked at strictly. We have nothing analogous to spiritual intimidation in England; the landlord influence is traceable, and limited to his tenants. Our element of undue influence upon the body of electors is by the physical violence of a mob.

And as regards a mob, how is it to be proved to what extent it affects the election? The allegation of riot has failed recently at Nottingham, because it was not proved that any voter on his way to the poll was hindered or prevented. But a mob cannot exist without producing its effect. It is impossible to say how many voters are kept at home, and it is equally impossible to say how many more are induced to vote on the side which is favoured by the mob. However it is not for us to quarrel with the law, as it has regulated this matter of rioting, and we will proceed to consider what limit has been fixed to spiritual influence in Ireland.

It was put forward as a proposition in the Galway Town petition, that the exercise of spiritual influence in any shape would void the election. This Mr. Justice Keogh denied altogether (printed judgments, Part II., p. 345). He said that landlord influence and spiritual influence may both be exercised, but they must be exercised "legitimately." There is a remarkable decision of the House of Commons at this point in the Mayo case. The committee found "that there was a great abuse of spiritual influence on the part of a great body of the Roman Catholic priesthood during the election," and yet they declared the members to have been duly elected. Of course Mr. Justice Keogh remarked that had he come to the former conclusion he should also have arrived at the conclusion that the representatives were not duly elected. It is more difficult to define what is legitimate, and what is not legitimate spiritual influence. In the Galway case, the Judge said that if it had been proved in a single case that the clergy had refused the rites of the church in order to influence votes, he would, without hesitation, have voided the election. But he said (p. 349), "I recognise the full right of the Roman Catholic clergy to address their congregations; to advise them to canvass the merits of their candidates; to tell them that one man is for the country, and that another man is against the country; and to tell them that this man is in favour of a church establishment, which they think is more for the benefit of the people to have disestablished; to tell them that another man, though a Roman Catholic in profession, is yet playing the game of another candidate who is against the interest, in that respect, of the Roman Catholic population; nay, more, I would not hold a very hard and fast line as to language which, in excited time, might be used by Roman Catholic ecclesiastics, or by civilians." There was but one piece of evidence which his Lordship thought showed a trespass upon the line separating legitimate from non-legitimate influence, namely, that of a man who stated that a clergyman had said, that if anyone supported a particular candidate, naming him, that he would be a traitor to God and to his country, and that he would deserve to have the brand of Cain upon him as a fugitive and a vagabond, as he described in the book of Genesis, "to whom the earth when tilled should not yield its fruits," whose iniquity, in his own language, was "greater than that it might deserve pardon." "If that language had been proved to my satisfaction to have been used" his Lordship said, "I do not mean to go to the length of saying because of that I would avoid this election; but I do mean to say that it would be a transaction and language which no man could attempt to justify."

Nothing more need be said to show what undue influence as defined by the statute really embraces. Then we have to consider whether there is a question of degree in the exercise of influence which is undue? This was conclusively settled by Mr. Justice Willes, in the Westbury Petition, at p. 22 of 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. His Lordship remarked: "It is said it is left in the discretion of the Judge to say how much undue influence shall or shall not affect the election. That is impossible. The 11th section of the Act, under which I sit" (31 & 32 Vict. c. 125) "is imperative. I have no discretion either one way or the other." And previously he noticed the argument that a single act of undue influence ought not to defeat the election, and replied to it that he found no such limitation in the 36th section. This, therefore, is perfectly plain.

DIGEST OF SHIPPING LAW CASES.

FROM 1860 TO 1864.

Edited by F. O. CRUMP, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

CHARTERERS (continued.)

4. Bill of lading freight and chartered freight—Lien.—The charterer of a vessel shipped goods under a bill of lading signed by the master, by which the goods were to be delivered to B. or his assigns, he or they paying freight for the goods as usual. B. was the charterer's agent, and the charterer was indebted to him at the time of shipment for advances. The bill of lading was handed by the charterer to B. in order that he might apply the proceeds of the goods in reduction of the debt. B. took the bill of lading with notice of the charter-party and its terms: and it was held, that as he was the agent of the charterer, with notice of the charter-party, he was not entitled to the goods without payment of the charter freight; and that the shipowner had a lien on the goods for the charter freight directly they were put on board. (Kern v. Deslandes, C. B. May 3, 4, and 6, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 156; 5 L. T. Rep. N. S. 249; 8 Jur. N. S. 194; 30 L. J. 297; 10 C. B., N. S., 265.)

5. Liability for freight—Damages—Charterer refusing to reship goods unladen to enable ship to cross a bar.—Charterer held not liable for lump sum of freight specified in charter-party, nor in damages for refusal to reship entire cargo inside the bar when the vessel had sailed, but was unable to cross the bar from insufficiency of water. The master took out a portion of the cargo to get the ship afloat after grounding, and placed his vessel again alongside the jetty, offering to ship as much cargo as would allow the vessel to pass the bar, and to take in the remainder by means of lighters outside the bar; to which the charterer would not accede. Construction of clause, "or so near thereto as she may safely get." (The General Steam Navigation Company v. Slipper, C. B., Jan. 20, 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 180; 5 L. T. Rep. N. S. 641; 6 Jur. N. S. 821; 31 L. J. 185, C. P.; 11 C. B., N. S., 493.)

6. Shipowners' liability to charterer's agent—Expenses of unloading and reloading cargo—Improper stowage—Stevedore employed by charterer at ship's expense.—By the terms of a charter the cargo was to be brought alongside at merchant's expense, and a stevedore recommended by the charterers was employed at the ship's expense at the usual charge. Owing to the fault of the stevedore expense in unloading and loading cargo was incurred, which the co-charterer's agent, the consignee, paid, and in an action for the freight pleaded as payment. The captain had signed the account in order to get his ship free. It was held that this settlement could not be pleaded as payment, and that the expenses were ship's expenses for which the owners were properly liable: (Roberts v. Shaw, Q. B. May 23, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 351; 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 634; 10 Jur. N. S. 147; 32 L. J. 308; 4 B. & S. 45.)

7. Charterer not shipping broken stowage—Moorson v. Page—Charterer held liable in damages for not shipping so much broken stowage as would make up a complete cargo according to stipulation in charter-party. Moorson v. Page, 4 Camp. 103, distinguished. Goods shipped as broken stowage "to pay freight as customary." (Cole v. Meek, C. B. Jan. 14, 1864; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 415.)

CLASSIFICATION OF SHIP IN LLOYD'S REGISTER.

Charter-party—Description of ship—Warranty as to class—Shipowner's liability for higher rate of premium of insurance paid by shippers.—Charter-party entered into between shipowners' agent at New York and a merchant there, British subjects, describing the ship as a "British A 1." Held, on the authority of Behn v. Burness, 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 207, that this was a warranty that the ship was classed A 1 in Lloyd's register. Owners liable for higher rate of premium which shippers had to pay in consequence of ship having run off class. Fraud not alleged. Agent's authority under power of attorney: (Routh v. McMillan, C. E. Nov. 3, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 402; 33 L. J. 38; 10 Jur. N. S. 158; 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 541; 2 H. & C. 750.)

I. ANCHOR (VESSELS AT).

(See also No. 49.)

1. Damage by ship in motion to ship at anchor—Burden of proof—Pilot.—A ship, through neglect of pilot on board, having been in collision, was drifting up a river when she came into collision with a ship at anchor. It was held that the burden of proof lay on the former ship to prove that the pilot was compulsorily taken on board and was solely to blame. (Bennett v. Moita, 5 Moo. P. C. C. 4, not followed: (The Annapolis, A. C. Nov. 15, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 155.)

II. BAIL.

(See No. 19.)

1a. Security—Retrospective operation of sect. 34 of Admiralty Court Act 1861.—Security to answer judgment in a cross action in personam instituted by an owner resident in this country, was decreed for, where the plaintiff in the first action in rem had obtained bail to answer judgment in his case: (The Cameo, A. C. Feb. 11, 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 191.)

1b. Damage—Security for costs by plaintiffs—Mistaken identity.—Where in a cause of damage in which the vessel of the defendants had been arrested, it appeared upon affidavits that the plaintiffs were mistaken as to the identity of the vessel proceeded against, and the defendants offered to disclose the wrongdoer, the court refused an application to extend the security to be given by the plaintiffs to meet the costs if unsuccessful, so as to cover the damages caused by the wrongful arrest: (The Peri, A. C., Nov. 11, 1862; 32 L. J. 46, Adm.; 8 Jur. N. S. 1230.)

III. CARGO.

2. Both ships in fault—Remedy by owners of cargo—Liability of shipowner—Division of damages.—The 298th section of Merchant Shipping Act does not preclude the cargo from recovering where the provisions of the Act have not been obeyed. Proprietors of cargo not being owners of the ship held, in accordance with numerous decisions cited by the court, to be entitled to recover only from the other ship in fault one-half of the loss, they having their remedy for the other half against the owner of the ship in which the cargo was loaded. The Court of Admiralty implicitly follows the decisions of the House of Lords and Privy Council, and in construing statutes follows a series of cases adjudged at common law. [N.B. This is the first case in which the liability of the shipowner was mooted. The underwriters on ship or cargo always paid and pay damage or loss by collision, whether caused by negligence or not.] (The Milan, A. C., Dec. 3 and 17, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 185; 5 L. T. Rep. N. S. 590; 31 L. J. 105.)

IV. Costs.

3. Costs of reference to registrar and merchants—One-third of claim disallowed.—More than one-third of the amount claimed for loss of ship, freight, and cargo, and proportion of salvage expenses consequent on collision, having been disallowed by the registrar and merchants, a motion to condemn plaintiffs in the costs of reference was rejected, the claim of the plaintiffs having involved the investigation of salvage expenses to a great amount incurred in consequence of the collision: (The Berbee, A. C., July 7, 1857; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 203.)

4. Reference to registrar and merchants—One fourth disallowed.—Where more than one fourth of the plaintiff's claim was disallowed, and the judgment was affirmed by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, the costs of the reference were not decreed in his favour: (The Peerless, A. C. April 17, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 206.)

5. Exemption of the Crown from costs—Liability of co-plaintiff.—The Court of Admiralty has no power to enforce a decree against the Crown, and therefore is not justified in condemning the Crown in costs. In a collision suit at the instance of Her Majesty in her office of Admiralty, and of the commander and crew of a Queen's ship, where the claim was pronounced against the officer and crew were held liable in costs, it being perfectly clear to the court that the Lords of the Admiralty would indemnify the captain and crew. Application of provisions of 18 & 19 Vict. c. 90 in suits in which the Attorney-General or Lord Advocate is a party. Cases, &c. cited: The Lord Advocate v. Douglas, 9 Cl. & Fin. 173; Act 33 Hen. 8, c. 39, s. 54; Kane v. Reynolds, 4 De G. M. & G. 565; Reg. v. Beadle, 7 Ell. & Bl. 492; 3 Jur. N. S. 865; 26 L. J. 111, M. C.; Dyke v. Barton, 10 Moo. 460; (The Leda, A. C. Dec. 9, 1862 and Jan. 20, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 298; 7 L. T. Rep. N. S. 864; 9 Jur. N. S. 208; 32 L. J. 58.)

6. Inevitable accident—Negligence.—It is the practice of the Admiralty Court, when a collision suit is dismissed on the ground that the collision arose from inevitable accident, not to condemn the plaintiff in costs. But there may be exceptional cases: (see The Itinerant, 2 Wm. Rob. 244; and The Ebeneser, 7 Jur. 1118.) Plaintiff condemned in costs where there was a strong probability that the collision was occasioned by stormy weather, and not through negligence, and therefore that he might have ascertained the cause of the accident: (The London, A. C. June 2, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 396; 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 348; 9 Jur. N. S. 1390.)

JUDICIAL STATISTICS, 1868. COURT OF CHANCERY.

The returns for the year ending Nov. 1, 1868, furnished by the different officers of the High Court of Chancery, show the proceedings of the different branches of the court during the year, in the same form and with the same details as the returns for preceding years.

REGISTRARS' RETURN.—The return of proceedings in the office of the registrars for the 1st. Nov. 1868 shows the proceedings waiting a hearing at the commencement of the year, those set down during the year, those heard during the year, those otherwise disposed of, and those awaiting a hearing at the end of the year, the business in each of the three Appellate Courts and in each of the four original courts being distinguished.

The following abstract shows the total number of the proceedings under each heading, for disposal, and disposed of, with the remanets, for the year 1868.

Nature of Proceedings.	For Hearing at the Commencement of the Year.	Set down during the Year.	Heard during the Year.	Otherwise disposed of.	Remanets at the end of the Year.

Appeals from County Palatine of Lancaster	—	3	3	—	—
Appeals from Vice-Warden of Stannaries	—	—	—	—	—
Trials with a Jury	—	1	—	—	1
Trials without a Jury	2	—	1	—	1
Total	581	2345	2163	210	553

The number of matters set down for hearing in the year 1867-8 shows an increase of 18 above the number in the preceding year; the number in 1866-7 having exceeded the number in 1865-6 by 18, and the number in 1865-6 having exceeded the number in 1864-5 by 128. As compared with the number in 1858-9, the number in 1867-8 shows an increase of 119. The total number for hearing in 1867-8 was greater by 40 than the number in 1866-7, and greater than the number in 1858-9 by 318. The number heard in 1867-8 was greater by 64 than the number in 1866-7, and by 140 than the number in 1858-9. The number otherwise disposed of exceeded by 4 the number in 1866-7, and by 65 the number in 1858-9, while the remanets at the end of the year were less for 1867-8 by 28 than for 1866-7, exceeding the number for 1858-9 by 113.

The proportion borne by the number of proceedings disposed of during the year to the number for disposal in 1867-8 was 81.1 per cent.; in the preceding year this proportion was 79.8 per cent.; in 1865-6 it was 77.5 per cent.; in 1858-9, 83.1 per cent. The registrars' return shows also the number of orders made in different matters as given in the following abstract for 1867-8.

Orders made on the hearing of appeal petitions	17
Orders made on the hearing of petitions under the Companies Act 1863	129
Orders made on the hearing of petitions under the Winding-up Acts	—
Orders made on the hearing of other petitions	2,148
Orders made on the hearing of special motions	1,553
Orders on summons drawn up by the registrars	7,973
Orders on motions or petitions of course	530
Certificates for sale or transfer or delivery of stock or other securities	2,953
Cases standing for judgment at the commencement of the year	4
Cases standing for judgment at the end of the year	5

The number of days each of the judges sat in court, as shown in the return, was, the Lord Chancellor 95 days; the Lord Chancellor and Lords Justices 2 days; the Lords Justices, 146; the Master of the Rolls, 151; the three Vice-Chancellors respectively, 165, 165, and 172. In 1866-7 the numbers were, the Lord Chancellor, 91; the Lord Chancellor and Lords Justices, 20; the Lords Justices 137; the Master of the Rolls 151; the three Vice-Chancellors, respectively, 169, 167, and 169. The total number of days was less by 8 in 1867-8 than the preceding year.

On filing his bill the plaintiff may select the branch of the court to which his suit is to be attached; but the Lord Chancellor has power to transfer any cause from the paper of any of the Vice-Chancellors to that of any other of the Vice-Chancellors; and the Lord Chancellor and the Master of the Rolls can transfer any cause to or from the paper of any of the Vice-Chancellors from or to that of the Master of the Rolls. The number of causes, &c., thus transferred from each judge to other branches of the court was 46 in 1867-8, against 66 in 1866-7. The judges to and from whom causes were transferred for 1867-8 are shown in the return.

There were 391 cases referred to the conveying counsel of the court, in the year 1867-8, against 363 in the preceding year; the average of the three years 1863-4-5 (this heading not having been given in the returns previously to 1863) being 342.

The number of orders drawn up in the registrar's office in 1867-8 was 13,654, and the amount of fees collected thereon by stamps was 15,390. 7s. In the preceding year the number of orders was 13,328, and the amount of fees 15,048. 14s. The number of orders in 1858-9 was 11,634; the amount of fees was 12,912. 8s.

CHIEF CLERKS' RETURNS.—The totals of the proceedings in the chambers of the Master of the Rolls, and of each of the three Vice-Chancellors, as shown in the returns furnished by the respective chief clerks, were as follows for the year ended 1st Nov. 1868.

The proceedings in each of the chambers separately for 1867-8 are given in the table.

Summons to originate Proceedings:—
For the administration of estates	362
Under the Charitable Trusts Acts	4
For appointment of guardians and maintenance of infants	153
For other purposes	264
Other Summonses	783
Orders made:—	26,191
Of the class drawn up by the registrars	8,981
Of the class drawn up in chambers	9,998
Orders brought into chambers for prosecution other than orders for winding-up companies	2,043
For winding-up companies	88
Number of advertisements issued	1,057
Debts claimed and adjudicated upon:—
Number of debts	11,584
Amount of debts proved	26,979,550
Accounts passed (other than Receivers' Accounts:—
Number of accounts	1,498
Receipts therein	211,998,668
Disbursements and allowances therein	211,322,372

Receivers' Accounts passed:—

Number of accounts	758
Receipts therein	26,731,417
Disbursements and allowances therein	25,154,227
Sales of Estates under orders of Court:—
Number of sales	750
Amount realised	23,336,730
Purchases of Estates under orders of Court:—
Number of purchases	137
Number of Contributories:—
Included in list of contributories	9,383
Excluded from lists of contributories	479
Orders for winding-up Companies:—
Amount of calls made	25,537,126
Amount of dividends ordered to be paid to creditors	22,962,137
Amount ordered to be refunded to contributories	223,513
Total amount of fees levied by stamps	215,335
Number of titles and other matters directed to be investigated by the conveying counsel	456
Number of certificates filed	2,572
Number of appointments (by summons, adjournment, or otherwise) disposed of	66,318
Number of orders under which accounts and inquiries were pending at date of return	3,465
Number of orders for winding-up companies then pending	438

The return made by the clerks of records and writs shows the number of suits instituted in the Court of Chancery, whether by bill or information, or by claim, or summons, or as special cases, as well as the subsequent proceedings on the part both of plaintiff and defendant, all such suits and proceedings being filed in the Office of Records and Writs. The return distinguishes the number of suits instituted in the court of the Master of the Rolls and in the courts of each of the three Vice-Chancellors. The total number of suits instituted, as shown in the return for the year commencing 2nd Nov. 1867, and ending 1st Nov. 1868, was as follows:

Suits instituted:—
Bills or informations filed { higher scale } { lower scale }	{ 2,038 } { 448 }
Claims filed under General Order of 1850..	—
Special cases filed under Act 13 & 14 Vict. c. 35	24
Administration summonses filed	300
Other originating summonses filed	48
	3,518

In the total number of suits instituted in 1867-8, it will be seen, there is a decrease of 332, or 9.0 per cent., as compared with the number for 1866-7. In 1866-7 and each of the two preceding years there was an increase, the increase for the three years together amounting to 684. The number for 1867-8 is consequently greater than the number for 1863-4 by 352.
